THE RESULT

Are You Running TRIANGLE PLAYS?

The richest man, the biggest store, the most successful merchant has from the dark ages been the one with sufficient foresight to pick out the leader in the manufacture of the articles sold over his counter, and to then tie up with this concern as its authorized representative, thereby cashing in on the value of the manufacturer's good will and trade-mark.

And this same rule applies to the business of exhibiting motion pictures. The most successful and prosperous theaters are the ones that tie up with the recognized leader in the production of photoplays—with the concern whose pictures have by their merit alone won a reputation for the highest quality.

This is the reason the number of Triangle theaters throughout the country has been constantly increasing. Seven months ago the exhibitor was not positive just how the public would receive Triangle productions. Now experience has proved not only that the public wants Triangle Plays, but that it is willing to pay real money to see them.

And so if you are an exhibitor and are not already running Triangle Plays, why don't you, too, make an effort to arrange for their presentation at your theater?

Prominent Exhibitor Starts Organization

SPECIAL TRAINS TO CHICAGO CONVENTION

ALFRED HAMBURGER, of the Hamburger Theatrical Enterprises, acknowledged to be one of the biggest motion picture showmen of the middle west, on June 20, at the Hotel Sherman, Chicago, in addressing a meeting of thirty of the representatives of all branches of the industry, declared that he had started a fight to form a representative organization in the industry, and of all branches of it.

"I am in this fight to win," said Mr. Hamburger, "and I will keep the fight up until I win or am put out of the business."

The meeting was called by Mr. Hamburger for the purpose of stimulating interest in a mass meeting of exhibitors at the Colonial Theater, Chicago, on June 28. Forty invitations were issued by Mr. Hamburger and thirty-seven representatives of the industry responded. That these representatives were truly representative is shown by the list of attendants, which included several exchange men, numerous showmen and Jack Miller of the Motion Picture Operators' Union. The exchange men were the representatives of the manufacturers, as well as the distributors.

Alfred Hamburger.

The mass meeting at the Colonial Theater is called for the purpose of discussing numerous phases of the industry, including the relations between manufacturer and showman, exchangeman and showman, operator and showman, and showman with showman. The license question is a topic for discussion and the censorship permit question will consume considerable time.

In the censorship permit question the showmen are prepared to take up the fight for the distributors and legally ascertain why several permits are not issued for the same film after the film has been reviewed by the Board of Censors.

While the meeting at the Colonial Hotel is for the purpose of discussing and taking action on some of the many perplexing problems surrounding showmen of the country it is very likely to resolve itself into a "booster" meeting of the coming convention and show of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America, which is to be held at Chicago July 10 to 18 inclusive.

The convention and show was the subject of considerable discussion during the meeting called by Mr. Hamburger. It developed that of the 581 motion picture houses open in Chicago proper at the present time 190 are members of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America. The question arose as to why more Chicago motion picture showmen were not members and Jack Miller of the Operators' Union answered it in a characteristic manner.

"They are not members," said Mr. Miller, "Because the proper methods of organization have not been used. Every one of them should be a member.

"Speaking for my organization I wish everyone were a member. If that condition prevailed we would have some central body with which to do business. We could meet once a year, adjust our difficulties and sail along smoothly for another year. As it is now, outside of the members of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America, we have to deal with each exhibitor as an individual. It takes time and it causes friction. With the League members we have no trouble. Any differences are adjusted amicably and without hard feeling."

This attitude on the part of Mr. Miller seemed to surprise several of the persons present who had not joined the League and they immediately announced their intention of joining.

Other persons who took part in the discussion looking toward the betterment of the industry as a whole were Manager Leonard, representing Fox, M. A. Choynski, William J. Sweeney, Samuel M. Frankland, James S. McQuade, N. S. Stronge, R. R. Levy, Fred W. Hartman, Manager Judell of Mutual, and several others.

Before adjourning after luncheon had been served by the management of Hotel Sherman, Chairman Hamburger appointed committees to call upon every motion picture exhibitor of the Middle West to urge upon the managers the necessity of attending the Colonial Theater meeting and taking part in the discussions which may be the forerunner of success or failure of the business as individuals.

The members of the committees appointed will prove to the exhibitors that their attendance at the Colonial Theater meeting is of far more importance than the receipts at the box office during the few hours necessary to be away from business during the course of the meeting.

The doors of the Colonial Theater will be opened at 10 o'clock in the morning and the first hour will be consumed in "getting acquainted." Committees will be present to see that every showman knows every other showman. At 11 o'clock the business meeting will start and it will continue until 1 o'clock, when all discussions will be declared closed. Committees then will be selected to continue the work.

S. M. Spedon, in charge of New York special train to convention.

Those who answered the invitation of Mr. Hamburger for the get-together meeting for the benefit of the entire industry were: H. Schoenstadt, R. O. Proctor, N. S. Stronge, C. J. Schaefer, J. A. Alcock, W. J. Sweeney, M. S. Johnson, Fred W. Hartmann, F. Bautholmae, E. D. Miller, H. L. Leiberthal, Chris Whelan, James S. McQuade, J. L. Friedman, J. Cooper, F. M. Brockell, W. H. Hollander, S. M. Frankland, B. N. Judell, George Henry, H. A. Spanuth, C. O. Bunn, George M. Laing, who acted as secretary to the meeting; W. D. Hildreth, Wal Johnstone, R. L. Jacoby, I. Von Ronkel, Martin J. Quigley, R. R. Levy, Maurice A. Choynski, L. H. Frank, F. J. Flaherty, Harry Leonhardt, J. E. O'Toole, W. M. Cohn and Adolph Powell.

On behalf of the F. I. L. M. club, President Friedman offered the active assistance of the entire organization to assist in making the Colonial Theater meeting the largest ever held in the industry.

While the movement started by Mr. Hamburger is apart from the convention and show of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America to be held in Chicago July 10 to 18, inclusive, it has the same ultimate aim—the betterment of the entire industry. And it now looks as though the success of the convention and show is absolutely assured.

It is known that there will be at least four special trains chartered to carry showmen from various sections of the country to Chicago. Manager Leonard of Fox reported that he is in receipt of a communication from Los Angeles saying that the Southern California showmen will charter a train; L. W. Brophy of Oklahoma, reports that the showmen of his section will journey to Chicago in their own train. The Minnesota delegation, under the leadership of Thomas Furniss of Duluth, will have a special and the showmen of the Atlantic states will travel de luxe.

The New York special will be in charge of Sam Spedon, publicity man for the Vitagraph Company. It will leave New York City at 1 p. m., on July 8, arriving at Albany, 4:25 p. m.; Schenectady, 4:57 p. m.; Utica, 6:47 p. m.; Syracuse, 8:15 p. m.; Rochester, 10:04 p. m.; Buffalo, 12:02 a. m., and Chicago, 11:50 a. m.

Stops will be made at all the cities mentioned where showmen will join the party, starting from New York. Working in conjunction with Mr. Spedon to make the special a two-section train are Sam H. Trigger and Lee S. Ochs of New York, the latter an announced candidate for the presidency of the League.

The Chicago contingent in charge of the show has made arrangements with Watterson R. Rothacker, of the Rothacker Film Manufacturing Company, to install a complete motion picture plant at the Coliseum, where the show is to be held. Everything will be done at this plant in plain sight of the visiting showmen. Pictures will be taken, developed and projected. The pictures taken one day will be projected on the following day in a special theater connected with the Rothacker exhibit. The visiting showmen will have an opportunity to see just how they look in action.

The numerous exhibits with their educational value will prove of inestimable value to all manufacturers and owners of motion picture theaters. Calls for space from all over the country are continuing.

It is a well known fact that more motion picture equipments were sold the week of the last Chicago Exposition, which was held at the La Salle Hotel in 1912, than in any three months of the year. The exposition already shows promise of becoming a much greater success than the previous ones, and many new novelties have already been inaugurated.

Directors, camera men and prominent photoplayers from all leading companies will take part in the show. The latter include Charley Chaplin, Francis X. Bushman and Beverly Bayne.

The exhibitors are taking more interest in the exposition and convention than heretofore, as they have found it is practically necessary to cast aside all business cares for one week and join in the universal gathering to exchange views, settle petty differences and extend connections of previous years, some of which were heretofore entered into by correspondence only.

It is also estimated that fully 150,000 visitors will pass through the gates of the Coliseum during the exposition week.

New Firm in Minneapolis

The success enjoyed by William A. Lochren in releasing the Northwest Weekly has lead to the formation of the Lochren Film Corporation with a million dollar capital stock. William A. Lochren is president, Edward F. Seavolt, vice-president, W. Peyton Mason, treasurer, and Stanley B. Houck, secretary. The stockholders are largely representatives of eastern film manufacturing concerns. The company is to cover every department of the motion picture business.

In addition to a pictorial news service, industrial and commercial work will be done, and a studio, properly equipped for producing photo plays, will be maintained.

The entire seventh floor of the Film Exchange building has been leased and in addition to the motion picture plant the company announces that through negotiations conducted between the Lochren Film Corporation and the Unity Sales Corporation it has purchased the entire northwest territory for "The Yellow Menace," a sixteen-episode serial, starring Edwin Stevens, and featuring Margaret Gale and Florence Malone. The states covered by the Lochren Film Corporation's franchise include Minnesota, North and South Dakota, two-thirds of Wisconsin and the entire state of Iowa.

Reel Fellows Hold Housewarming

A big housewarming and ladies' night was held by the Reel Fellows' Club of Chicago at its new quarters in the Hotel Morrison on the evening of June 15. The spirit of the event seemed to promise well for enlarged activities for the organization. A number of impromptu keynote speeches were made, each indicating the vitality of the club and the field of usefulness which lies before it. Alfred Hamburger, the prominent Chicago exhibitor controlling some fifteen houses, emphasized the desire of the club to encourage the attendance and membership of exhibitors, and steps are to be taken to interest more of the custodians of the screens.

Following the banquet R. R. Nehls of the American Film Company, president of the club, presided over the extemporaneous program. The speakers and entertainers were as follows: Chairman Nehls; Secretary M. G. Watkins, manager of the American Standard Motion Picture Corporation; the "States Four" quartette; H. C. Miller, the Madison street exhibitor; Ed. Delaney; William J. Sweeney, treasurer of the club and general chairman of the coming Chicago national convention; W. R. Rothacker, of the Rothacker Film Manufacturing company; Mildred Fitzpatrick, at the piano; W. K. Hollander, photoplay critic for the Chicago Daily News; Jack Cunningham (song); Frank C. Reighter, "poet laureate"; the "States Four" quartette; Attorney Leopold Saltier; Alfred Hamburger. Then followed the snappy Boston Oyster House cabaret show elevated to the club rooms for the occasion. An interval of dancing closed the evening. Among the guests were the following:

Frank C. Reighter, Press Writers' Club; Mildred Fitzpatrick, Boston theater; H. C. Miller, Alcazar, Rose and Boston theaters; Fred Z. Schaefer, Band Box theater; Edgar Mordue, E. C. Jenson, Lyman L. Ballard, Geo. T. Landis, World Film Corporation; Albert L. Kahn, Lee Mitchell, F. R. Bromley, Walter S. Altland, F. J. Flaherty and wife, C. E. The present officers of the Reel Fellows' Club, recently elected, are:

President, R. R. Nehls, American Film Company; vice-presidents, F. J. Flaherty, Universal exchange, and R. C. Travers, Essanay; treasurer, William J. Sweeney, vice-president Exhibitors' League; secretary, M. G. Watkins, manager American Standard; assistant secretary, Freeman Owens, photographic department, Essanay.

On June 24, Saturday, the club will take a motor trip to Sceener Lake, Indiana, to enjoy a half-day outing and a chicken dinner in the country.

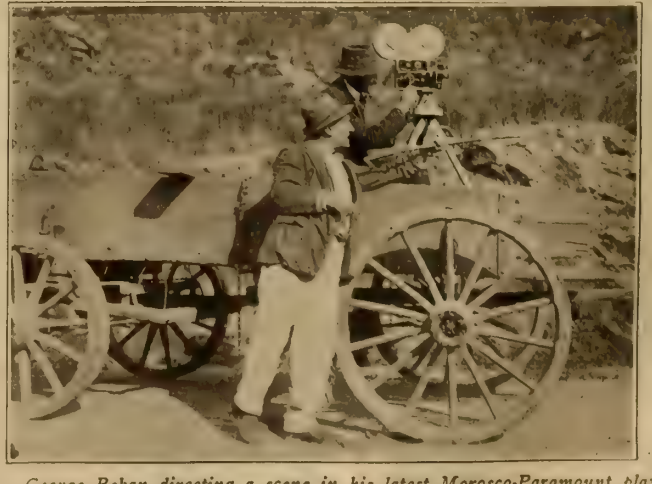
Freuler Favors New Organization

President John R. Freuler of the Mutual Film Corporation is distinctly in favor of an organization or association of the motion picture interests, including every ramification of the business from the manufacturer to the exhibitor.

Discussing the movement which began with the recent meeting of motion picture men at Delmonico's in New York, reported in the June 24 issue of MOTOGRAPHY, Mr. Freuler remarked:

That such an association is vitally necessary to the continued success and prosperity of the industry is self-evident. Never has the history of American business seen so great an industry as the motion picture development with so little organization, so little co-operation of the interests which should be allied in a common cause.

There are certain conditions and problems which are identical and equally important to manufacturer, distributor and exhibitor. There is no reason whatever save inefficiency within ourselves which can keep us from working on the common problems for the common good. We have only to evolve a way in which to give adequate and equitable shares in representation and responsibility to each branch of the business.



The exhibitor should recognize the bigness of his interest in this movement. He should recognize, too, his important position as the man who controls the screen, which is the most powerful medium of addressing the public that the arts of expression have ever devised. The motion picture is made for motion picture theater and its patrons. Every problem of the business is in a very definite sense an exhibitor's problem.

Four Stars in July Lasky's

Photoplays admirably suited for broad exploitation and effective presentation by exhibitors in the summer months are announced for release in July by the Jesse L. Lasky Feature Play Company.

The three productions will be released through Paramount Pictures Corporation on the first three Mondays of the month, the schedule being: Blanche Sweet in "The Dupe" on July 3; Wallace Reid and Cleo Ridgely in "The Selfish Woman" on July 10; and Mae Murray in "The Dream Girl" on July 17.

"The Crooked Road," featuring Henry King, is the Knickerbocker Star three-reel release of July 14.

George Beban directing a scene in his latest Morosco-Paramount play, "Pasquale," which has just been released. Beban, notable for his work in "The Alien," is among the screen's kings of convincing characterizations.

Rembusch Announces Platform

CANDIDATE FOR M. P. E. L. PRESIDENCY DISCOURAGES OPENING OF MORE THEATERS

FRANK J. REMBUSCH of Shelbyville, Indiana, leading candidate for the presidency of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America at the election to take place during the national convention and show to be held at Chicago July 10 to 18 inclusive, has made a careful analysis of the motion picture business as it is to-day and in his formal platform lays stress on harmonizing every branch of the business.

"We have been fighting and battling for years and got nowhere," Mr. Rembusch says in his formal platform. "Let's try a little sense and peace."

In placing before the members of the Motion Pictures Exhibitors' League of America a thoughtfully prepared platform Mr. Rembusch gives a concise history of the motion picture business from its inception. One of his conclusions is that the money to be made in the business should go to the men in the business to-day.

"I believe we should discourage the opening up of any more picture houses," Mr. Rembusch says, "and I have in mind a definite plan by which it can be done."

"If Mr. Rembusch can accomplish this," said one widely known motion picture showman, "he will have solved one of the greatest difficulties of the business. But it only can be done with the co-operation of the manufacturing and distributing companies and if Mr. Rembusch can bring about that co-operation he is the only man in the country to head the league."

In an interview with a representative of MOTOGRAPHY prior to making public his platform, Mr. Rembusch said:

"Whenever a new business is born into the world it must, as a matter of course, pass through various stages of trial and experiment before it finds its true level and natural being.

There are three general stages or periods through which a new business must pass before it finds its regular level. The evolution that takes place from one period to the other is very gradual but nevertheless very certain. The time required in this evolution differs in various lines of business but generally speaking, from fifteen to twenty years' time is required for a business to develop from the experimental embryo state to a solid and matured standard.

"The three periods through which a new business must pass before it becomes a staple business and has universally recognized and definite fixed standards are as follows:

"First—Period of beginning and experiment.

"Second—Period of expansion and profit.

"Third — Period of over-reaching, loss, overproduction and adjustment.

"After these periods are passed the business will have the usual ebb and flow that is only natural but the day of great profit or great loss is over for the reason that those who are identified with the new business are able to know definitely from past experiences just what a business will and will not do.

"The motion picture business is following the history of all other new industries. It has been changing constantly. We have passed through two periods in the natural course of events, and we are now in the third, which is always a period of over-reaching, over-production, which precipitates loss and compels adjustment.

"We are today all naturally anxious for the motion picture business to settle down to a staple basis and we have it in our hands to hasten the day when this business will be a regular, commercial proposition and not a game of chance such as at present.

"Let us briefly analyze the situation and see what the remedy shall be. By the past we may well judge the future.

"The first showing of motion pictures as a means of livelihood was the usual experiment. The general opinion of the public was that motion pictures were a new craze, a novelty that would last a few months and then pass into oblivion. We who went into the business were of the same opinion—we thought it would have only a short life and set our stakes accordingly. Our general attitude was to get every cent we could while

The Rembusch Platform

WE must determine what the people will spend per one thousand inhabitants for motion picture recreation.

We must get away from the idea of so many shows in a town or so much seating capacity. Our figures must be based on investment and overhead expense, whether it is a big show or small.

We must determine what percent of the gross box office receipts we can afford to pay for our film service every week.

We must determine what percent we can charge for depreciation and natural hazards.

We must, above all, determine how we can hold and increase the appetite of the people for pictures because I believe we are losing ground on account of the universally long programs. There should be shows at five cents; shows at ten cents; shows at twenty-five cents, and so on, and the program should be in keeping with the price.

In a general way I believe those who are in the motion picture business at the present time are entitled to remain in the business. They can take good care of it and no new motion picture theaters or producers are needed. I believe the time has come when we must take counsel with each other, determine on facts and figures, and work for a specific standard in everything.

I believe we should discourage the opening up of any more picture houses and I have in mind a definite plan by which it can be done. I believe that we should have the utmost harmony in the attitude of the various organizations toward each other. I would even compel harmony if it were possible. We have been fighting and battling for years and got nowhere. Let's try a little sense and peace.

These are the principles upon which I would make the race for National President of the Exhibitors' League. I am not in favor of anything destructive but everything constructive. I am in favor of putting this business on a basis where everybody connected with the business will make a good living, some profit, so that we can have something laid aside for our declining years and meet our obligations as we go.

F. J. REMBUSCH

'the getting was good.' In a general way the investment was small—hardly ever over from three to five hundred dollars.

"During this period there were quite a few failures attributed to various causes but probably came because the public had not yet formed a habit or appetite for seeing pictures.

"We should always remember that when everything is said and done, on the last analysis, 'the people rule.'

"Our business was limited because we lacked confidence in its stability and future. Expert management, fine arts in motion picture presentation, were unknown. We showed one reel of film, turned our crowd every fifteen minutes, in show rooms that would be known now as a hole in the wall. The whole fabric of the business was so loosely woven and haphazard that it was considered very undesirable and risky as a business proposition.

"Months went into years and the dear people still kept coming to the theaters and the second period, the period of expansion and profit, gradually came into being. Theaters were crowded daily, the demand for pictures grew until it was greater than the supply, the margin of profits became great and the investment remained comparatively small, film service was cheap, the natural appetite people have for recreation and entertainment was kept sharpened because the program was short, therefore the show could never become tiresome.

"The average investment was about one thousand dollars for a first class show at that time. We had no expensive music, no great pipe organs and high salaried orchestras; no high rents or costly equipment. A lot of people who had very often poor business ability became wealthy almost over night. People began to lose their heads. The period of expansion was here. Theater after theater sprang up with more and more seating capacity. The brightest spots in every city were the motion picture theaters. People began to wonder and then seeing others making money many decided to also go into the business.

"So, from one extreme where folks had no faith in a business, everybody got the wild idea that there was no limit to the profits, possibilities or natural demand of the business, and so more and more exhibitors came into the business. Investments went from hundreds to thousands and millions without the least regard to any specific or definite amount that could be invested profitably. As a naural course we kept expanding and reaching out until the field of possibilities was covered and over-reached.

"Film producers had the same experience. Fortunes were made in a few years and so film producers increased by the hundreds. Salaries of performers were increased by leaps and bounds because the film manufacturers began to bid until the salaries of performers were all out of reason and proportion.

"There seems to be absolutely no way in this period of a new business to bring reason or common sense into play. The business has to be overdone and a lot of people lose money which generally pounds sense into the minds of those identified through the sad experience of disaster and loss.

"Our business is unfortunate in one thing, that is on account of the ease with which anyone can break into the producing or exhibiting business, therefore it is only natural that the crest of profit and expansion would be reached quickly and this period of trial and over-reaching be difficult to overcome.

"We are now in the third period of over-production and loss and the question is, what shall we do about it? Our money is up and we cannot quit. There is only one solution to the problem. It is the same solution that every new business has had to face some time, namely, all the various elements of the business must work together and create a definite standard for the future. It is going to come because it always does for the reason that misery likes company. An exhibitor said to me the other day, 'It isn't possible to standardize this business.' But I say that it is just as possible to standardize this as anything else. We must standardize and commercialize; We must have a basis upon which we will figure what we can and cannot do; and if this basis is not correct at first it is better to have some basis than no basis at all.

Colors Fly at Rialto

Military methods as applied to the operation of the Rialto Theater in New York are responsible for a ceremony that arouses the curiosity of thousands in Longacre Square nightly when "retreat" is sounded and the colors lowered. Three flags fly from the roof of the theater, the American flag at the peak, the Rialto ensign at the right and the city ensign at the left. At "retreat" a bugler sounds three ruffles, the colors are lowered and the Rialto flag run up to the peak. The entire ceremonial is in accordance with naval regulations and official "sundown" time is furnished by the navy yard daily. The latter is one minute later each day at this season of the year.

V. L. S. E. Theater Opened in Chicago

Alfred Hamberger, one of the most prominent exhibitors in Chicago, has formally opened the V. L. S. E. Theater. This was formerly the Ziegfeld, situated in one of the best locations in the city, at 624 Michigan boulevard, and is also one of the largest picture theaters in the city.

The big Essanay seven-part feature, "Sherlock Holmes," with William Gillette in the title role, is the first picture to be run in the newly christened house.

German Advertising Scheme

The Messter Film Company of Berlin has adopted a new method of popularizing its films. This firm issues a booklet giving a well written story of a play, using fine paper and excellent half-tone illustrations. These are sold at the theater box offices for about 2 cents a copy. The good results of this policy became evident recently when one of the films so advertised was retained for over a week instead of the usual four days, and the house was crowded every night.

Active work on the Selig feature production, "The Prince Chap," began when on Thursday, June 8, Director Marshal Neilan escorted Bessie Eyton, Cecil Holland, Leo Pierson and other Selig players to New York city. Special scenes for "The Prince Chap" will be filmed in Gotham.

The Universal Company states that it covers 35 miles of film all over with drama every week. Nine million feet of film were used in the Universal laboratories last year.

H. E. Friedman, assistant manager of the Chicago Pathe exchange, staged a trade showing of "A Matrimonial Martyr" and a Goldberg cartoon for the benefit of the exhibitors of Peoria last week.

What Theater Men Are Doing

AN OPEN FORUM

This is a department of, by and for exhibitors. We want YOU represented here. Other managers and proprietors of picture theaters want to hear YOUR experiences, your opinions and your advice. Write to this department telling us your story, how you started, how you grew and all about your theater and how you manage it. Mention your advertising methods and your lobby displays. If possible send in photographs of yourself and your house. Address, The Forum, MOTOGRAPHY, Chicago.

A Brooklyn Sixteen Hundred Seater

Triangle Theater, Brooklyn, N. Y.

THE accompanying photograph is of the Triangle leader in Brooklyn, N. Y. It has in its flock some of the most progressive and successful theaters in this country. Nor is it a laggard in the matter of success. It opened last September and maintained a scale of prices ranging from twenty-five cents to two dollars until last week when the summer charge of twenty-five and fifty cents became effective.

William H. Kemble.

When it is taken into consideration that the Triangle Theater is within twenty-five minutes' ride of Times Square, the greatest theater district in the world, and is really competing with its show-houses, this high scale of prices seems like a piece of pure nerve, but William H. Kemble said the theater would make good and followed his statement with proof.

Mr. Kemble, although not very old in years, is as old as the oldest showman in experience. It has taught him many things, as well as making him the moving spirit in three or four large concerns. His principal lesson from the school of hard knocks is to be sure of his decisions and then to back them to the limit. When Mr. Kemble paid an enormous amount for the privilege of showing "The Birth of a Nation" at the Brighton Beach Music Hall for the few summer months, people told him he was sure to lose. His answer was a comprehensive advertising campaign, good management and big profits.

This spirit of determination coupled with a sincere desire to be courteous and fair to everyone is seen and felt in every part of the Triangle Theater. It runs only Triangle pictures, and has just two performances a day; matinee and evening. Beside the theater is a well-appointed parking place for autos. This is not a vacant lot, but an enclosed place, well lighted, with a fountain in the center and having a man in constant attendance.

Every Tuesday night since its opening the Triangle Theater has been taken over by somebody for a benefit performance. This plan proved of priceless advertising value to the theater as well as assuring a certain margin of profit on a night which is problematical as to receipts at the best. The management found no trouble in getting societies, clubs and charitable organizations interested. The entire house was turned over to them for a certain amount. They priced the tickets to suit themselves, in some cases doubling their ordinary cost.

The money from tickets sold at the box office on these nights was turned over to the temporary proprietors. The Triangle Theater seats 1,600 people. One organization cleared $4,000 on a benefit performance, and another $3,500. E. J. O'Donnell, press representative of the Wm. H. Kemble Theaters Corporation, co-operated with the societies in the laying out of a special souvenir program. This differed from the regular program only in having a special cover and a four-page insert devoted to the purpose of the society, a resumé of its activities, and the personnel of its officers, candy and program girls, etc.

Nothing but satisfaction and profit resulted from these benefit performances. The societies made money; so did the theater management, and both received free newspaper publicity and advertising which carried endorsements they could not have purchased at any price. The society sections of the daily papers carried two and three-column stories of these affairs, listing the names of those who were present or who took active part, and very often printing pictures of the young women prominent in the society.

Constructive work like this cannot fail to meet with success. Many theaters need just such an introduction to its neighborhood as is afforded by this benefit performance plan. It acts like a tonic. If your theater needs one, try it.

A New Co-operative Scheme

By R. R. VOORHEES.

An exhibitor in Boston recently hit upon a novel plan to boost the attendance at his theater and at the same time made it an advertising proposition for the merchants in his vicinity. His assistant operator was an amateur photographer and this fact gave him the inspiration for the idea.

The proprietor of the theater visited one of the merchants in the neighborhood, a dry goods dealer, and offered to take a picture of his store showing the crowd in front of it some morning and exhibit it at his house for a week if he would offer as a prize $1.00 in merchandise to the person whose face was enclosed in a circle.

This the merchant agreed to do and so one clear morning the assistant operator took a picture in front of the store and made a lantern slide from the negative. Then one of the faces that showed plainly was enclosed in a circle and the slide was ready to be shown. A sign was made headed:

SEE YOURSELF ON THE SCREEN

Then followed the offer of $1.00 in merchandise to the person whose face was inclosed in a circle.

The slide was shown several times each afternoon and evening and had the desired result of getting the people's attention. After three days the right person showed up and received her $1.00 in trade at the merchant's store.

So well did the plan work that the manager began to see other merchants in the vicinity and was successful in getting someone for every week. The cost to the exhibitor was small and the result was great. It advertised his house and made the merchants his friends because they found that the plan brought them business and was a good investment.

Good Equipment and Honesty

By William Keller,

Manager, Keller's Theater, Bridgeville, Delaware.

I attribute my success in the motion picture business to the fact that I built a good, big, comfortable theater with plenty of ventilation for hot weather, and with plenty of heating facilities in cold weather.

The main floor is not an upstairs proposition but is the ground floor with plenty of windows all around so that in case of a panic the crowd can hop out of the windows if in a hurry. My main floor seats 500, then I have a gallery seating 300. I use the best apparatus obtainable for projecting pictures, use a large mirror screen and a Simplex machine. My stage is equipped with wings, drop curtain and all necessary scenery for playing road shows. Good equipment and honesty is my motto. I treat everyone fair and square.

A Veteran Exhibitor

By C. W. Wonderly,

Manager, Rourke and Wonderly Theaters, La Junta, Colorado.

After having read a lot of yellow back novels and literature of that sort I thought I must come to Colorado to kill buffalo, and so left Ohio in 1877. As the buffalo are all gone and I am still here, I must have accomplished something. After that I broke into the music business as a musician. There were three stages of the music proposition with me, namely, first because I liked it; second, because I thought there would probably be a little money in it; third, accommodation. All these seemed to fail so I discarded playing only for my own amusement.

Then I got into the show business. That was ten years ago and the five cent shows were popular. I must say that I made more money then than I have before or since, running three reels per week and a lot of gaudy song slides and a player piano in a room 25 by 60 feet.

Now I am running fifty-seven reels per week and high grade stuff, too, with an orchestra of six people. I have two theaters, one a $45,000 proposition and a seating capacity of 800, a beautiful theater called the "Rourke." The other, "The Wonderly Theater," seating 500; playing road shows at the "Rourke," pictures and vaudeville at times; strictly pictures at the "Wonderly," and am perfectly satisfied with the business.

Electrical Equipment for Michigan Theater

Exceptionally rapid work was recently completed in the electrical installation for the Butler theater at Ishpeming, Mich. This theater was designed to be completed by a certain day and the entire construction of the building and its equipment was finished in 59 days according to schedule.

This theater was built for the Ispheming Theater Company and is a motion picture house seating about 500 people. The building is 105 by 35 feet in outside dimensions and is devoted exclusively to the theater. Above the rear portion of the auditorium is a balcony.

The complete electrical work of wiring the entire theater and installing all of the electrical equipment for lighting, ventilation and picture projection was done by two men, an electrician and a helper. It was completed in 29 working days. The wiring is entirely in conduit throughout. Over the auditorium are 10 semi-indirect fixtures, each including four lamps. Three of these are 100-watt type "C" Mazda lamps for the bright illumination used at the beginning and the close of each performance; there is also one 40-watt tungsten lamp for providing the dim light which is maintained during the display of pictures. These fixtures are arranged to be lowered simultaneously by means of a single windlass with wire cables.

At the outside of the exits are lights installed in Newgard vaporproof receptacles. In the upper portion of the theater front are two 600-watt type "C" lamps. Along the cornice are 18 lamps to aid in outline lighting. There are also numerous lamps about the main entrance canopy, besides special fixtures in the office and lobby. On columns along the side of the auditorium are numerous wall outlets for use in connection with oscillating fans.

The operating booth is in the rear of the balcony and has a large storeroom adjoining each side. It is entirely of fireproof construction. The two projecting machines are now operated from two Fort Wayne single-phase Compensarcs. A set of double-pole double-throw switches has been installed to enable the projecting machines to be thrown over to a direct-current supply from a type 14-T Wagner white-light three-phase rotary converter, which will be installed in the near future.

The electrical work was installed by the Milwaukee branch of Henry Newgard & Company.

From Honolulu comes word of the activities of Helen Holmes, J. P. McGowan and the Signal Film Company which went to the islands to film exteriors for the coming feature, "The Diamond Runners." The players worked on scenes on their way over, while they were in Honolulu and during a hard trip into the interior of the island. It is said new and striking scenery will be shown to the public for the first time as a result of the expedition.

First Aid to Theater Men

BY S. L. ROTHAPFEL

I AM very glad to have an opportunity to publish the opinion of S. I. Levin, manager of the Jones, Linick and Schaefer chain of theaters in Chicago, on this subject of the value of the reviews published in the trade journals, as I know all theater managers will be interested in his viewpoint.

Until this discussion of the reviews was taken up in Motography I did not pay a very great deal of attention to them because as manager of city theaters which run set programs I could not use them as so many exhibitors do as a guide to planning their program. My impression always had been that they were very favorable to all the pictures—in fact too favorable. I have been interested in analyzing this question from the side of the exhibitor and the critics and have come to the conclusion that the reviewer occupies a very difficult position—he is trying to help all the exhibitors and no two want the same thing or have the same ideas. The only proper thing for him to do is to be neutral. The fairest way is to err on the side of commendation rather than on the side of condemnation.

The reviewer must necessarily guard himself in writing of a film because he is naturally more critical than an audience or an exhibitor would be. He is trained to criticize, he is looking for defects. The people come to a theater to be amused not to find fault, and the reviewer is entirely right in not giving too outspoken an animadversion because he probably has seen many faults which the audience and the theater man would never notice.

The exhibitor should not always expect arbitrary condemnation, for the reviewer must be tactful in his remarks and his statement that "the film is not up to the standard of the company" or "the story is mediocre" ought to be warning enough to the manager to be careful about booking it. The only time a reviewer is justified in utterly condemning a play is when it really is very poor and not worthy of presentation, or when because of its sordidness it is unfit to be shown to the public.

I would, however, like to see a little more frankness in calling attention to the poor parts of the film—although not condemning them. For example if the photography is poor, or if the acting is not good or the story is mediocre and only carried along by the good acting of the players I believe this knowledge would aid the manager in knowing whether the film would please his particular patrons.

The main difficulty with the reviews is that they are only one person's opinion. The reviewer sees the film at a private showing in a projection room with only other press representatives present. If after he has seen the film there he could view it again at a theater and study the audience and the impression it was making on them, not staying in one seat all the time but changing around sometimes in the center of the house, again in the back and then going into the balcony—listening to all the comments made and watching the people, he would be better qualified to give not simply one man's opinion but the way in which an audience would receive the film.

For the manager of a big house or chain of houses the reviews are not very important for he usually runs a set program, but for the smaller exhibitor in the small town they are invaluable and he can be guided by them entirely. If the reviewer says a picture is good he may be sure that it is and that his patrons will also consider it so.

I rather agree with the San Francisco manager that the only way to publish reviews that do state arbitrarily and in plain language just what the reviewer thinks could only be written under a nom de guerre for everyone in the film industry seems to be going around with a chip on their shoulder, the manufacturer, the exchangeman, the exhibitor, are all too quick to feel that they are not being treated right and the other fellow is not doing what he should.

As far as the question of catering to the manufacturers who are advertising in the trade papers is concerned, I do not know what attitude the journals do take on this, but personally, as an outsider, would consider that it is simply a matter of business policy such as would be followed in any line of commercial industry, and it is only a fair co-operation. The advertiser is necessary to the trade journal and why should not the trade journal be necessary to the advertiser?

Anyone who is trying to please a number of people at the same time has my sympathy, for every manufacturer, every exchangeman, every theater manager knows how absolutely impossible it is to satisfy everyone. So I would advise the reviewers to go ahead in the way in which they are going and give a conscientious and truthful account of the film, for I believe the reviews are good, I believe they are fair, and I believe the reviewer is right in his attitude of simply giving a hint of warning against the film which does not especially appeal to him and not radically condemning a picture unless it is absolutely without merit.

39—I have been working in a local picture house for the past six months as operator and during the past four months have handled the machine entirely alone. I understand that it is necessary to pass some kind of examination in order to get a license to work in the larger cities. Can you put me in touch with some person or school that prepares one for this examination, or give me an idea of what the test consists? I would like to get information about as many different cities as possible as I have not decided yet just where I will locate and may be guided by the rules governing the operating of a machine.

I cannot quote you the exact requirements of all the different cities but will give you an idea of a few of them with which I am familiar and which I believe are typical of all others and this may furnish sufficient information to help you decide where you would like to locate. If you will write to the city clerk of any city in which you are interested he will give you the information you desire or refer you to the proper department from which to obtain the necessary knowledge.

In Chicago one is obliged to pass an examination for a license to operate a moving picture machine. This examination is in charge of the city examiner, in the Bureau of Electrical Inspection, Department of Gas and Electricity. A person applying for a license must have had six months' actual experience, or must have served one year's apprenticeship to a regularly licensed operator. The examination is practical, the questions pertaining to the operation of the various machines.

The Cincinnati, Ohio, ordinance states that the Board of Examiners shall examine all operators of moving picture machines. Any person desiring to take this test is required to send in an application to the Board accompanied by a fee of $2.00. He is questioned as to his knowledge of electricity and wiring in so far as they pertain to moving pictures, also as to his understanding of the operation and mechanism of moving picture machines, the repair of films, the prevention of combustion and the mechanism of the booth.

Los Angeles requires that the operator register his name and place of residence with the Board of Public Works in the office of the city electrician and make an application in writing to the board for a license to operate a machine, accompanying the application with a fee of five dollars. Within five days after the application is filed he will be examined by the city electrician as to his age, his knowledge of the mechanical construction and principal parts of moving picture machines, his particular experience in operating and his ability and competency properly to operate such machines. If he passes the examination a license will be issued provided the operator is not under eighteen years of age and is of temperate habits.

You will find that the examinations and the ordinances are very similar in all cities. Madison, Wisconsin, rules that no person under eighteen and who has not had at least one year's practical experience shall be permitted to operate a projection machine; and St. Louis, Missouri, also places the age limit at eighteen.

40—I have just moved into a small western town and rented a motion picture theater which has been closed for over a year. Being a newcomer in this locality myself I do not know anything about the people or their likes and dislikes. I am very anxious to make a success of the theater and to give the people just what they want in the pictures but I don't know how to find out what they do want. It doesn't make any difference to me what films I show just as long as they will bring the people into my house. Can you suggest any way I can find out what the people will come to see? There is one other theater in town, a five cent one—mine will be ten cents admission—which runs a Universal program.

You are taking exactly the right stand to make your theater a success in your desire to cater to the wants of the public, and this attitude ought to bring results. A selected mailing list will undoubtedly assist you in introducing your house to the people. Send out a personal letter to representative residents in the town and in the country round about, announcing the opening of the new theater and inviting them to come and see the kind of program you are going to run and also state in this letter that your policy is to be one of pleasing the people and endeavoring to give them just what they would like to see. The public is naturally interested in a new theater and will come once or twice just out of curiosity to see what kind of show the new manager is going to offer them. Be very careful in planning your program to be sure to have pictures which cannot fail to attract and please, especially for the first two weeks. Your price of ten cents as compared with the only other theater at five cents may work against you a little at first, but make your patrons feel that you are giving them a program which is worth twice as much as that of your competitor. They will come at first out of curiosity, make them come again because they feel that it is worth while. It is up to you to make regular patrons of your visitors.

There are a number of ways you can experiment to find out what the people really would like. In the first place be conspicuously present yourself at every performance and speak to the people as they come out, ask them if they liked the program and see if you cannot get them to suggest what they would care to see. Tell them that you are planning to make your house the people's theater and if they will tell you of any film which they would especially like to see you will try to secure it for them. Your getting acquainted with the patrons in this way will help to foster a friendly and personal interest feeling, which will do much toward establishing the popularity of your theater.

Be sure to advertise in the local paper. Announce the opening of the theater under new management and the improvements you are going to make. Tell the people you intend to show the pictures they desire to see and the only way you can find out what these are is from the individuals. Suggest that you are always on hand at every performance and would be glad to talk with them on this subject, that they write you expressing their wishes in the matter, or that they might leave a note at the box office at any time telling what film or what actor or actress they would especially like to see.

An old scheme is the "idea" or "suggestion" box, but at the same time it is always effective and should be used in every theater. Put up such a box in a conspicuous place and label it so that everyone will know why it is there. If you use a program in your house put a notice in it to the effect that the box is in the vestibule and asking that sugestions be given you, always emphasizing the fact that your aim is to make your house a people's theater and you desire their co-operation. Also run a slide setting forth your policy and asking that your patrons make use of the suggestion box to give their ideas and desires. You might make the question more specific and this perhaps would bring answers more readily than a general one. For example, ask whether they would rather have serials, dramas, comedies, features or short reels, and what actors and actresses they like best.

These various methods might be used one after another or all at the same time for if the people will not respond to one they will to another and you are sure to get results ultimately.

Sometimes it is rather hard to get the public to respond to appeals of this kind and it is difficult to persuade them to express their likes. They are quick enough to criticize a program if they do not like it and condemn a theater if it does not please them but are slow about telling what will suit their taste. On the other hand in some localities the people are very responsive and hearty in their co-operation. In a small town they are liable to be more interested in getting what they want for the moving picture theater furnishes practically the only means of entertainment and it makes a great difference to them what is shown at these houses, while in the city there are so many other things to attract them and such a great number of picture houses that if one does not give them what they want another will, without any effort on their part.

Activities of Photodramatists Club

The Photodramatists Club, formerly known as the Ed-Au, is making rapid strides toward perfecting an organization which promises to become a power in the photoplay field.

Composed of members, all of whom are recognized screen dramatists, the club boasts an array of talent. The president, Howard Irving Young, formerly responsible for some of Kalem's biggest hits, now a member of the Metro organization, has big plans for the coming year. He is ably assisted by Vice-President Arthur Leeds. co-author with Dr. Esenwein of the text book on photoplay writing, and until recently scenario editor for the Edison company.

At a meeting held Thursday, June 8, plans were formulated for enlarging the club by inviting recognized writers, many of whom are now lending their names to the screen, to join the club which has heretofore confined its membership to established photodramatists and directors only.

An entertainment committee was appointed to have charge of the social side of the club's activities for the coming year. Mrs. L. Case Russell is chairman of this committee, the other members being Edward J. Montagne, of the Vitagraph company and C. Doty Hobart, of Famous Players. The club has arranged a trip to the Bayshore studio of the Vitagraph company on the invitation of Mr. Montagne.

After a short address by Mrs. Russell from the point of view of the free-lance writer, the club was treated to a showing of the latest Vitagraph Blue Ribbon feature, "The Destroyers," an adaptation by Mr. Montagne from a story by James Oliver Curwood, directed by Ralph Ince.

ADVOCATE CHILDREN'S FILMS

Federation Discusses Special Children's Programs, Family Entertainments and Educational Pictures —J. H. Freuler Speaks for Manufacturers

At the recent convention of the General Federation of Women's Clubs a great deal of attention was paid to the question of the special pictures for the children and almost every speaker had something to say on this subject. The discussion ended in a resolution recommending the formation of local censorship committees of clubwomen and the organization of a committee to co-operate with film manufacturers in raising the standard of motion picture productions and in insuring more films suitable for children.

Mrs. Dexter Thurber, of Rhode Island, brought out the idea that the national demand for better pictures is evident; that the need for co-operation between the clubwomen and producers is also evident; and that pictures for the child, the adolescent and the family program must be encouraged.

In speaking of the commercial, educational and philanthropic side of motion pictures Miss Helen Duey made it clear that as yet the philanthropic aspect of the film is negligible and the possibilities of the educational film have not yet been touched upon. While the producers claim that the educational films which are now in circulation are not used by the Visual Education Associations in their work in the school, the school authorities declare they are unable to find motion pictures to conform with their needs in promoting visual education. They mention a few productions such as "Julius Ceasar" and "Silas Marner," which have proved invaluable in stimulating the interest in literary classics, but the motion picture as an aid in teaching geography and history is practically useless. Miss Duey advocated the co-operation of the authorities on education with the producers to see that points useful in schoolroom instruction are brought into the films and the pictures are correlated with class room work.

Miss Klein spoke of the good work which had been accomplished in Cleveland in the use of the family program. She showed that the chief aim of running these programs is to keep the children out of the theaters on nights when they should be studying or asleep. By setting apart Friday, Saturday, and in some cases Sunday nights as family nights, two good results are accomplished; first, children are sure of seeing pictures which they can understand; second, by presenting pictures which can be enjoyed by adults, too, the danger of children coming unaccompanied by a guardian is avoided. Any picture which places no over-emphasis on bad manners or bad morals is available for a family program.

John H. Freuler, president of the Mutual Film Corporation, spoke in behalf of the producers.

Speaking in general for the industry and in person for seven great studios, I can say that motion pictures are made and always will be made to meet the demand of the public.

You represent a very large and important part of our public. We want to please you as that part of our public. Therefore it only remains that you shall decide what you want and that you shall adequately communicate to us what that want is.

We make pictures for a market. The pictures of today are made for the market of today, to supply the demand as it is interpreted to us.

Under present conditions there stands between us the motion picture theater which gives you entertainment with our product. Your pictures are bought for you by the man who operates the motion picture theater—the exhibitor we call him.

The exhibitor has invested his money and his effort with the principal and final purpose of making a profit. We have made our investment for the same purpose. We must serve the exhibitor with what he demands. He, to succeed, must serve his patronage with what it is willing to pay for.

Your special purpose here, as I understand it, is to concern yourself with what you call the problem of securing motion picture productions for children.

You will have to make it worth while to the man who runs your motion picture theater. If you do he will ask us for the pictures and he will get them.

I might take issue with you on "the child and picture problem." Frankly, I do not believe that the motion pictures of today are working harm to children. The drama and the motion picture in particular present "predigested experience." I believe that motion pictures and their educating influence have done a great deal to make the children of today the cleanest generation in our history—clean with positive strength and knowledge, rather than clean with the negation of sheltered ignorance.

Successful Children's Matinees

By Bernard Depkin, Jr.

We have been conducting the Special Children's Performances for about a year at our Parkway Theater, Baltimore, Maryland, and they have proved to be a great success, both from a financial standpoint and as an advertising medium. The picture will show you what a large attendance we have, and this is not an unusual day.

This is how the Parkway Theater of Baltimore, Maryland, draws the kiddies at its Saturday morning matinees.

I am sending a list of the attractions we have played as it may interest other exhibitors who are contemplating the special program.

Mary Pickford in "Cinderella," "Alice in Wonderland," "Little Mary Sunshine," "Good Little Devil," "The Girl of Yesterday," "The Wishing Ring," "The Little Dutch Girl," "Rip Van Winkle," "The Foundling," "Wild Flower," "Loyalty," "The Patch Work Girl of Oz," "The Magic Toy Maker," "Goldie Locks," "Rumpelstiltskin," "The Goose Girl," "The Camp Fire Girls," "The Old Homestead," "Treasure Island," "The Prince and The Pauper," "Molly Make Believe," "Uncle Tom's Cabin," etc.

All of these films were thoroughly enjoyed by the children, and in some instances a repetition was requested.

The scenic beauties of Canada from Nova Scotia to British Columbia and from the Georgian Bay country to the Yukon will be filmed by several squads of Essanay cameramen during the summer months.

PENN EXPOSITION COMPLETED

Business Sessions, Entertainment, Exhibits and the Speakers Have All Been Arranged for the Coming Convention.

Arrangements have practically been completed for the fourth annual convention and exposition of exhibitors of the State of Pennsylvania, to be held at Pittsburgh June 26 to 28. Exhibitors of Pennsylvania, West Virginia and northeastern Ohio have been invited to participate.

Very elaborate exhibits and advertising displays are being erected and all the latest devices of the industry will be exhibited; also a number of notable screen stars will be present to become personally acquainted with their admirers.

Many important questions of vital interest to the exhibitors will be taken up at the meetings and local and state censorship of motion picture films will be one of the most important questions to come under discussion. It is hoped that the exhibitors will make suggestions and devise ways and means to eliminate the obnoxious legislation and Breitingerism from the state of Pennsylvania. It is believed that the combined efforts of all interested can accomplish this end, and an example is cited in the success gained through concerted effort in New York State.

Several prominent speakers have been secured to address the convention. W. Stephen Bush of the Moving Picture World will speak on the history of the motion picture film and also on legalized censorship of motion picture films and its effects. F. H. Richardson, editor of the projection department of this same magazine, will address the convention on the subject of efficient projection.

A special ladies' reception committee has been appointed to take care of the exhibitors' wives and other lady guests while the convention sessions are in progress, and they will take great pleasure in touring the city and pointing out the points of interest in and around Pittsburgh.

Every exhibitor is requested to make a special effort to be present at this convention and exposition. Any information that may be desired will be given on application to James Delves, secretary, Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of Pennsylvania, 823 Penn avenue, Pittsburgh, Pa.

Author's Friend Stars in "Jaffery"

When negotiations were begun nearly a year ago, for the photo-play rights of "Jaffery," William J. Locke cabled the conditions upon which he would agree to have his most popular novel filmed. If C. Aubrey Smith would be cast for Jaffrey, the author would agree.

It developed that the great novelist and C. Aubrey Smith, the actor, had been close friends from their boyhood days, and that in creating the character of Jaffrey, Locke had written with the splendid strength and personality of Smith in mind.

The production of "Jaffrey" in picture form has therefore been delayed by the Frohman Amusement Corporation until the close of Smith's engagement with Margaret Illington, with whom he has played for several seasons.

After holding an option on this book for many months, the Frohman company has had a skillful scenario prepared by Anthony P. Kelly, and has begun the picture with a uniformly strong cast.

PHOTOPLAYS AND ADVERTISING

Seattle Times Establishes Photoplay Section and Reaps Reward in Advertising Done by the Local Theaters

The combination of a photoplay section and picture advertising has been found to be most profitable by the Seattle Times, the pioneer on the Pacific coast in the printing of film news.

To George H. Bellman, the photoplay editor of the Times, belongs the honor of establishing the basis of this co-operation between the paper and the exhibitor, and last year Mr. Bellman brought $80,000 in revenue from motion picture business to his paper.

The Times has recently established an eight-page section in its Sunday issue devoted to motion pictures and amusements alone, of which ninety-five percent is given to pictures, and also runs a daily photoplay department of nearly two columns in addition.

Evidently the motion picture world appreciated this move on the part of the Times, for the first issue of the eight page section carried $1,100 in advertising, and despite this big Sunday amount, Monday showed $200 worth of advertising.

Mr. Bellman has handled both the news and advertising end of the Times' amusement department for four years.

Valkyrien in Ibsen Play

Valkyrien, the Danish screen diva, who has been the Thanhouser star on the Mutual program for nearly a year, has begun work at the New Rochelle studios on a new Thanhouser classic entitled, "The Lady from the Sea," a five-reel adaptation of Henrik Ibsen's famous drama by the same name. The difficult part of the female lead in this searching soul drama was tendered Valkyrien by Edwin Thanhouser in recognition of her splendid and illuminating performance in "Hidden Valley" and "The Image Maker of Thebes," the two great Thanhouser classics, which she finished this winter in Florida, and which are easily the most elaborate ever attempted by the Thanhouser people. It so happens that Valkyrien, who is the Baroness Dewitz in private, has been all over the locale in Norway where the "business" of the Ibsen drama is laid, and her director is finding her a valuable aid in securing the proper atmosphere and settings.

Attend the Convention as a Member

IF anyone were to insist that we name the greatest fault of the average exhibitor, we would be inclined to call it indifference. By that we don't mean indifference to business or to his own welfare, but indifference to the condition of his profession as a whole, to the organization of his fellows, to the opportunities for publicity and growth that lie all about him, purchasable at the cost only of a little effort.

It should not be necessary for us to make the self-evident statement that all exhibitors of motion pictures should be members of one big national organization. There is no good argument to the contrary, yet everybody knows that the majority of exhibitors never become members. They have no reason for refusing to join that they can put into language; they just don't.

A league that combined the strength of all the exhibitors in the country would be a wonderful league. It would be so powerful that it would dominate every branch of the business, and its dictation of quality and distribution could be absolute.

The Chicago convention next month will be attended by a good many exhibitors who are not league members. If they recognize the interest of the convention to the extent of attending, they should appreciate the value of membership. They should come with the determination to join while here, and they should not be allowed to escape without joining.

Those who, for some fancied reason, are luke-warm in their interest, or actually object to membership, must think of the league not as it is without their help, but as it would be if they and their fellows all had a hand in its government. If they dislike the way it is run, the only reasonable way to cure the supposed defects is to jump in and help elect a board of directors to represent them.

No man may run an association to suit himself; but all together can run it to suit them all, if they hold steadily to the real problems and the big purposes. And every man who is willing to do that will find a plentiful supply of that co-operation that is so scarce and elusive when every man works for himself alone.

The Chicago convention will be a huge success, largely because of the tireless labor and unselfish effort of comparatively a few men. Those few want no reward beyond the evidence that the league is becoming more useful and that its value is appreciated by those whom it is meant to benefit. The unattached exhibitor who attends the gathering can do no less than make himself a part of it for all time.

The Multiple Taxation of Censor Board Fees

SOME Chicago exhibitors report that they frequently receive films unaccompanied by the official permit of the local censor board, without which permit running the film is a misdemeanor. The absence of the certificate does not signify that the film failed to pass the board, but merely that, it having passed, the exchange failed—doubtless from motives of economy—to buy a sufficient number of permits. The law says that each print of an approved film must have its own certificate, at a dollar apiece.

We believe strongly in the strict observance of all the laws on the books. The only reasonable way to escape an objectionable law is to repeal it. If the ordinance lays a tax on each copy of an approved film, to avoid trouble the tax must be paid. A dollar's worth of economy on the part of the exchange may mean a lot of trouble for the exhibitor—trouble with the police if he runs the film and trouble with his program if he refuses to run it and has no substitute.

But the most conscientious observance of a law does not make it a just law. Particularly in the payment of taxes of various kinds we habitually honor laws that we know to be defective, because the machinery for changing them is so unwieldly and inert. Probably there is no taxation system that is perfect. But few of them are so unreasonable as the system of charging for censor board permits seems to be.

When a censor board examines and approves a motion picture film we may grant it the right to impose a fee covering the cost of examination. We can make that concession so long as we find it necessary to submit to censorship at all.

But a film approved is a picture approved. Duplicate prints need no examination and get none. Yet under the system a thousand prints would each be taxed the same amount as if each presented a new problem and a new job to the censors.

It would be a parallel case if the government copyright office should charge a publisher a separate fee for every book published, the editions of some of which might run into the hundreds of thousands.

When the exposed film is taken from the motion picture cameras and developed and fixed and washed and from that negative a single positive print is made, that print represents, and is, the picture. When it has been approved by a board of censorship, the censors are through so far as that particular picture is concerned. No quantity of prints can change the quality of the censorship or the moral or ethical status of the picture. It has been passed; therefore it may be shown anywhere without further interference, no matter how many duplicates are required for the showing.

It is not the print that is censored; it is the picture. Making prints of a picture has no more significance than making press copies of a book or a magazine. To charge a separate fee for each print has no justification in logic or precedent.

Giving the Tricks Away

OCCASIONALLY some inspired maker of films releases a production whose plot is in the industry itself. Whether the picture be classed as comedy or industrial, its purpose is to reveal to an eager and marveling public the manner in which some of the death-defying feats and hair-raising thrills of filmdom are put over. Uncovered to the vulgar gaze are the prop that holds the automobile on two wheels, the wire that suspends the burning aeroplane, the dummy that is substituted for the fall, and all the other ingenious properties that make features and serials worth while.

The thing does not happen often enough to waste many words over it. The only question we are raising is whether it would not be better if it never happened.

Last week, talking on altogether another subject, we tried to show how large a part illusion plays in the enjoyment of a picture. Every showman knows that is true. Therefore everything that helps destroy illusion destroys enjoyment. The picture fan may get a lot of amusement out of his ability to tell his friends just "how they do it," but with the knowledge his own interest fades. The glamour is gone. His attendance becomes less frequent and more languid.

The prestidigitator is successful so long as his performance remains a mystery. The lighting effects of the modern stage are delightful because the audience does not know how they are accomplished. The pictures are the most pleasing of all because the illusion of real life is most nearly perfect. The story writer has all the mechanism of his imagination to help create illusion; but if, carelessly or intentionally, he lets us see the mechanism at work we do not care to read his stories.

The pictures are especially gifted in their ability to create a maximum of illusion with a minimum of mechanism. Those few devices that are necessary to the safe creation of thrilling situations should be allowed to remain secrets of the craft.

"Split Reel" Notes for Theater Men

HOW OTHERS ARE STEERING THE SHIP

THE consensus of opinion among Scottish exhibitors in regard to censorship is that there should be some sort of review of films and that national censorship is to be prefered to local.

Free moving pictures have been inaugurated in the parks in Chattanooga and Nashville, Tennessee.

Four different Italian producing firms are at present working on separate film versions of the opera "Cavalleria Rusticana."

F. G. Hyde, an exhibitor of Lindsey, California, was recently injured in a mine explosion, and nearly lost his eyesight.

The Fox Film Company held a house warming at its London offices the first week in June, being at home from 11:30 a. m. to 5 p. m.

Two packed houses greeted "Indiana," the historical film production of the development of the state of Indiana, when it was first shown in Muncie, Indiana.

Manager Seamans of the Strand Theater, Winnipeg, Canada, has shown his patriotism by donating his entire net receipts for two days to the 197th Battalion.

The Oxford Street Picture House of Manchester, England, employs an orchestra of 40 men, and advertises "symphonic orchestral performances" for every afternon and evening.

There will be no more motion pictures in Wymore, Nebraska, on Sunday. An ancient ordinance has been found by the city authorities which forbids their showing.

Lyceum Motophotograms, the official house organ of the Lyceum Theater, Monticello, N. Y., states that it issues 1,500 copies of this small sized magazine every two weeks.

"When once you get your public to know that they can let themselves 'go' it is half the battle on the road to success," says an English exhibitor, who ran a slide encouraging applause in his theater.

An ordinance permitting theaters to do business on Sunday in Danville, Illinois, became effective June 18, and all the managers arranged special programs for that date.

Quinn's Superba Theater, Los Angeles, California, will soon show the Sturgeon eight-reel feature "God's Country and the Woman." This will be the first showing of this film in Los Angeles.

Mr. de la Cour, chairman and managing director of the Bioscope Film and Supply Company, has received a commission in the Army Service Corps M. T., and is now on active service in France.

The latest wrinkle is a motion picture theater as part of the equipment of a private yacht. D. C. Jackling has his yacht "Cyprus" fitted up with every luxury from a player piano to a complete picture theater.

The new Rialto, perhaps America's finest photoplay house, has been running a scientific film showing the excavation and research work being done among the ruins of ancient Pompeii. The film took well with the public.

The motion picture theater men of Windsor, Canada, have petitioned the Ontario government to exempt children from the one-cent amusement war tax. The tax is said to be keeping the youngsters from the theaters.

The Triangle Theater, Brooklyn, N. Y., issued an elaborate souvenir program of ten pages and cover at the benefit performance held by the Junior Auxiliary of the New York Congregational Church for the Home for the Aged.

In spite of the amusement tax and the facts that business just now is not so good as during the winter and that it is very difficult for exhibitors to secure operators whom the government officials will allow to remain out of the army, there has been a new picture house opened in Glasgow, Scotland. It is called the Battlefield Picture House.

The Clark Theater, Chicago, Illinois, issues a very compact program printed on emerald green stock. The two-page folder is 2½x4½ and can easily be carried in the pocket or purse. On the front page the announcement is made that the program will be mailed each Monday to all who leave their address at the box office.

The Stratford Theater, Detroit, Michigan, carries an announcement in its program to the effect that at the evening performances all children must have tickets, but at the matinees (except Sundays and holidays) all children under twelve years of age, when accompanied by parents or guardians, will be admitted free.

The Sampson Theater, Penn Yan, N. Y., H. C. Morse, manager, runs matinees at 2:00 and 3:30 each day and evening performances at 7:30 and 9:00. The admission is ten cents on the lower floor and five cents in the balcony. It runs a feature, educational and comedy at each performance.

Souvenir postal cards of the theater are being given away by the manager of the Family Theater, Davenport, Iowa. The management has named this the "Parlor Photo Play House" and with its artistic interior decorations of fountains and flower boxes it is very deserving of the name.

A canvass of twenty-one exhibitors to find out whether their patrons preferred the all-feature program, the three-feature-a-week program or the mixed program resulted in a vote of seventeen to four for the mixed program. Four were in favor of the three-feature-a-week entertainment.

Ben Blotcky, manager of the Strand Theater, St. Paul, showed originality in advertising "The Dumb Girl of Portici." He installed a euniphone on his outdoor balcony, covered with electric signs, playing popular music, while a strong searchlight played its rays on various signs regarding the film.

Coliseum Columns is the house organ of The Coliseum, West Philadelphia. This contains three pages of chat about the plays, the players and the house itself, with the last page devoted to the week's program. The Coliseum is a five cent house which never raises its prices. It runs matinees every day from two to five and evening performances from seven to eleven.

One theater manager found a novel way to pack his theater and at the same time catch up on a serial which he had booked rather late. He decided to have a "serial" week and run one episode of the series daily until he was up-to-date on the picture. He advertised his "serial week" heavily and ran one episode a day. The result was that in spite of very bad weather his house was filled every day that week.

Paramount states that it would thank each exhibitor to instruct his operator not to rewind their films when taking off the machine after the last show at night. "Although this is a peculiar request, its fulfillment will save us a great deal of time, for the simple reason that if they are not rewound by you, it will not be necessary for our inspector to again rewind them before examining."

The program for the week of June 18 at the Strand Theater, New York, was made up of a double bill, "The Clown" being the main feature, augmented by a two-reel subject "Diana the Huntress." A Mutt and Jeff cartoon and the Topical Review completed the picture program. The musical program consisted of an overture and incidental music by the Strand orchestra, solos by Jan Rubini, violinist, Bruce Weyman, baritone, and Kate Davis.

C. M. Wonderly, manager of the Rourke and Wonderly Theaters, La Junta, Colorado, utilizes the same program for both theaters. The cover is an artistic conventional design in colors, and on the last page is an open letter signed by the manager giving the policy of his houses. This letter is a very good idea and one which other managers would do well to copy as it fosters a feeling of fellowship between the exhibitor and the public.

Gertrude McCoy, the screen star, made a personal appearance at the Gertrude McCoy Theater, Baltimore, Maryland, when Manager Frederick Clement Weber was showing her latest production, "The Isle of Love." The event was widely advertised by the management and between five and six thousand people flocked to the house to see the star. She held a reception after each performance. Miss McCoy also appeared at the Lord Calvert Theater, which is owned by this same company.

The Philadelphia Ledger originated a clever advertising scheme which might be used to advantage by theater men. Under the heading, "Do You Want a Piece of Film?" the photo-play department is offering to give all who send a personal letter or a postal card a piece of film left from one of the last photoplays in which Lubin presented Arthur V. Johnson. It is amazing how few people have ever seen a piece of film and a bit of celluloid from a film which they have witnessed might prove a very attractive souvenir for the manager to distribute.

The motion picture exhibitors of Toronto, Canada, have petitioned that the regulation which makes it necessary for an assistant motion picture operator to serve for a full year before he can obtain his certificate as a full-fledged operator be changed. It has been found that this rule has worked a hardship against the theater men because so many operators are enlisting and many returned soldiers are learning the business, and unless some relief were given a number of picture theaters would have to go out of business. On the other hand a number of the assistant operators who have served for seven or eight months are quite ready to take their examination. It was also pointed out that it was necessary for the returned soldiers to get to work as soon as possible and therefore the petition asked that the term of apprenticeship be shortened.

A hint to the man opening a new theater is given in Amusements. It suggests that one of the best ways to bring patrons into the theater is for the manager to get hold of a mailing list of people who live in nearby villages and peruse the telephone or city directories and mail post cards announcing the theater policy, prices and programs, or else mail out some sort of novelty card. In this way an exhibitor gets in personal touch with everybody, makes the recipient feel that there must be something to the new house besides splashy paper, and, in the country, postal cards usually adorn some piece of furniture where they are very noticeable upon entering a room.

"The Little Girl Next Door," the film constructed on the report of the Illinois vice commission, continues to do undiminished business at the La Salle Theater, Chicago. It is now in its ninth week. At every performance the house has been crowded, an average of 4,000 patrons a day being maintained.

On Saturday and Sunday nights it has been necessary to continue the show until 2 o'clock in the morning to care for the crowds. The film has also appeared to good business in St. Louis, Peoria, South Bend, Alton, and other Illinois and Indiana cities.

Miss Harriet E. Vittum, active in reform work in Chicago, appeared before a council committee to protest against the film, declaring that it shows "pandering in all its hideousness." The film does show the pitfalls which beset a girl in large and small cities alike, and for just such reason it was permitted to be shown in Chicago.

The film is being booked from Room 521, First National Bank Building, Chicago, Ill.

The Photoplay Scenario

NOTE—This department will appear hereafter in each issue of MOTOGRAPHY, and will treat of all subjects of interest to the photoplaywright—whether amateur or professional. You are invited to suggest any subjects you desire to have discussed, or ask questions on any matters relating to the writing of photoplays which have been puzzling you. The department is also open to you at any time for the expression of your own ideas or the submitting of ideas of others which have helped you, and will be interesting to other photoplay writers.

The Plot of Tomorrow

BY AGNES CHRISTINE JOHNSTON

Read at the meeting of the Photodramatists Club, New York.

IN discussing the future of the photoplay, I feel quite like a proud parent talking over the possibilities of little Sammy becoming president—the same little Sammy being still in knickerbockers and busily engaged in playing marbles or "beaning" some furtive window pane with his sling shot. For although not in its infancy, the photoplay is certainly in its hobble-de-hoy stage. We never know just what the precocious child will do next. He ranges from the wildest of melodramas to deeper psychological studies, which are surprising in the depth of thought they reveal.

It seems that every art follows the pattern of the life of man. Like a child, whose energies are first directed to the physical, his furtherest ambitions being to walk, to jump or to excell in sports, his first mental activities are merely incidental. Fiction, the legitimate drama, even music and painting—if you trace them back—will be found to have passed through these different stages. They started first, with an appeal to the natural cravings of their audiences for Action. They fluctuated, at times retrograded, but finally emerged into a higher, more mature state—nicely grown-up Arts!

And the drama of the screen, being so wide-reaching in its scope, is certainly not to develop along conservative and conventional lines. It has not the educated audience which the stage-play and the novel comfortably adapt themselves to. It meets a long coveted demand—an art for all the people. Therefore, is it any wonder that this adjustment and advancement of our photo-plot child will not take place without many growing pains?

First and foremost, what is the reason for any art? Why are "movie" audiences? For amusement and distraction, mental stimulas? Call it anything you like, it is really a desire to peep into life, which makes us go to the theater! That is the consuming passion of the human mind! Curiosity—as to the lives of others, the follies, graces and virtues of human beings, is at the base of every action or desire in the world. We are most interested in human activity. For life is the universal mystery and the greatest of joys is the prodding of this mystery—the endeavoring to test and try every throbbing channel and by-way of its infinite depths.

The creator of any work of art takes his audience by the hand and shows them a telescope through which they may look on life. The photoplay author meeting an audience so large and so diffuse, naturally must adapt his work to the majority. He must arrange the focus of his telescope so all will be able to see and understand. Otherwise, only the bright-eyed can distinguish more than a blur. In the past, the photoplay showed only the surface of life. In fact when pictures first came out, they were of interest merely because they moved. And the plots had only to portray physical activity. Little plot was necessary. However, this attraction soon wore off. The audience demanded cause and effect in the movements of the screen people. They wanted to see the physical perils and hair breadth escapes of the characters. The author adjusted the focus of his telescope and "punch" was born. Our photo-plot had only to contain a spectacular feat—there had to be some thriller at the finish, some exciting climax, and our audience was satisfied.

But as their mental perceptions grew still stronger, they sought to look further into life. They wanted their screen idols to give evidences that they had brains and hearts and souls—that they were more than mere marionettes. The people demanded personalities—living, human beings. A mere melodrama where the handsome hero rescued the beautiful heroine from the unscrupulous—black-whiskered—villain, was not enough. The audiences wanted to know why the handsome hero loved the beautiful heroine and the author had to give her a "raison d'etre." The villain had to have some logical reason why he did not catch the lovers, beside the fact that he was the villain. The deus ex machine was banished, just as it has been from drama. The puppets began to think. Our photo-plot child had begun to reason.

And it is in this stage that we find him today. He fascinates the audience not only by his activity, but by his personality—his mind. And he sometimes even forgets his wild animal spirits and shows a mature poise which the audience appreciates keenly. The photo-plot of tomorrow will have to adapt itself to this thirst of the audience for thought. The physical punch will become psychological. The author must create living, breathing people. He must show the workings of their minds and the growth of their souls. It will not be "characters for the plot" but "plot for the characters" —situations which will best portray the individualities the author wishes to bring to life. And in following the psychology of the human mind, the situations will be more natural and true to life.

People are beginning to demand a better focus on life. They want to think and grow. Anything that does not incite growth becomes tiresome after a while. Even now, it takes a very unusual thrill to stir the hardened nerves of the constant movie-goer. The conflagration, the fall from a great height, the fight with a wild beast—all these have become trite and commonplace. The photodramatist racks his brain to find some novel punch or tries to disguise an old one by dressing it up in new clothes. But the throb and pulse of the human brain, and heart, and emotions will never be wearisome. We never tire of seeing our own faults and virtues painted in other individualities. There is always a fascination in taking some human trait and studying how it will match the "color" of a certain character. It is the same old material colored and altered to adorn a new model. The result is a work of art, a wonderful, exquisite, interesting creation.

Fundamentally, one human soul is pretty much the same as any other and it is our natural egotism which makes us want to see our own emotions portrayed and our own problems discussed. Life, after all is an eternal striving to grasp life—a perpetual effort to get as much out of living as possible and unconsciously or deliberately, we are always trying to solve our own problems, to understand living more thoroughly, so we may enjoy it the more.

The pessimist's cry that moving picture audiences do not want to think—that they do not appreciate the deeper things in life—is contradicted by the change which the photo-plot has undergone since it began. The audiences are becoming educated. They are beginning slowly, but surely, to think. If you will only listen to the remarks of an average audience you will be delighted by the evidences of gray matter which their impressions of a photoplay brings forth. "Now you see Mame, she ain't happy, even wid all dem swell clothes. She was happy before, only she never knowed it!" "Look, it ain't fair fer him to do dat! If he could only see de poor little kid, waiting at home fer him! Poor little kid!" We are sharpening not only the minds but the sensibilities of our people.

To be sure, in our very strugglings after the true and genuine, we must pass through a period of chaos and perhaps the reaction against the shallow melodrama may swing us past the ideal to the sensational for a while. The public fancy may be swayed, for the moment, by the morbid—the distorted viewpoint of sex story, the impractical canting of the idealist. But it is only the underbrush, through which we must pass in endeavoring to reach the open country. We will settle down after a while, tired of glamor and gaudiness and realize the joy of simplicity and truth. The real artist will then triumph. The literary hypocrite, the mercenary bluffer, will be left behind when the new photoplot emerges from its chrysalis. The photodramatist of tomorrow will not have to strain wildly after original, fantastic ideas. It will be left behind when the new photo-plot emerges from of artificialities. But he will show it to you from his generous, wholesome viewpoint. He will present his human problems frankly and with no pretensions. He will give you his opinion of them, that you may think and form your own opinions. He will paint the true emotions, the vital feelings of the character he portrays. He will teach his audience the joy of living, the supreme happiness of simplicity. The photodramatist of tomorrow will be a philosopher, a teacher. He will have no cause to use the photoplay as a stepping stone for drama or fiction or even philosophy.

His literary style will improve, for every saying of his will become an epigram, a choice jewel of thought; because his efforts in word painting will be concentrated to sub-titles in pictures. When he does speak, his words will be vivid in their intensity.

Therefore, why should not the photodrama become the great art of arts, which we have long been seeking? Does it not have powers that no other arts could aspire to? For it solves that eternal problem, whether to sacrifive one's standard in literary lines, for popularity. The photodrama will teach the audience and bring their tastes up to the ideal standards.

What a vast field to devote one's energies and talents to. It is the art that reaches all the people, that has power to stir the heart of the working man as well as the brain of the student, that teaches and helps this great old world of ours to go a little easier upon its destined path, to feel a little more keenly the joy of life.

No Price Too Great for World

By William A. Brady

THERE is no limit to the price the World Film Corporation will pay for good, logical, dramatic material. If the writer is important and brings us a big story he can demand his own price. If a writer of unknown quality can bring us a tale that will attract unusual attention and make an unusual picture, he can get far more for his product than he can for like amount of work in any other field in the world.

We pay for material any sum commensurate with the importance of the writer, bigness of the story, unconventionality of the plots and promise of the scenario. A John Smith is as welcome to us as Sir James M. Barrie—all we want is the finished product.

There is no field in the world where a reputation counts for less than in motion picture making.

An author, in order to attract attention, must lay before us a finished work. If it is unfinished we must, in order to produce it, put a professional writer to work, have it revised and scenes, situations and climaxes injected, all of which, when the film is produced, go to the credit of the original writer.

We court the finest stories from the world's greatest authors. We are advertising at an expense of ten thousand dollars for new writers, new idea creators, new plot architects—all because we want to get away from the hackneyed, tiring "two men and a woman" ideas.

Last week a noted playwright, one of whose plays created a furore on Broadway, wanted to do business with us. He wanted to write six scenarios a year. We would have liked to engage him—but he demanded one thousand dollars in advance, before even submitting his synopsis. We had to decline his services. But an hour later we paid an unknown writer five hundred dollars for a finished scenario, which on the face of it, proved original and attractive.

We recently bought one scene from an author to insert into the story of another writer.

There is no standard price for World Film. We are in the market for the product of the best authors, for which we will pay the highest prices. We are just as much in the market for original matter from obscure writers. We invite newspapermen to send us ideas and stories. We want new and better material—there is no limit—a good story to start with, is half the battle won.

We have stellar players of every imaginable type and we want material that will permit of them displaying the versatility they are supposed to possess. We do not want stories bordering on the forbidden topics of conversation. We do not want vampire stories. We do not want to put on the screen, to show the people of the world, anything we would not broach as a subject during a drawing room chat.

Subjects unfit to be spoken of in polite circles, are certainly not fit to offer millions of people of every thinking class. We want clean, original, dramatic material—and will pay amply for it. Those who write for the morbid, the pervert, and the low thinking, can save their postage.

Mutual Introduces Vagabond Charlie

AUDREY MUNSON'S ARTISTIC ALLEGORICAL FILM COMPLETED

A NEW note will be struck in artistic film spectacles with the release on July 17 of "Purity," the six part allegorical film featuring Audrey Munson, produced by the American Film Company. Many of the scenes were taken in a natural ampitheater and the grandeur of the exterior locations has never been surpassed. At a large garden fete Miss Munson reviews most of her noteworthy poses including "Descending Night," "The Running Diana," "L'Allegro," and others. The story is taken from Greek mythology and the allegorical characters of Evil, Beauty, Art, Music and Drama all play important roles. Prominent in the cast supporting Miss Munson are Eugenie Forde, Nigel de Brullier and William Carroll.

While the noted model was chosen for this picture solely because of her perfection of feature and figure and it was not expected that she would do aught but pose, the director soon discovered that Miss Munson possessed natural-born dramatic ability. Although utterly lacking experience she persisted in taking the role assigned to her seriously in portraying the character she was to represent and now she is spoken of as a photo-play actress.

Two hundred nymphs in their beautiful interpretative dances on the green add much to the artistic beauty of this film. Miss Geneva Driscoll, a former pupil of Ruth St. Dennis, has drilled these dancers for weeks, and draped in flowing veils, bare footed and bare legged they glide over the grass of the beautiful lawn.

"Youth's Endearing Charm," which will be Mary Miles Minter's first feature on the American-Mutual program, is being rushed to conclusion and will be released several weeks earlier than was anticipated. William C. Dowlan is directing the young star and Walter McDonald, Harry von Meter, Gertrude Le Brandt, Alfred Ferguson, Margaret Nichols, are in the supporting cast.

Other features ready for release include "The Decoy," which will go to the public on June 29; "The Sign of the Spade," "Tangled Skeins," and "The Fate of the Dolphin," all to be released the week of June 26. The Mustang-Mutual two-reel offering "The Demon of Fear" will be given to the public June 30 and "The King O' Make Believe," featuring Crane Wilbur, the Centaur-Mutual star, will be released July 1.

Purity," the American-Mutual feature adorned by Audrey Munson, the noted artists' model.

Comedy offerings for this same week include the Vogue fun-makers, "A Safe Loss," starring Rube Miller, and "Just for a Kid," with Ben Turpin and Rena Rodgers, to be ready June 27 and July 2, respectively. "When Adam Had 'Em," with Carol Halloway and John Sheehan, for June 28, and "A Gink from Kankakee," starring Orral Humphrey, for July 2, are Beauty contributions; while Cub offers "Jerry's Big Haul," featuring George Ivey, ready June 30.

Various topics of interest are included in Mutual Weekly No. 78, to be shown June 28. In "See America First," for release the same day the Gaumont-Mutual cameraman takes the spectator for a trip through Glacier National Park. "Reel Life," to be given to the public July 2, offers a wide variety of interesting subjects.

Two-reel features under way include "The Taming of Wild Bill," a Mustang-Mutual featuring Jack Richardson and Nita Davis; "That Gal of Burke's," starring Frank Borzage, supported by Anna Little, Jack Richardson; "That Good-For-Nothing-Kid," which also presents Frank Borzage in the role of author, director and star; "The Little Troubadour," with Vivian Rich, Alfred Vosburg and George Periolat; "The Enchantment," also featuring Vivian Rich; "Ruth Bidley's Return," in which Lizette Thorne, Edward Coxen and George Field enact the principal roles; "The Dreamer," in which these same players appear; and "A Million Dollars," starring Anita Davis and Ashton Dearholt.

Single reel comedies being filmed under the Beauty brand are "Spartan Spleen," with Orral Humphrey; "Slicking the Slickers," another Humphrey feature; and "B. V. D., the Cave Man," with Carrol Halloway, John Sheehan and John Steppling furnishing the laughs.

Charlie Chaplin will again bow to the public on July 10 in the third of the Chaplin-Mutual comedies entitled "The Vagabond," in which he appears as the itinerant musician. In this play Charlie again returns to his famous make-up, which he discarded temporarily in his last comedy.

Eric Campbell, the "heavy" of Chaplin-Mutual releases, Edna Purviance, the comedian's leading woman, Leo White, Charlotte Mineau, Phyllis Allen and Lloyd Bacon, members of Chaplin's supporting company, all have important parts in "The Vagabond."

To obtain the proper atmosphere for the gypsy scenes a band of nomads on their annual pilgrimage camping near Los Angeles, were engaged to appear in the film, along with their paraphernalia. In "The Vagabond," for the first time in his career, Chaplin brings into the play his famous violin, about which so much has been written.

The value which the Mutual Company places on the Chaplin reels is shown by the insurance policy which it has just taken out for protection against theft by "film pirates." The twelve releases in which Chaplin is to appear this year will cost more than a million dollars, including the comedian's salary of $670,000, and every phase of the business involved which is insurable has been insured.

The Mutual Film Magazine, Reel Life No. 8, will show the methods followed by the administration of New York in keeping the largest city in America free from dirt.

J. P. McGowan, the producer, Helen Holmes, the star, and her company have returned from Hawaii, where they have been filming exterior scenes for "The Diamond Runner," the forthcoming five-act Signal-Mutual release. Meanwhile in the studios preparations have been completed for the filming of "Judith of the Cumberlands," in which Miss Holmes will take the title role.

John Reinhard, the popular Gaumont-Mutual player, pleads for consideration for the "movie villain." He claims that the bad man is the hardest worked actor on the screen and his role demands the best acting, in fact many actors prefer the villain's part because it gives them a broader opportunity to show their art. He compares the aids which the stage villain has in the words which register his cussedness, the low and insinuating tones and the sneering threats which help to show him of the deepest dye, while the screen hero can register his villainy only by the movements of his facial muscles and his eyes.

A series of three-act features starring Gertrude McCoy are now being prepared at the Gaumont-Mutual studios in Flushing, L. I. Miss McCoy's first appearance in these productions will be in "Gates of Divorce."

Municipal Educational Film

Robert H. McLaughlin, president of the Reserve Photo Plays Company of Cleveland, has outlined a film that would be a municipal educational photo-play, with just sufficient plot to prevent it from becoming a technical demonstration. It would show, for example, a "close-up" of a fire alarm box, the proper method of opening it, and of transmitting an alarm. The scene would then jump to the fire alarm telegraph office, showing the receipt of the alarm and the notifying of the engine companies responding. Another section of film would show children how to avoid street accidents. Housewives would be shown the proper handling of gasoline in cleaning. A special feature would be graphic instruction to both men and women as to the proper way of besting the footpad, pickpocket or burglar. An educational film under municipal auspices, film men believe, would be a valuable part of the city's public service.

Gertrude McCoy in New Feature

Miss Gertrude McCoy, one of the screen's most popular stars, has been engaged by the Gaumont-Mutual studios to appear in a series of three-act feature productions especially written for her.

First of the features starring Miss McCoy will be released through the Mutual shortly under the title of "Gates of Divorce." It is a story of New York life written especially for Miss McCoy by Robert Burns, a well known New York newspaperman.

Miss McCoy's second feature will bear the title of "The Wonderful Desire." It is from the pen of Rennold Wolf, the New York dramatic critic.

In the Red Feather "Temptation and the Man," Hobart Henley portrays the role of a hero of the underworld.

V. L. S. E. Inaugurates Feature Courses

SELIG PRESENTS FAMOUS STARS IN ATHLETIC FILM SERIES

THE Big Four has instituted a new departure in the distribution of films in the form of star courses of V. L. S. E. feature plays which are rapidly replacing the old-style Lyceum and Chautauqua plans of entertainment in the small towns. Realizing that the very small town cannot afford to book the extraordinary features the company has arranged various lists of four, five and six feature plays that lend themselves to the exhibitor on the Chautauqua plan. These courses are being used not only to provide amusement and entertainment but also to raise money for civic and charitable purposes, and have been found a source of great profit.

The success of this plan was shown in the little town of Muncy, Pennsylvania. It was desired to improve the town park by the planting of trees and flowers and the star course plan of V. L. S. E. was mentioned and the proposition made that subscriptions be taken up to run such a course. Two hundred and sixty tickets were sold for the series of entertainments and besides this a number of single admissions were taken when the pictures were displayed. With the proceeds on the course tickets the promoters booked a star course including "Graustark," "The Rosary," "The Island of Regeneration" and "The White Sister." The entertainments were given once a week.

There are less than a thousand inhabitants in Muncy but when the course was completed and the promoters figured up their box office receipts and paid off all expenses they found a most substantial profit in the strong box.

On June 26 the Selig Polyscope Company will release through the V. L. S. E. the first of its much-heralded Selig Athletic Film Series which present the most famous stars in every line of legitimate sports.

This series consists of twelve one-reel subjects which will be released one each week. These pictures are being produced under the personal direction of J. H. Herman, a well-known figure in the athletic world, and they depict every line of athletics including boxing, wrestling, field events, billiards, pool, roller and ice skating, ski jumping, swimming, bowling, tennis, golf, rowing, canoeing, hockey, basketball, polo, automobile, curling, fencing and a host of others. Every athletic champion and runner-up known to sport followers throughout the country have signed contracts calling for their appearance in one of these series of films.

Any events of sufficient merit along the line of athletic meets which may come up while this series is being produced will be included. For example it is expected Frank Gotch will wrestle Joe Stecher for the world's championship and exclusive motion picture rights for this match have been secured. Also if the Olympian games are held this year the Selig Company will have the exclusive rights to film them.

To create interest in this series leaders in the various sports will write articles telling of their ideas on physical development and giving instructions on how to become perfect men and women. These articles will be copyrighted and will be sent to sporting editors throughout the country, more than 50 of whom already have agreed to run them in their newspapers.

The first film presents Mike Gibbons, middleweight champion, training for a bout. He is also seen in a three-round bout with Tom Gibbons. Yamada. the Jap billiard champion, matches his skill against that of Albert Cutler, the Yankee leader. Dr. B. F. Roller, the wrestling champion, engages in a finish match with Fred Dalkus, the Lithuanian champ, in which he gets two out of three falls. Willard and Moran will be seen in a near release.

Essanay Makes Twelve Films at Once

The Essanay studios now have twelve companies working at the same time on a program of two and three-reel subjects. The third new studio makes it possible for this number of directors to be on the floor at once. This extraordinary activity arose because the shorter reel features are being made somewhat ahead of program in order to finish them to make room for the big features in which Edna Mayo and Henry Walthall are to appear. Mr. Walthall has already started work on his five-reel production. Antonette Walker will play opposite him. A number of the exteriors will be filmed at Camp Logan, the rifle range and encampment grounds of the Illinois National Guard.

"The Return of Eve" is the title of the play in which Edna Mayo will next appear, and Eugene O'Brien will support the star.

President Spoor is glad to call the attention of the exhibitors and public to the fact that neither of these features depend upon crime or the sex topic for the development of their plots.

Thirty members of the Essanay company, including Bryant Washburn and Marguerite Clayton, journeyed to Joliet to appear in the prison scenes in "Worth While." Michael F. Zimmer, warden of the Joliet penitentiary, and Dr. J. Wiley Devry, chief physician of the institution, took parts in this drama. Mr. Washburn was placed in a cell and handcuffed and when the time came to remove the bracelets the property man with the key could not be found. The deputy warden called over a real convict and with a writing pen he quickly unlocked the handcuffs.

Governor Dunne of Illinois was caught in some of the scenes in "Power," as he was inspecting the state roads while the scenes were being filmed near Starved Rock, Illinois. Nell Craig and Sydney Ainsworth appear in the leading roles in this play.

Nehls in New York

R. R. Nehls, general manager of the American Film Company, has returned from New York, where for several days he was in consultation with the officials of the Mutual Film Corporation over the new policies of his company. He was accompanied by Mrs. Nehls.

Universal Director Jacques Jaccard has completed the first of a series of stories of "Men and Women."

New Trade Organization Forming

COMMITTEE OF TWELVE WORK ON SUCCESSOR TO NATIONAL BOARD OF TRADE

A MEETING of the sub-committee of twelve to formulate plans for a motion picture association, was held in the office of W. W. Irwin, chairman of the committee, at 1600 Broadway, New York City, on June 15. There were present the chairman and Messrs. Nicholas Power, J. H. Hallberg, Lee A. Ochs, John J. Whittman, L. L. Levine, W. Stephen Bush, Wm. A. Johnston, Tracey Lewis and Jesse L. Lasky. Jules E. Brulatour and Wm. W. Hodkinson had notified the chairman in advance of their inability to attend the meeting.

In the call for this meeting Mr. Irwin had requested members of the committee to feel perfectly free to bring their attorneys if they so desired in order that the committee might have the benefit of legal advice. A number of attorneys, therefore, were present in addition to the committee members, to advise the various interests of the best plan for getting together.

Mr. Irwin appointed two sub-committees of the committee of twelve, one a sub-committee of charter and by-laws, and another committee of budget.

The sub-committee of charter and by-laws is composed of Arthur S. Friend (attorney for Jesse L. Lasky) and William M. Seabury, who will act as lawyers in taking care of the legal side of it, and Messrs. W. Stephen Bush and L. L. Levine as lay-members; Mr. Levine representing the exhibitors, and Mr. Bush the other interests of the industry.

The committee on budget is to determine upon ways and means of financing the proposed association, and if its report to the committee of twelve is accepted this report will be made a part of the proposed charter and by-laws. The committee on budget consists of Messrs. William A. Johnston, Lee A. Ochs, J. H. Hallberg and W. W. Irwin.

At the close of the meeting of the committee of twelve, Mr. Irwin made the following statement on behalf of the committee:

"We considered very carefully the question of making public at this time the various proposals and discussions had by this committee of twelve. It was decided that any such publication at this time might be premature, that it would start a premature discussion of ideas that the committee itself had not thoroughly digested. The committee therefore decided not to go into details at this time of its discussions.

"The committee instructed me to say, however, that all our discussion of today was based upon the purposes and objects of the association, the methods of operation, the co-ordination of the various branches of the industry, and the membership of the whole association.

"Necessarily these points being all of them so important, it was impossible to settle at the first meeting all the details covering these four points. It is for the purpose of giving our committee members a chance to digest thoroughly what we went over today that we decided not to make a specific statement of our debate.

"The entire committee was harmonious in the extreme, and everyone expressed himself, both in word and in deed, as desirous of securing the best possible results for the industry at large and for all its collateral and allied branches. Everyone present worked most unselfishly toward this end, and there is every promise that with the magnificent spirit shown by all those present we shall be able to present a thoroughly comprehensive organization report."

Before reporting back to the committee of twelve the two sub-committees of charter and by-laws and budget will hold several sessions in order, first, to acquire and then to codify the essential details of their respective missions.

Mr. Irwin, as chairman of the committee of the whole and of the special committee of twelve, is in receipt of numerous letters and telegrams offering the heartiest co-operation from every branch of the industry. Other members of the committee of twelve also have been shown every indication that the industry is at last united on attaining that well-knit front by which they can achieve the results so earnestly desired by all.

KEMBLE BUYS WAR PICTURES

"The Zeppelin Raids on London, and the Siege of Verdun" Will Be States-Righted by Film Corporation

The Kemble Film Corporation of Brooklyn has secured the American rights for the films "The Zeppelin Raids on London, and the Siege of Verdun," and will states-right them.

These pictures, which have been pronounced the most spectacular war pictures ever seen, show the great importance of the Zeppelins in the world war. They show the giant aircrafts flying over London, the bombardment of the city, the attack on the huge dirigibles by anti-aircraft guns, and the devastation wrought by the Zeppelins.

Le Morte Homme, or "Deadman's Hill," is shown in thrilling realism and also the blowing up of the Malancourt bridge at Verdun.

These pictures were first shown in the Park Theater, under the auspices of the New York Globe and drew capacity houses.

Index to Motography

Volume fifteen of MOTOGRAPHY was completed with the issue of June 24, 1916. This includes the issues of the past six months. A complete index has been printed and may be had upon request. This gives an accurate key to the news and events of the motion picture industry during the last half year. Address simply, MOTOGRAPHY, Chicago.

John W. Grey of the International, speed merchant, author of "Pep" and organizer of forty-dollar lunch clubs, is going to the motion picture exposition at Chicago, July 10 to 18. Also John promises to have the most startling exhibit on the lot.

Pastor Approves Fox "Vampire"

JUNE CAPRICE TO MAKE PREMIER IN JULY

THAT the pastor of a church should endorse an actress depicting vampire roles is almost a miracle, and yet this distinction has been conferred on Theda Bara, the Fox star by Rev. Morgan E. George, pastor of the First Christian Church, Ottumwa, Iowa. This minister not only sets his approval on the acting of the star but states that he never misses watching her on the screen in each new release. Rev. George, very much impressed by the emotional tragedienne, has made a study of her real character and says he would like to see her in a different role—one which would reveal the real woman's soul and her sweetness which shines out through her eyes even while her lips are curled in a satanic sneer. In a letter to Miss Bara the clergyman says "I think a role in which you yourself would be crushed, where the soul could make its appeal through those eyes, would bring you greater success than ever."

June Caprice, the dainty little actress whom William Fox discovered, and whom he claims he will make famous in a year—will make her bow to the film fans in July. She will play the title role in "Caprice of the Mountains," where her love of the out-door-life and her athletic ability will be brought into play.

Miss Caprice is enamored with the screen and her life in the studio, and John Adolphi, her director, is much impressed with the histrionic progress of the Fox protege. The young star is adept at swimming, rowing and yachting, and an expert at tennis, golf and basketball.

De Witt C. Jennings, the famous actor whose latest success was in "Under Cover," has joined the William Fox forces and started right to work on a picture. Bertram Bracken is directing the film, which deals with sporting life.

Clifford Bruce has returned to the Fox company where he will be seen as hero in the Valeska Suratt picture now being taken.

"A Tortured Heart," the Fox drama in which Virginia Pearson will star will be of unusual historic interest because of the many scenes which are taken in a little village fifteen miles north of Savannah, Georgia. The church in which John Wesley preached his first sermon in the United States, and in which General Sherman and his staff stopped on their march to the sea figures in the play. The picturesque ox-cart used in the scenes served as a mess wagon for the northern army during the early part of the Civil War. Harriet Beecher Stowe drew her inspiration for "Uncle Tom's Cabin" from the plantation in this little hamlet, and in many ways the town recalls "The Deserted Village."

Those who think Valeska Suratt a sophisticated woman beyond the powers of emotion would have changed their minds if they had been present at the scene in her new picture in which the villain was supposed to be struck by lightning. Miss Suratt was seated on the porch of a bungalow, the villain standing immediately in front under a tree which was filled with dynamite. When the explosion came Miss Surrat was moved—her chair went over backwards and the shrieks of the heartless adventuress could be heard by all within earshot.

Madam Bertha Kalich, whose next appearance will be in the Fox drama of political intrigue "Ambition," is fascinated by the second-hand book stores which dot New York, and the actress confesses that the call of the dusty tome, the unique binding or the forgotten author is irresistible. Mme. Kalich spends a great deal of time in these little stores among the old books and she is impartial as to the language in which the book is written as she speaks eight tongues fluently, but she concedes that she is not yet quite ready to cope with the barriers raised by Chaucer's ancient English.

A complete list of the actors and actresses who appear in the Fox pictures is as follows:

Vim Stays in Florida

Contrary to expectation the three Vim comedy companies will not come to New York for the summer months but will remain in Jacksonville, Fla. Managing Director Louis Burstein, after consultation with Mark Dintenfass, determined to take advantage of the extraordinary season which Florida is experiencing and dispense with the difficulties attending removal from the spacious and up-to-date studios on the St. James river.

Could anybody but Wheeler Oakman look the other way when he's put right in a row with all these Fox girls? And right next to Alma Hanlon, too! Jose Collins is neutral, but see how Betty Schade has her eyes on him. Valaska Suratt has lost her head for the moment but Anna Luther is perfectly composed.

FOUR NEW TRIANGLES READY

Lillian Gish, William S. Hart, Frank Keenan, Enid Markey and Norma Talmadge Begin Work on New Features

The Fine Arts studio has been a busy place this last week and four new Triangle plays were completed and are now being prepared for an early release. The list includes:

"The Marriage of Molly-O," a comedy-drama starring Mae Marsh and Robert Harron; "The Devil's Needle," a melodrama presenting Norma Talmadge and Tully Marshall in the stellar roles, principally supported by Marguerite Marsh; "The Little Schoolma'am," written especially for Dorothy Gish, in which Elmer Clifton and Jack Brammall have prominent parts; and "The Old Player," showing De Wolf Hopper in a typical role, with Bessie Love playing opposite him.

Arthur Hansen, driving a Mercer in the interests of Thomas H. Ince's "Civilization," won the ten-mile event of the motor carnival held at Ascot Speedway for the benefit of the Actors' Fund of America.

The Fine Arts studio has secured the motion picture rights to Rupert Hughes' story "Daughters of Shiloh," and it is likely that Lillian Gish will play the stellar role.

Monte Katterjohn and Lanier Bartlett have just completed an unusual desert island story which has been turned over to Director Walter Edwards. The leading parts have been assigned to William Desmond and Dorothy Dalton.

William S. Hart with a company of fifty players has gone to a point on the International boundry line south of Elcentro for the filming of scenes in the new Triangle play which is of a military character.

Frank Keenan and Enid Markey will soon be seen as co-stars in "The Phantom" to be released on the Triangle program.

Norma Talmadge, who has added greatly to her popularity through her appearance in "Going Straight," has returned to the east and already begun work on the first of a new series of pictures she is to make in the Triangle studios at Riverdale.

Work has been started on another addition to the Culver City studio, a new receiving department. This will be a distinct building by itself of fireproof construction to harmonize with the other structures, and will measure 60 by 100 feet.

Norma Talmadge was honored by being officially designated Maid of Honor for the "Made in Jersey City Week" celebration being held there under the auspices of the Jersey City Chamber of Commerce. After the banquet in Grand View Auditorium Miss Talmadge held a reception and was the recipient of many "made in Jersey City" souvenirs.

Duty on Picture Machines Fixed

Judge Smith of the United States Court of Appeals fixed the status of moving picture machines in his decision of the case in which the American Express Company was the protestant, although it is understood the Pathe Freres Company, of New York and Paris, was the importer.

The merchandise in controversy was described on the invoices as "Pathescopes" and Collector Malone held that the machines were dutiable at 30 per cent as "frames for optical instruments."

This view was not approved, however, by the Board of General Appraisers which reversed the collector and ordered the moving picture machines admitted at the 25 per cent rate. The government then appealed to the court and the result was the fixing of the status of picture machines as coming under the 25 per cent rate.

"Ramona" in Chicago

Clune's big cinemaplay, "Ramona," opened at the Auditorium Theater in Chicago on the evening of June 19. Two performances are given daily. The spectacle is in 14 sections divided into a prologue and two acts, the whole being about ten reels in length. It was produced by Lloyd & Brown, and Donald Crisp.

The play is presented with three different stage settings and a fine musical score. The story is adapted from the novel by Helen Hunt Jackson and deals with the romantic early history of the Mission Indians in California. A large audience saw the first performance and seemed to enjoy it thoroughly.

Pathe Announces New Serial

"THE GRIP OF EVIL" ON THE FIVE MILLION DOLLAR PROGRAM

Affectionate scene from the first chapter of "The Grip of Evil."

J. A. BERST, vice-president and general manager of the Pathe Company, follows up his announcement of a five million dollar serial program with the statement that a powerful, new continued photoplay will be released on July 17, following the completion of "The Iron Claw" series. The new feature will be called "The Grip of Evil." The basic idea for this big serial was conceived by Le Monte Waldron, the picturization was made by Douglass Brunston and the novelization has been entrusted to Louis Tracy.

"The Grip of Evil" is neither a serial nor a series in the accepted sense of the words but has been described as "a master plot in fourteen chapters showing the real side of humanity." The greatest men of America have expressed their opinions on the question which is asked every man and woman and their thoughts will be presented on the screen for the benefit of people who see these pictures in which will be portrayed the ideas conceived by men whom they know personally or by both national and local reputation.

Pathe is the best advertised moving picture company in the world today and is spending more money every day for the right kind of publicity. Nearly a million and a half dollars has been spent in the advertising of features and five hundred thousand dollars will be expended in exploiting the serials now planned. The campaign on "The Grip of Evil" will be the most extensive of any yet instituted. Some of the papers that have already agreed to run the stories are:

Baltimore American, Albany Times Union, Atlanta Constitution, Buffalo Times, Butte Daily News, Cincinnati Times-Star, Cleveland Sunday Leader, Ohio State Journal, Dallas News, Denver Rocky Mountain News, Des Moines Register and Leader, Galveston News, Houston Chronicle, Los Angeles Record, Louisville Herald, New Orleans Sunday Item, Omaha Sunday Bee, Philadelphia North American, Pittsburgh Chronicle, Portland Telegram, Providence Tribune, Richmond Times Despatch, Rochester Photoplay News, Salt Lake City Telegram, St. Louis Times, San Francisco Daily News, Seattle Post Intelligencer, Wichita Beacon, and the Worcester Evening Post.

"The Grip of Evil" has been produced by the Balboa Amusement Producing Company, and the principal actors are Jackie Saunders and Roland Bottomley.

The story deals with John Burton, born a poor man, who later inherits millions. With his money comes unhappiness, and he sets out to solve the question: "Is Humanity in the Grip of Evil?" His quest for the answer takes him into every walk of life, society, politics, the underworld and what lies between. He bares the sins of mankind as seen in the palaces of the rich and the hovels of the poor in such a manner as to give to the photoplay in which his experiences are picturized every element that leads to popularity and success.

"Little Mary Sunshine" was such a success in her first feature that Pathe has contracted with the Balboa company for the exclusive services of the child in forthcoming Gold Rooster plays. The bear which was her playmate in her first success will probably appear in the new pictures. Henry King will again be her director.

G. L. Chanier, who was formerly connected with the Pathe exchange, and was one of its oldest employes, has returned to the company and accepted the position of general superintendent of factories. Mr. Chanier will have under his immediate supervision the factory in Bound Brook, the factory in New Jersey, the studio in Jersey City and the Pathe News department.

"Realism," said J. A. Berst, "is the essential quality in a picture and it was recognition of this fact which prompted Pathe to experiment in coloring films since by the use of natural colors realism is increased." The Pathe company felt that no film which it has released would lend itself more beautifully to this coloring than "A Matrimonial Martyr," produced by the Balboa Company because of the beauty of its photography and the full ripeness of its wonderful outdoor scenes. It was, therefore, sent to the Paris laboratories to be Pathecolored and the result endorses all efforts put upon it. This is a five-reel feature released June 19, in which Ruth Roland plays a double role. Andrew Arbuckle plays the matrimonial martyr.

The workman learns that he has inherited an earldom. Scene from the first installment of Pathe's new serial, "The Grip of Evil."

EXHIBITORS BUY TOGETHER

Meeting of Brooklyn Exhibitors Crystallizes Co-Operative Buying Plans—W. W. Irwin of V. L. S. E. Boosts Organization.

The Brooklyn Exhibitors' Association held their regular meeting on Thursday, June 15, at W. H. Kemble's Triangle Theater. Over one hundred prominent Brooklyn exhibitors are now members of this organization. President Manheimer opened the meeting, and introduced Commissioner of Weights Joseph Hartigan. The latter was quite enthusiastic about the exhibitors' plan of co-operative buying, and gave them some valuable advice on how they should make their purchases.

General Manager W. W. Irwin of V. L. S. E., was one of the guests. He made a stirring plea for the trade organization now in formation, pointing out to the exhibitors that it was their duty to themselves and to the industry to support the body, and naming the many advantages to be derived by them from such co-operation. Mr. Irwin stated that there is a growing spirit of confidence existing between the exchange, manufacturer, and exhibitor, and said that he felt that a national association such as the one proposed would weld the three branches of the industry together in a way which would be highly beneficial to all.

The various committees reported on their activities since the last meeting. Most interesting of these reports was the one from the committee appointed to negotiate the purchase of fifty thousand tons of coal. The estimates submitted up to the present time mean a saving of $25,000 on coal to the exhibitors. The committee has not yet closed up the contract, as the men feel that they can get a price which will increase this $25,000 saving to $30,000.

The committee appointed at the last meeting to take up a certain grievance with two manufacturers found, to the pleasure of the manufacturers present that the bulk of the blame rested with the exhibitors themselves. The complaint made was that certain manufacturers were enabling a non-member of the Brooklyn Exhibitors' Association to cut under his competitor's admission price by furnishing him film at a low cost.

It developed that the man under complaint was just in maintaining a lower scale of prices, because the exhibitor who filed the charge was giving away free tickets of admission. Both of the theater owners were present, and a lively debate ensued. At the close it was the opinion of those present that the complainant (a member of the Association) was in the wrong, and a committee was named to investigate his methods of competition, and see that he played the game fair. This little instance proves that the Brooklyn Exhibitors' Association is devoted to the best interests of the trade, and that wrong is wrong to them whether it exists inside or outside of their membership.

Among the other speakers in the open forum were C. R. Seelye of Pathé and Mr. Horn of the American Red Cross Society. The latter asked that publicity be given the Red Cross movement on the screens. Every exhibitor present promised to run slides and distribute literature in his theater for this charitable organization.

A big theater party was announced for the latter part of August, to be held at the Triangle Theater. The proceeds of this performance will go to the local organization's treasury.

The entire Brooklyn organization will do honor to Lee Ochs at a beefsteak dinner to be tendered to him on June 28 at the Brighton Beach casino.

After the meeting the men were entertained by the Triangle Theater management with luncheon and a smoker.

Signal Back From Honolulu

The Helen Holmes company of Signal players, under the direction of J. P. McGowan, have returned from Honolulu, where they have been for several weeks, making exterior scenes in the production of a five-reel feature entitled "The Diamond Runners."

The party left Los Angeles studios about the middle of May and took passage at San Francisco for the Hawaiias. By the aid of a dozen artificial lights which they took with them, they worked practically all of the way over, making scenes aboard ship, on deck and in the salons and staterooms. At Honolulu they remained several days before pushing on to Hilo, where they stayed until the sailing of their ship for San Francisco. At both Honolulu and Hilo they made interior and exterior scenes for their film and in addition made many exteriors in the forests and mountains for the same production.

Besides the work which the company did on "The Diamond Runners," they secured between four and five thousand feet of educational and Mutual weekly negative.

Practically the entire cast made the trip, including Helen Holmes, J. P. McGowan, Paul C. Hurst, Leo D. Maloney, Thomas G. Lingham, William Brunton, Chance E. Ward, Louella Maxam (loaned by the Keystone company for this one production), Jean Perkins and S. A. Sues, cameraman.

With Helen Holmes featured in the title role, the Signal Film Corporation this week began the production of a five-reel screen version of Alice MacGowan's southern novel, "Judith of the Cumberlands."

Mary Charleson with Selig

Miss Mary Charleson is the latest motion picture star to be engaged by William N. Selig to appear in Selig picture-plays. Miss Charleson arrived recently in Chicago from New York City, and immediately assumed a leading role in "The Prince Chap," now in course of production at the Selig Chicago studios.

New Method of Creating Big Drama

DIRECTOR BRENON FILLS "A DAUGHTER OF THE GODS" WITH LILTING RHYTHM

ONE day last year William Fox said to Herbert Brenon: "Herbert," or words to that effect, "I am going to let you make a picture starring Annette Kellermann. The sky is the limit."

Herbert St. John Brenon and Annette Kellerman in Jamaica during the making of "A Daughter of the Gods," the Fox spectacle. The encampment contains hundreds of Moorish soldiers.

"And what, may I ask," rejoined Herbert, "are the boundaries of the sky?"

"Exactly one million dollars," said Mr. Fox, gulping perhaps a little as he said it.

"One million dollars!" repeated Herbert. "But what shall I do? How shall I——"

"That," remarked Mr. Fox, "is more or less entirely up to you. You have talked Art to me until my dreams are a moving picture of Rembrandt, Corot and Rodin rolled into one. You have one million dollars. You have one year. Drop me a postcard occasionally!"

Herbert Brenon had worked for Mr. Fox exactly three months. He had a faint, unassuming notion that he had made good in a way. But he hadn't the slightest idea he weighed so much!

With Annette Kellermann and one million dollars performing some heavy trapeze stunts in his mind, he left the office for fresh air.

He wandered up Fifth avenue, New York, to the Metropolitan Art Museum. There he noticed a painting called "A Dream of the Arabian Nights." He immediately conceived a motion picture to which would be transferred the glamour and romance of Villegas's art. For days he studied Grecian, Roman, Egyptian, Indian, Arabian and other oriental architecture. For days he marveled at the wonderful expressiveness of Rodin's hand studies, at Rodin's character groupings. He studied sculptured anatomy. He applied himself to Winslow Homer for inspiration in the making of water pictures.

He analyzed Carl Muller for the anatomy of groups, Schreyer for horses and Arabian costumes. Definite, tangible scenes which are contained in his picture are directly traceable to others. Homer's "The Gulf Stream" suggested a realistic battle between natives and sharks. A composite of Cabanel's "The Birth of Venus," and Coypel's "Venus and the Sea Nymphs," is recorded in the opening scene. "Moonrise," by Frederick Church, is responsible for some remarkable glimpses of sea nymphs. "A North Easter," "Cannon Rock" and "Maine Coast," by Homer, found definite artistic niches in the story. To Charles T. Frere he gives credit for inspiring oriental cities and Arab encampments. "Beaching the Boat," by Joaquin Sarollay Bastida, was the instigator of a fleet of ancient vessels with great billowy sails. "The Surf," by Emil Carlsen, "Isle of Shoals," by Childe Hassam, and "The Waterfall," by Twachtman, all found definite places in his artistic scheme. Countless sketches were made and filed away for reference. Then Brenon dictated the story as it had formed in his mind to the accompaniment of music rendered by a pianist who plays a regular part in the Brenon payroll. Then Herbert embarked for Jamaica. With him went mermaids, chemical installations and construction material and apparatus by the veritable ton, and with him also went an orchestra. Excluding the close-ups, not a scene was undertaken without appropriate musical accompaniment. The entire 220,000 feet of film was done to four-four, six-eight or the swinging cadence of three-four time. There is rhythm in every foot and the picture fairly lilts along.

Brenon boiled down 220,000 feet of film, or 220 reels, to 10,000 feet, or ten reels. A stenographer with a pencil and pad under a shielded lamp took down notes as the cutting progressed. The net footage had by progressive stages dropped from 220 reels to 150, to 54, to 26, to 18, to 15, to 14. From fourteen reels to ten reels meant cutting that hurt. If you were a director you would know how it hurt. Many a good picture has been injured by supersensitiveness to this pain, too.

Thus Herbert Brenon applies the poetry of motion to the motion picture. Brenon believes that the true aim of the motion picture should be painting and sculpture in motion. Such was his object during his filming of "A Daughter of the Gods." It is all poetry.

An Egyptiancsque pose of Annette Kellerman, the noted "diving Venus," who is the luminary of the Brenon-Fox spectacle, "A Daughter of the Gods."

"Let the speaking stage monopolize the theatrical and the literary drama!" is his forcible remark.

That is a phase of the profession that has not occurred to many of Brenon's associates of the camera and the megaphone. And here is another bit of Brenon originality: "Ten years from now the motion picture theaters will be devoted to runs instead of weekly or daily releases."

The time was in Pittsburgh when Herbert Brenon, author and director of "A Daughter of the Gods" was so poor that he could not even die as a patriot in the service of his adopted country, the United States.

A few weeks ago, the Pittsburgh Dispatch stated that Brenon once had owned a picture theater in Johnstown, Pennsylvania, that he had once lived for a brief time in Pittsburgh and that another famous brother had been a noted critic of music and opera in Pittsburgh and elsewhere.

This friendly little effort of a newspaper to make a native son of a man who has grown powerful as a creator of motion picture spectacles brought a letter from Herbert Brenon to the Pittsburgh Dispatch in which he said:

I landed in the United States July 4, 1896, and was in Pittsburgh the next day. I earned my first American dollar in Pittsburgh in a real estate office. I was poor enough one Saturday night to sell socks at a bargain counter in one of your principal dry goods stores; and I nearly enlisted in the United States army in the Pittsburgh recruiting office, but I did not have the necessary dollar to take out my citizen papers.

The preliminary presentation of "Indiana," the historic motion picture filmed by the Selig Company to commemorate the history of Indiana as a state, was given in Indianapolis State House on Wednesday, June 7. A select audience was present, including the Indiana State Historical Commission, the governor of Indiana, members of his staff, and other state officials.

Billie Burke Floats

Experts aren't always as expert as they are presumed to be. The most carefully constructed, most expensive and elaborate mechanical apparatus sometimes "goes wrong." That this is true is most strikingly illustrated in the rather unusual "vision" scenes that mark chapter six of the new George Kleine motion picture novel, "Gloria's Romance," in which Billie Burke is the featured star.

Billie Burke in the "floating" costume she wears in "Gloria's Romance."

When the "vision" scene, in which Billie Burke floats in her dreams to the side of her lover, was decided upon it was determined that no "Little Eva going to Heaven" apparatus would do, for something quite out of the ordinary and unusually effective in the way of a "floating" body was sought. Accordingly some of the master magicians who were responsible for the "flying scenes" in such productions as the Russian ballet and the Hippodrome spectacles were engaged. They came with a small corps of workmen to manipulate the machinery and set up the apparatus in the studio.

Before Miss Burke trusted herself to the wire that was to enable her to fly, it was decided to "try it on the dog," just to be sure everything was right. A terrified camerman was selected as the victim. In a moment the poor youth was strapped into the apparatus and set free to "float." Float? Not a bit of it! He was intended to—yes—but instead he turned and twisted, spun and jerked along a few yards, then wavered and dipped like an intoxicated pigeon. It was the funniest spectacle ever seen and the beholders had hysterics. Billie Burke watched and laughed till her sides ached and thanked her lucky stars that she herself wasn't in that harness-like arrangement.

A flying apparatus was provided by the Kleine stage crew—the unsung, unpraised, obscure magicians who create such really wonderful illusions, and the "vision scene" as displayed on the screen in the completed picture is a triumph of mechanical genius. Billie Burke "floats" about like a bird. And audiences all over the country are going to "wonder how it was done!"

What exhibitors will undoubtedly term "pep," "snap" and "action" abound to a startling degree in chapter seven of the new George Kleine motion picture novel, "Gloria's Romance," featuring Billie Burke. In fact "The Harvest of Sin," which is the title of this seventh chapter, undoubtedly advances the story farther than have any two previous installments of the Hughes novel and will proportionately increase box office receipts at the theaters running it.

"Civilization" Breaks All Records

INCE MASTERPIECE OF WAR AND PEACE SOON TO BE PRESENTED IN CHICAGO RATHNER HAS STATE RIGHTS

One of the homely and powerful situations in Ince's "Civilization." Photoplay history has few scenes to surpass this one in human appeal.

"CIVILIZATION," Thomas H. Ince's multiple reel masterpiece, has established a new record practically since its premier. Seats have been placed on sale eight weeks in advance at the Criterion Theater, sixty additional chairs have been placed in the house, and it has been found necessary to absolutely dispense with the free list.

H. Rathner, manager of the Supreme Feature Film Company, has purchased state rights in six states for the Ince spectacle. The states selected are Minnesota, Wisconsin, Iowa, North and South Dakota and Montana. The price paid is not stated but Mr. Rathner said he expected to make a quarter of a million on the deal.

Victor L. Schertzinger, composer of the musical score for "Civilization," who has been conducting the orchestra at the Criterion Theater since the New York opening, has left for Chicago where he will conduct the premier at Cohan's Grand Opera House on June 30.

Owing to the tremendous success of his masterpiece Mr. Ince has found it necessary to take larger offices and increase his executive and publicity staffs. J. Parker Read, Jr., will continue to be Mr. Ince's general and personal representative in all business matters; Robert Grau will be manager of the national and international publicity campaigns; James Shesgrin has been appointed house manager for the Criterion Theater during the run of "Civilization"; and four of the best known publicity men in New York will be sent on tour ahead of the "Civilization" companies in the early fall. In charge of the New York publicity department is Beulah Livingstone and Elizabeth Marbury. J. L. Barnard has charge of the Chicago publicity.

Thomas H. Ince's determination to accomplish what he sets out to do at all hazards was tested to the utmost during the year and a half "Civilization" was in the making. Twice during this time Mr. Ince nearly lost his life. The first accident occurred while he was speeding from Inceville to Hollywood and his car turned turtle going up a hill. He was taken to the hospital with a broken arm and was laid up for six weeks but each day one or more of his assistant directors called and received his instructions regarding the changes in the scenes of the production. Shortly after his recovery occurred the big fire which partly destroyed Inceville. At this time Mr. Ince and three of his men were so badly burned that they were rushed to the hospital but all the doctors in California could not keep the producer in bed longer than a day and the next morning he was directing his men with both arms and one hand in bandages.

"Civilization" reveals war as it really is.

Exhibitors Furnish Talent

The Twin City Screen Club last week held a successful midnight entertainment for the benefit of the Actors' Fund of America. Exhibitors co-operated heartily in providing talent for the occasion. Director William Koenig put on 12 keen acts, as follows: Mayor Nye, Minneapolis, address; Lyric quartette, courtesy Lyric Theater; King Brothers, courtesy Unique; Catlin and King, courtesy Gayety; Grace Holcomb, courtesy Gayety; Beals and Flaig, courtesy Gayety; Ray L. Royce, courtesy Gayety; Edmund Kraus; Bennie Fields, courtesy Gayety; Rolph, courtesy Unique, and Stein, Hume and Thomas, courtesy Andy Campion, Unique. F. S. Meyer, T. E. Mortensen and William Koenig were in direct charge of the show and were assisted by four committees. A handsome program was issued for the occasion.

PARAMOUNT'S STAR PROGRAM

Pauline Frederick, Myrtle Stedman, Blanche Sweet and Donald Brian in Features—Farrar Discusses Music for the Films

Two features are announced for release on the Paramount program for the last week in June. Famous Players contributes "The World's Great Snare," featuring Pauline Frederick, ready on June 26, and Pallas offers "The American Beauty," starring Myrtle Stedman, released on June 29.

Short reels to be given to the public this same week are "Bobby Bumps' Fly Swatter," Earl Hurd's Paramount-Bray animated cartoon; the "Spreewald Near Berlin," in the Paramount-Holmes Travel Pictures; and the twenty-first release of the Pictographs, showing the "Training of a Lion," "Which Do You Remember?" in Hugo Munsterberg's "Testing the Mind" series, a jaunt to Coney Island and the picturizing of Montessori methods in the "Better Babies" release "Seeing With the Fingers."

The ancient mystery of the affinity between sand and spinach has been solved in the Paramount Pictographs feature "He Has a Good Job," in which a culinary expert was caught in the act.

Two five-reel features head the Paramount Pictures for the week of July 3, Blanche Sweet in the Lasky production "The Dupe," and Donald Brian featured by the Famous Players in "The Smugglers."

Short subjects which complete this week's program will be "Munich the Magnificent" in the Paramount-Burton Holmes Travel-Pictures; Paul Terry's drawing, "Farmer Al Falfa's Watermelon Patch" in the Paramount-Bray Animated Cartoons and the weekly release of the Paramount Pictographs.

Included in the index of this Pictograph edition will be "Weights and Measures," "Testing Your Mind; Memory for Numbers," by Professor Hugo Munsterberg, and more "Better Babies." Film novelties in the same issue will be "Assembling a Flivver" and "Boob Town New York," in which Gotham is picturized as the city where people are too busy to work.

Unusually effective sets of posters are being issued by the Paramount Pictures Corporation for distribution with single reel releases of the Philippine cruise shown by Burton Holmes and also for the Paramount-Bray animated cartoons and the Pictographs. These posters are being designed by some of the best artists in the country, among whom are Cory Kilvert and C. G. Anderson. The one-sheets are prepared under the direction of J. A. Thorn of the Paramount office.

Geraldine Farrar, the Lasky-Paramount star, points out the fact that film accompaniments offer a distinct field for the students of music. Miss Farrar claims that "anything which deepens the appreciation and increases absorption in the screen picture enhances its value.

"Here is a distinct field for the student of music—to search out and make available the musical settings which will add to the total value of motion pictures. In proportion as the music harmonizes with the theme of the scenario, the period, and the essential quality of the story, so will the art value of the whole be augmented."

No Picture House Near Church

Chicago has a city ordinance which prohibits moving picture houses within 200 feet of churches and schools. Sometime ago this eliminated the Harper Theater, on East Fifty-third street. The common council committee has refused several petitions for the reopening of the house and now comes up in the case the story that someone paid $500 to the law firm of Schuyler and Weinfeld with the idea of bringing about the closing of the theater. The Beach, an opposition house, denies any connection with the matter.

A delegation of women from the neighborhood of the Harper has presented a petition to the city council committee asking that the theater be allowed to re-open but this was denied. The committee has also taken steps to close any houses whose licenses have been granted since the passing of the 200-foot church limitation ordinance in 1911.

Vivian Rich in Dual Role

The combined efforts of Author Charles M. Peck and Director Carl M. LeViness offer Miss Vivian Rich a golden dramatic opportunity in the two-part "Flying A" drama, "The Gentle Conspiracy," in which Alfred Vosburgh and the famous character actor, George E. Periolat, have the supporting roles.

"The Gentle Conspiracy" is released by the Mutual on June 19.

Vitagraphs for Last of June

TWO FEATURES AND A COMEDY UNDER WAY

A THREE part Broadway star feature, "Letitia," heads the Vitagraph releases for the week of June 26. Belle Bruce plays the title role in this drama, supported by Charles Kent. Others in the cast are Hugh Wynne, Gordon Gray, Thomas R. Mills, Charles Wellesley and Frank Chapman.

Two single reel comedies on this same program are "Losing Weight," featuring Hughey Mack with Jewell Hunt and John Flatow as assistant funmakers, and "The Foxy Trotters," with George Kunkel, Anne Schaefer, Carmen Phillips, Jack Mower, Archie Warren and Vera Rowe.

Another Vitagraph Blue Ribbon feature will be released through the V. L. S. E. on June 26, "The Shop Girl." This is a five-part play in which Edith Storey and Antonio Moreno take the leading roles. This play is a picturization of C. N. and A. M. Williamson's novel of the same name and was directed by George D. Baker. The cast includes Lillian Burns, Thomas R. Mills, Josephine Earle, Harold Foshay, Templer Saxe and Edward Dunn.

The Kernel Nutt number for this same week is "Kernel Nutt in Mexico," in which Frank Daniels takes up the occupation of "banditting." Alice Washburn and Adele De Garde help the laughs along.

With Wally Van directing Earle Williams in "The Scarlet Runner;" S. Rankin Drew directing Anita Stewart in "The Girl Philippa;" and Lawrence Semon directing Hughey Mack in a comedy; four days of rain wrought havoc in the Vitagraph schedule. A great deal of out door work had been arranged to relieve the pressure for floor space in the studios—and then the rain descended. When the sun did shine the yard at the studio swarmed with automobiles and people, "props" and costumes, and everyone went to work with a will to overcome the loss of time.

Barney Bernard will next appear in a picture written especially for him by Senor Andres de Segurela, the celebrated baritone of the Metropolitan Opera Company. In this play Bernard will enact a double role depicting the contrasting characters of a grasping banker and a big-hearted pawnbroker.

Rollin S. Sturgeon, director-general of the western Vitagraph, has gathered 200 expert divers and swimmers to make realistic a shipwreck scene he is incorporating in a six-reel detective play by Cleveland Moffet. One of the largest liners of the Pacific coast will be used in the filming of these scenes.

Director Van Dyke Brooke is working on a Broadway star feature with Leah Baird in the leading role. Mr. Brooke also plays in the production with George Arvin, Jack Ellis and Harry Fisher. The picture will be released in three reels.

Anita Stewart is now working in a feature to be released the latter part of July. S. Rankin Drew is directing the play and Charles Wellesly, Frank W. Mann, Anders Randolf, Julia Swayne Gordon, Doc Donohue, Donald Mac Bride and Mr. Johnson appear in the cast.

S. Rankin Drew, director for Anita Stewart, has the distinction of being the youngest director employed in a motion picture studio. Mr. Drew is a nephew of John Drew and a son of Sidney Drew.

Director Eugene Mullin and his company of players headed by Evart Overton have returned to the Flatbush studios after a few days trip to Perth Amboy, New Jersey, where they have been filming exteriors for a coming Broadway star feature from the pen of James Oliver Curwood.

ANOTHER DOG STAR

Pathe's "Who's Guilty?" Series Has Developed a Canine Actor Who Rivals Any Other in the Game

A week ago MOTOGRAPHY nominated for the office of head dog star of the photoplay world Mr. A. M. Teddy. And now Pathe presents a rival actor who is touted as second to none—"a motion picture actor of stellar abilities." Here is his story. We leave you to cast your vote after you have seen this new candidate on the screen.

Don is only a dog. But he probably has been seen by a greater number of people than any dog in the world. For Don is a motion picture actor of stellar abilities. He is a three-year-old collie with a most intelligent face and an equally honest and brave heart.

Ever since he was a year old, Justus Barnes, Don's owner and trainer, has had him playing in pictures. For the last three months Don has been a member of the acting staff of the Arrow Film Corporation, which is producing the famous "Who's Guilty?" series of fourteen photo-novels for the Pathe Exchanges.

Mr. Barnes and Director "Larry" McGill of the Arrow Company got together recently while waiting for the sun to come from behind a cloud and tried to figure out Don's film mileage. In Pathe productions alone he has appeared in 118 scenes. These total about 5,500 feet of film negative. More than 100 positive prints, such as are used in motion picture theaters, have been made of each of these negatives.

Computed on that basis, not less than 550,000 feet of Don in action have been distributed by Pathe in the last three months alone. There are sixteen different and separate images to each foot of film, so that Don is seen in 8,880,000 different poses. More than 100 miles of film carry Don's image to the public. And yet Don is not the least bit stuck-up or temperamental about it.

His latest appearance is in "Truth Crushed to Earth," one of the newest "Who's Guilty?" photo-novels. In this picture Don gets his young master into a lot of trouble by attacking the little fellow—he is only a five-year-old-tyke—and causing the hero to chase him across a muddy field. The little fellow in his pursuit, goes headlong into an especially muddy spot and is instantly punished for getting himself so dirty.

When the lad's mother angrily rebuked the boy for getting himself so dirty—of course this was all for the purposes of telling the story of "Truth Crushed to Ealth"—Don barked as angrily at her as she did at her son. He jumped around making a great to-do over the affair and Director McGill and Trainer Barnes had a difficult job persuading Don that this part of the performance was as much acting as his own part in leading the boy to the puddle.

NEW PLAYERS FOR PALLAS

Dustin Farnum to Make Cross-Continent Trip—Grace Carlyle, Walter Frederick and Pomeroy Cannon Join Cast

Dustin Farnum, the popular Pallas-Paramount star, is planning to make a cross-continent automobile tour starting at the most southwesterly point, San Diego, and going to one of the most northeasterly, Bucksport, Maine, his home town, where he will spend his summer vacation. Mr. Farnum will start upon the trip as soon as "The Parson of Panamint," which is now being produced at the Pallas studios, is completed. He is planning to deliver the first print of this picture to Carl H. Pierce, head of the New York office. It is understood that he will be accompanied by Tom Kennedy, the well-known pugilist. Many stops will be made as motion picture men all along the route are planning big receptions for the star.

Grace Carlyle, well known to followers of both the legitimate stage and the screen, has become affiliated with the Oliver Morosco Photoplay Company at Los Angeles, and will make her debut in Rita Jolivet's new feature "An International Marriage," a forthcoming release on the Paramount program. Prior to her appearance on the screen Miss Carlyle attained considerable success on the speaking stage playing with Ethel Barrymore, Hattie Williams, Rose Stahl, John Drew and Elsie Ferguson.

The most recent acquisitions to the Pallas roster of players are Walter S. Frederick and "Doc" Pomeroy Cannon, neither of whom needs any introduction to the motion picture public. Mr. Frederick comes to Pallas from the New York Motion Picture Company, and prior to his screen appearance played on the speaking stage for twenty-two seasons in stock, comic opera and vaudeville. "Doc" Cannon also had a varied experience on the stage and has appeared in screen characterizations for the Fine Arts Company. Mr. Cannon is now enacting an important role with Dustin Farnum in "The Parson of Panamint."

A number of the prop buildings and sets used in the last production are being torn down to make room for several large exterior sets for "Nell of Thunder Mountain," starring Vivian Martin.

Birth Control Film

"The Unborn" is the title of a new five-reel feature which has just been completed.

The theme of this picture is a timely one dealing as it does with a much advertised subject—birth-control. The story is by G. Eliot, Jr., and embodies a gripping visualization of life as it exists today in every large city. Kulee Features, Inc., of 220 West 42nd street, New York City, are the sponsors.

Freuler in Chicago

John R. Freuler, president of the Mutual Film Corporation, recently spent a week in Chicago, looking into the affairs of the Mutual in the middle west territory.

A picturization of "Where Love Is," a novel of London studio life by William J. Locke, is being produced at the Thomas A. Edison, Inc., motion picture studios in New York with Ann Murdock, the famous Frohman star, in the leading feminine role. The production will be in five reels and, beside Miss Murdock, it will present Henry Stanford, a former Belasco star and a noted actor.

"Dusty" Farnum, Pallas-Paramount planet, who expects to meteor across the continent via gasoline.

International Begins Castle Feature

TWO HERRIMAN CARTOONS READY FOR RELEASE IN JULY

SOME new faces are soon to be seen on the screen under the brand of the International Film Service, Inc., which bid fair to become very popular. They are Maude, the educated mule, Krazy Kat, Ignatz and Si, all of whom are well known to the public when smiling from the "funny page" of the New York Journal.

George Herriman, the director of these new players, has completed two animated cartoons for release July 3, "A Tempest in a Paint Pot" and "Maude, the Educated Mule," in which all of these ludicrous but intensely human children of the Herriman mind appear, and they grow funnier with each release.

The Wharton brothers, of Ithaca, have probably produced more feature series than any other one company and are therefore competent to speak authoritatively on the subject. In discussing the production of "The Mysteries of Myra," Leopold Wharton says:

"The average layman, and even the most rabid 'movie fan' does not seem to realize that every episode of the 'Myra' series is authentic, and both author and producer have striven not only for realism but for authenticity.

"Some idea of our task in producing 'Myra' may be gained from the fact that nearly every piece of film used in this picture has to be run through the camera twice—this on account of the double exposure work necessary. It is almost like producing two pictures at once, only it is a lot more trouble.

"This double exposure work, together with levitation effects where one body is seen to leave another and travel out of a window or door, through space and down the wall of a building, involves infinite time and patience. One levitation scene in 'Myra,' required a derrick—to do the lifting—and all of one day's time of director, camera man, actors, and helpers—all this for one single scene."

The Whartons have made a special study of lighting effects and have the dimming process figured out to a nicety. Their studios are unique in many ways, and are probably the only indoor studios employing no violet ray lights—being equipped with 1,000 watt Mazdas throughout. For two weeks before the making of the first scenes the Wharton cameramen experimented with double exposures and lighting effects and the perfection attained is demonstrated in the scenes of "The Mysteries of Myra."

Nelson B. Edwards, staff cameraman of the Hearst News Pictorial, stationed with the Turkish army at Constantinople, has taken some remarkable photographs showing the Turkish infantry in the field. He has also secured the first motion pictures ever produced of the Sultan of Turkey and ruler of Islam. Also he has photographed General Liman Von Sanders, German military advisor to the Ottomon Empire, Field Marshal Von Mackenson reviewing the Turkish troops, Enver Pasha, commander-in-chief of the Turkish armies, and many characteristic action pictures of other dignitaries of the Ottoman government. All these will appear in the current releases of the Hearst International News Pictorial.

Ariel Varges is another cameraman in the midst of the battlefields in the interest of the Hearst News Pictorial, and bears the distinction of being the only representative of an American film concern in the Balkans. Mr. Varges has been allowed to go about freely with the Serbian army and has moved among the English and French lines as well and so has been enabled to obtain some most interesting and unique photographs. His lens has recorded some vivid pictures of the great German drive, the desperate Serbian retreat and the activities of the allied armies at Saloniki.

Irene Castle has returned from her flying trip to England, where she went to bid goodbye to Mr. Castle, who leaves for the front immediately as a member of the Royal British Flying Corps. While in England the Castles danced for the queen, but were unable to fly together in Mr. Castle's aeroplane as the rules of the flying corps forbade this.

The title for the first Irene Castle picture for the International has not been announced but work has already begun on it. Mrs. Castle is not a stranger to the screen as she has danced for the camera many times and also has appeared in "The Whirl of Life."

Mrs. Castle is very enthusiastic about the pictures, but says she prefers drama to comedy. Upon her return from England the dancer was presented with the Hearst trophy awarded the motion picture actress receiving the most votes at the recent exposition of the Motion Picture Board of Trade at Madison Garden. That the new star is very popular with the moving picture public was also shown at the Allied Bazaar held at the Grand Central Palace, New York, where her photographs were in such demand that hurry calls were sent to the International studio for more. The pictures were auctioned off to the highest bidder and some of the sums paid were fabulous.

All colors, races and creeds worked together for a common cause and all racial antipathy and hatred was forgotten by the cast of "The Mysteries of Myra" in which are represented thirteen distinct nationalities. DIXON SPECTACLE POPULAR

"Fall of a Nation" to Be Presented in Los Angeles and Chicago and Touring Companies Sent Out

"The Fall of a Nation," which is beginning its fifth week at the Liberty Theater, New York, has come to be generally known as "The Play of All Nations." This play is attracting all classes and all nationalities and it is a truly cosmopolitan audience which fills the theater at each performance. The third act seems to be especially popular with the audience and great enthusiasm is shown at the thrilling scene where the American woman takes her place beside the American man to drive the imperial conqueror from the shores of the United States.

The players, Lorraine Huling, Flore MacDonald, Arthur Shirley, Paul Willis, Leila Frost and the youngsters Beulah Burns and May Giroci have become great favorites. Miss MacDonald has been especially praised in her unusual emotional role. Victor Herbert's patriotic score is also very popular.

Preparations have been begun for a country-wide exploitation of this patriotic spectacle and within three months it is planned to have it showing in every large city in the country and several touring companies with complete orchestra will be sent out.

The first production outside of New York was made at Clune's Auditorium, Los Angeles, June 19. The Illinois Theater, Chicago, will house "The Fall of a Nation," starting July 3. Mr. Dixon is especially pleased at his success in obtaining the Illinois Theater as it was there that "The Birth of a Nation" had such a long engagement. The desires for bookings of this spectacle are so numerous in the south that four companies are projected for the territory south of the Mason and Dixon line.

Thomas Dixon, immediately upon his arrival in Los Angeles, went into conference with his chief photographer, William C. Thompson, who reported the success of several experiments he has been making. Mr. Thompson got his start in the chemical laboratories at Columbia University. After obtaining his degree his work attracted so much attention that he was admitted to the American Chemical Society and other organizations of scientists. His new methods of improving photography and making prints will be awaited with interest.

Flora MacDonald, who created the part of Angela Benda in "The Fall of a Nation," has offered to enlist in Miss Candace Hewitt's preparedness camp at Camp Hewitt, Erskine, N. J. Miss MacDonald expresses her belief that actions speak louder than words and offers her natural and several months acquired training which she received under the supervision of a retired army officer while making the battle scenes for the patriotic masterpiece.

Smoothing Out the Picture Performance

Theaters usually experience a more or less confusing exodus and reseating at the end of pictures, when a larger proportion of those who have arrived during the progress of a theme, are prone to "hold over" their seats clear through the entire subsequent run, in order to clear up the tangled mysteries; immediately following which, there is a grand rushing out and in, especially during rush hours. The management is the loser by all such as hold their seats over on account of having thus been interrupted during such confusions, as every seat thus unnecessarily held is keeping back others.

It is a fact that many managers permit their operators to rush upon the screen the next succeeding picture, immediately during seething confusions to the annoying disgust and disappointment of their patrons. The Vallen system of curtain manipulation precludes this.

The first arriving auditors, instead of seeing the screen, are greeted by a handsomely painted "faraway" back scene or a pair of attractive fabric draperies, according to the taste of the management—or both, as at the Chicago Strand, where these are intermittently shown between plays.

Coincident with the starting of the reel, the operator also pulls this new curtain manipulating switch, located within his booth, which causes the draperies to quickly but gracefully glide apart, without the customary awkward "flip flopping" back lash caused by the hand over hand stage employe's manipulation.

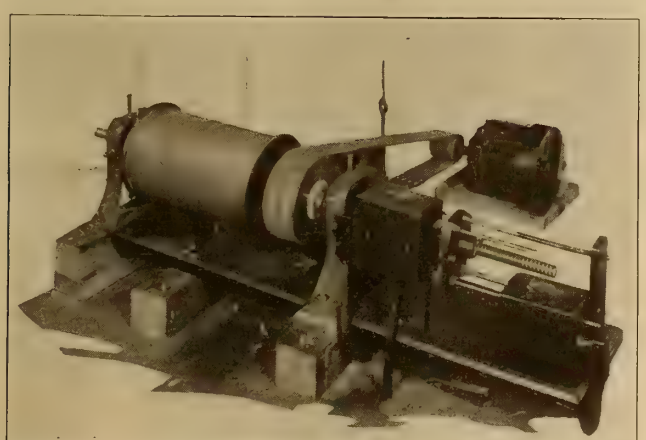
This permits the opening title film to first flash upon the withdrawing draperies, as well as upon the gradually appearing screen for the brief period of from three to four seconds, by which time said curtains shall have reached the limit of their opening, when the current is automatically cut off, thereby stopping the machine at the same time and automatically reversing the field of the motor by Vallen's ingenious system of specially invented switches, and other mechanical apparatus.

Just as the final reel is approaching its "finis" another touch of the same switch causes the machine to wind in an opposite direction, by reason of the aforesaid changed field, thereby again gracefully drawing the curtains over the closing picture, and again reversing the field of the motor all ready for again repeating the entire process at will.

Coincident with the withdrawal of the curtains to expose the starting of picture, the lights are also automatically switched gradually by means of a rheostadt in connection with this automatic machine; while in reverse order the houses are again automatically relighted with a crescendoing effect at the close of each picture play, for the purpose of accellerating the exodus and reseating of the house, which can the more readily be accomplished in the lighted house than in the dark.



The Vallen shifting device is in use among others in the Strand Theaters of Chicago and Akron, Ohio. It is inexpensive, fire proof and uses a direct current.

A Film for Tiny Tots

Grown-ups who have forgotten how to understand dolls will perhaps enjoy "A Toyland Robbery" as much as the children. At any rate Universal has made in this little doll drama a story which is bound to appeal to youngsters, particularly to those of tender years who still associate with dolls as with fellow beings in a strange earth rather than as playthings.

The film runs nine minutes but the lead states that it took three weeks to photograph it as it is composed of 9,000 separate photographs, and someone had to pose the sawdust actors each time for the next tiny segment of film.

"A Toyland Robbery" is one of the few films adapted for very young children. Even if they can't read the captions, put in for prosaic grown-ups, they will eagerly live this story with the dolls.

"FAUST" TO BE FILMED

Famous Old Grand Opera to Be Picturized by California Motion Picture Corporation—Beatriz Michelena as the Immortal Marguerite

With the final scenes of Beatriz Michelena in "The Woman Who Dared" completed, announcement is made by the California Motion Picture Corporation that it now has in preparation a pretentious adaptation from the opera "Faust" and that Miss Michelena is playing the role of Marguerite.

Beatriz Michelena as Marguerite in a California Pictures Version of "Faust."

It has frequently been intimated that Beatriz Michelena contemplated this characterization for the screen, for it was known that when she came to pictures from the opera, where she was recognized as one of America's most celebrated prima donnas, she brought with her a decided longing to see "Faust" adequately done in film. The idea has stayed with her and grown in its details until the forthcoming production is to be the result.

This adaptation by the "California" people should be a notable one and well in keeping with their present attempt toward something out of the ordinary in the picture-producing art. No role could be better suited to Miss Michelena's beauty and emotional powers as a screen actress than "Marguerite."

This will be the first time that "Faust," the greatest of all the opera stories, has been done in pictures with an artist of recognized fame and ability in a leading role. Linked with Beatriz Michelena's name and beauty, it is impossible to anticipate the full scope of the production's possibilities.

Kathlyn Adventures Into Sea

Kathlyn Williams, the Selig star, and Charles Eyton, one of the owners of the Oliver Morosco Photoplay Company, were married June 3 at Riverside, California. The marriage was a culmination of a romance which began ten years ago in Utah City, when Miss Williams was a member of the Willard Mack stock company playing there, and Mr. Eyton was a representative of the Morosco Company.

presenting several interesting moments and the production, barring a few slips in the direction, is splendid.

The settings have realness and the photography entirely good. The Horkheimer studios turn out excellent double exposure effects. The double exposures in this picture live up to the standard set in the last few Horkheimer productions we viewed.

The romance tells of a rich young man who looks forward with no pleasure to the intended visit of his aunt and his cousin. Matrimony is the main factor in this visit to Morril's seaside home. While thinking of some way out of his difficulty a remarkable opportunity presents itself to Morril. The burglar who enters his house is his double and Morril proposes to leave him in charge of the house during Aunt Mary's stay. The burglar is agreeable, so Morril, clad in the tramp outfit, leaves the house.

Outside he meets the girl newspaper reporter, who is in league with the burglar because she wants a story out of the proposed robbery. Morril carries her off with him and together they flee from the watchman in a motor boat. Stranded on an isolated island they soon develop a high regard for each other and when they reach his home, which is a number of days later, their minds are made up; shortly they will be married. The burglar has a pleasant and an unpleasant time as the master of the house. He does pretty well until the night of the reception given by Aunt Mary. On this occasion he takes too much to drink and Morril arrives just in the nick of time, as it were.

Mr. Mayo's double performance is rendered in his best style and the girl reporter is interesting as played by Miss West. Jimsy Mayo and Ruth Lakaye are the cousin and aunt respectively.

"The Return of John Boston"

Three-Reel Lubin Drama Released June 29. Reviewed by Genevieve Harris

PROBABILITY has been sacrificed in this release in order to build up a situation. And like most situations founded on improbabilities, it is not as effective as it might be. The play moves slowly during the first two reels, but the acting of George Routh in the leading role and the interesting events in the third reel help to make it an average program offering.

Routh plays Gordon Edwards, a struggling author. He goes from failure to success by the simple expedient of adopting a nom de plume. His work, rejected when signed Gordon Edwards is accepted when attributed to "John Boston," an improbability at the beginning of the play.

Edwards, one day in his rambles, saves a young man from suicide and gives him a position as his secretary. He warns him to keep the identity of "John Boston" a secret. Later, when society wishes to do honor to "John Boston," Edwards sends the young secretary, Williams, in his place. Williams falls in love with a society girl, Edith Bates, who believes him the real author. Then, at a summer resort, Edith Bates and Edwards meet, but Edwards knows Edith, who is an amateur painter, only by the name of "Miriam Lee," the name she signs to her paintings. Although the two are in love, they are separated through one of those tricks of fate, elaborately explained but not convincing. Edwards goes abroad as a war correspondent under his own name, is injured and reported killed. His secretary continues to play the role of "John Boston," even to exhausting the author's bank account. Finally Edith, believing the man she really loves dead, agrees to marry him. But Edwards, recovering from injury, returns just in time to stop the deception and to marry Edith himself.

The photography, especially of the war scenes, is good. The cast of players supporting Routh includes Golda Madden, Millard K. Wilson, Jack Byrne and Adelaide Bronti. The story, written by Millard K. Wilson, was directed by Jack Byrne under the supervision of Captain Wilbert Melville.

"The Wasted Years"

Mutual Masterpicture. Produced by Horsley. Reviewed by Thomas C. Kennedy

IN this drama there is a wealth of good material and while it cannot be said that the best of all of it has not been realized, "The Wasted Years" presents Crane Wilbur in one of the best pictures he has appeared in of late. The title could be truer to the development of the play. The character around whom the story revolves made one grevious error, but his deeds thereafter would seem to compensate, and we do not feel that years were wasted.

The story contains much that is admirable and that it is not even stronger must be charged up to the poor handling it received by the scenario writer. The main story is told in the reverse fashion. In the prologue the spectator is confronted by an old, poorly dressed man. This man visits a theater and on the stage there is a drama enacted which resembles his own youthful life. It is probable that the play itself is not the one the spectator sees, because in that event there are several incongruities. It is more likely that one sees the visualized thoughts of the old man as he watches the drama.

Of course, there should be no doubt as to what one sees, but in this story there is and this is one of the faults.

Harry Weatherby lives in a country town and he becomes engaged to a pretty girl who works in the millinery store. He is summoned to the city and upon arriving there is astonished to learn that he is now wealthy, the heir of his uncle's rich estate. He becomes a victim of the white lights. One night while under the influence of liquor he marries an adventuress. This naturally separates him from the girl back home.

After a few months Harry is deserted by his wife, who is soon to be a mother. Years he spends in a vain search for the child. Finally he meets his little daughter and taking all his holdings with him, he and the little girl go in search of the girl he was once betrothed to. But happiness is not to be his, for June is now married and after traveling about with the child as a gypsy Little Pal dies, a victim of the White Plague.

Despite some inconsistencies and the confusion the setting for the main story causes, "The Wasted Years" is a continuously interesting picture. Fundamentally the play is strong enough to divert mental argument and compel attention. And if it is interesting and entertaining, it is a good picture. Mae Gaston, Jessie Burnett and little Thelma Salter are members of the cast who deserve praise. George Broadwell produced "The Wasted Years" and he produced it in a highly capable manner.

"The Man Behind the Curtain"

V. L. S. E. Melodrama With Lillian Walker. Reviewed by Thomas C. Kennedy

WELL produced and acted, "The Man Behind the Curtain" is a melodrama embodying the element of human interest to a degree which makes the picture seem assured of success with most audiences. As implied by the title, "The Man Behind the Curtain," is a mystery story, but only to a small extent is this so, for the main action follows the fortunes of the girl who is innocent and her innocence of the crime committed by an unseen hand in the early scenes of the picture is known to the spectator. It is the struggle with the suspicion which falls upon her which makes the real basis for the story.

Though drawn beyond its own limitations to make up five reels, the sympathy Lillian Walker centers in the leading character and a number of well presented dramatic situations enliven and give spirit to a story that might otherwise be dull. Where the play drags the spectator's interest has the acting to fall back on and the result is that "The Man Behind the Curtain" will in all probability take its place with the popular offerings on the V. L. S. E. program.

Miss Walker has a highly emotional role to portray. She is Edna Hall, the girl who enters the home of a society woman in search of a position as secretary. To her amazement she finds Mrs. Stanhope lying dead on the floor. Mrs. Stanhope was stabbed by the hand of an unseen person and robbed of a valuable pearl ring. A man steps from behind the curtain and tells Edna that while he believes her innocent she will have a hard time proving her case to the police and advises her to flee. The girl leaves the house hurriedly.

Later Edna meets a young man named Leland, whom she marries shortly after. She is surprised to learn that her husband is the son of the murdered woman by her first husband and that he believes the girl who visited his mother on the fatal day guilty of the crime. His butler was interested in the robbery and he created this impression with both his employer and the police. Through a series of circumstances the fact that Edna is the mysterious girl becomes known to Leland and he at once orders her to leave him. The girl finally locates the Mr. Gardner who told her to flee and he is forced to confess his guilt, and Leland and Edna are reunited.

C. J. Van Deusen directed the production and the story is by Minnie Krakauer. Evart Overton plays the leading male part well and the heavy role is rendered effectively by William Dunn. Templer Saxe is the butler and John Costello as Mr. Stanhope complete the cast. The settings are good and so, too, is the photography.

"East Lynne"

William Fox Five-Reel Drama Featuring Theda Bara. Reviewed by Genevieve Harris

THE combined popularity of the story "East Lynne," and of the actress, Theda Bara, assures beyond a doubt the success of this offering. The very large number of people who have read the book will enjoy seeing it picturized in the pleasing fashion in which this company has arranged it, while the admirers of Miss Bara will be interested in her work in a sympathetic role.

There is little cause for adverse criticism on the manner of presentation. The story is clear even to one who has not read the book or seen the stage play. But in the main, the directors have taken it for granted that the story is well known and have shown as many scenes from it as possible, rather than giving long explanations. A number of subtitles given are taken from the text of Mrs. Henry Wood's book. The scenes are effectively presented, special advantage being taken of the introduction of the children. The youngsters who play the roles are allowed to romp through as many scenes as possible and their appeal to the audience with which the writer viewed the picture was marked.

Theda Bara's acting in the role of Isabel is thoroughly satisfactory. The part gives her an opportunity for more lightness and variety than she usually displays. The restraint shown in depicting the emotional scenes is particularly commendable.

Stuart Holmes gives his usual excellent portrayal of a villain. Captain Levison, in this story. Barbara Hare is well presented by Claire Whitney. The balance of the supporting cast, all very good, includes W. H. Tooker, Eugenie Woodward, Stanhope Wheatcroft and Ben Deeley, the latter as Archibald Carlisle, Isabel's husband. Loel and Eldean Stewart appear as the children. Mary Murillo adapted the story for the screen, and Bertram Bracken directed the production.

In brief, the story tells of a young woman whose distrust of her husband leads her to leave him and her two children. Later she is reported killed in a wreck and the husband marries again. The report is false, but she is willing that her husband believe it. Later, however, her longing to see her children leads her to apply for a position as their governess. She is disguised and is not recognized. The boys falls ill and when he calls for his mother, Isabel throws aside her disguise. When the boy dies the identity of Isabel is discovered, but she also dies. There are a murder mystery, an unjust accusation, a train wreck and a number of other complications in the story.

"The Deserter"

Triangle-Ince Western Drama Is Spectacular. Reviewed by Thomas C. Kennedy

SOME of the most spectacular Indian battle scenes ever incorporated in a five-reel picture are to be found in "The Deserter," which comes from the Ince studios. That many of the scenes were directed by Thos. Ince is plainly evident, for they have the bigness which he so skillfully imparts to ensemble effects.

The thrills afforded by daring horse riding and the beauty and reality of the long expansive views of an Indian attack on a band of pioneers crossing the desert are the principal portions of the picture. They asume the lead over a story which tells of a young army officer who in moments of haste and temper commits two offenses. The first causes him to be held for trial before a court martial and the second and most serious is his desertion.

The story is by Richard V. Spencer and Mr. Ince. Its greatest point lies in the opportunities it presented for spectacular production and that these were utilized so well will account for the popularity "The Deserter" seems bound to win. It would be well if some of the scenes following the girl's mourning over the bier of the dead hero were eliminated. The funeral procession is big and all that sort of thing, but really the scene is anti-climactic in the broadest sense of the word.

Charles Ray gives a fine characterization as Lieutenant Parker. After deserting the army in preference to facing the disgrace of a court martial, he wanders the desert until exhausted and is rescued by some travelers. They are attacked by the Indians and he makes the sacrifice of riding to the post to obtain aid for the women and children. He arrives at the fort in a dying condition and though recognized, the heroism of his act causes the authorities there to dispense with all formalties, even to striking out the line "deserted" in his record and according honorable burial.

The other characters are well interpreted by Rita Stanwood, Wedgwood Nowell, Hazel Belford and Jos. J. Dowling. The photography is excellent and altogether "The Deserter" is impressive. Its spectacular effects and thrilling action make it so.

"Destiny's Toy"

Louise Huff Featured in Famous Players-Paramount Comedy-Drama. Reviewed by Thomas C. Kennedy

WRITTEN and directed by John O'Brien, the latest Famous Players offering tells a very human story smoothly. "Destiny's Toy" is an agreeable picture. The charm of this picture may be traced more directly to the skill of the director than to the story, for while the play is sympathetic and its construction good, aside from the ending there is little if anything of note contained in it. But the play was written for the screen and added to this is the fact that the author had the advantage of producing it.

"Destiny's Toy" is a screen play. One does not have to imagine the characters as speaking certain lines to appreciate the dramatic effect, nor does one ever feel that a novelist's description of the characters would help the play along.

Louise Huff has at her command all that is necessary to make the central character strongly appealing. She brings to the part good looks, personality and acting ability. Cinderella roles are not for all good actresses by any means. Plenty of good actresses have tried them and failed and any number of them continue to try and continue to fail. Having seen Miss Huff play parts of a different stamp altogether quite admirably we were agreeably disappointed by her performance as Nan, for somehow or other we were of the opinion that she did not belong in that style of part. In this picture she is thoroughly commendable.

The story is that of a little girl, the daughter of a wealthy man, who is saved from a shipwreck in which her mother loses her life. The girl is brought up by a half-wit fisherman and upon his death she wanders off to the city and becomes the tool of a band of crooks. The young clergyman adopted by her father carries on his friendship with her in the face of his foster father's opposition and the gossip of the parishioners, but a scar on her arm is the means of causing her father to recognize her as his daughter.

The ending is particularly pleasing. It is quite novel as there is none of the usual gush and sentimentality. In this closing scene the close-up is splendidly used. John Bowers is the minister, J. W. Johnston the father and Harry Lee is the fisherman, and all three are excellent. Others in the cast are, Kate Lester, Florence Johns, Mary Gray, John Dillon and Tammany Young who as one of the crooks, as usual, makes the part stand out. The photography is especially noteworthy. Much of the charm of this offering is the result of the pretty settings and splendid photography.

ture of this Rolfe-Metro offering produced by George A. Lessey. A stage comedian who is justly popular, Ralph Herz individually does much to make "The Purple Lady" interesting. His facial expression registers well and his acting, notably in the "morning after" scene, will provoke smiles. In this scene as in many of the others everything is up to him.

The main character in the play is a member of an uplift society who is continually being embarrassed by a dancer with whom he flirted a bit and one of those pearl necklaces the comic opera playwright introduces to the public with such remarkable regularity, and without even a blush, which is still more remarkable. The story as a matter of fact is not well suited to the screen, but Ralph Herz and his supporting company give good performances and "The Purple Lady" may truthfully be said to be pleasant. In a drama if some of the scenes fall as flat as some do in this picture, the result would be painful but with comedy it is different. One can forget the play, most fortunately, and still find pleasure in the acting, which in the case of this picture, is very good.

Herz is Silas Gilworthy who is engaged to an heiress. He visits a notorious cafe with some of his associates in the uplift society to observe conditions there. The dancer, Fifi Melotte, is urged by the proprietor to make the acquaintance of the leader of the reform invasion and influence him to quiet the protests of the society. Silas takes Fifi to Coney Island and among other things they visit a picture gallery, the picture is left in Fifi's care, and the pearl necklace, sought by the police, is left in Silas' pocket. The rest of the story concerns itself with the endeavors of Fifi to get the necklace and Silas to get the incriminating photograph.

Irene Howley is Fifi, Alan Hale is the Count and Gretchen Hartman, George Pauncefote and Guido Colucci are prominent in the picture. The settings are good and the photography satisfatory.

"Casey at the Bat"

DeWolf Hopper in Triangle-Fine Arts Comedy-Drama. Reviewed by Thomas C. Kennedy

DE WOLF HOPPER'S rendition of the famous poem, "Casey at the Bat," has taken its place along with feature honors at many a notable occasion in theatrical circles and now his screen portrayal of a bat-swinging Casey, suggested by the poem comes along to add luster to that favorite account of a hero who came, saw, but conquered not. William Everett Wing is the author of the scenario based on the poem. The poem tells us that Casey failed but that is all, so this film play sets out to tell why, and it makes Casey a real hero; a ball player who fanned in the ninth with two on bases and was glad he did it.

It is rather thin material to build a five-reel story on, but here it has been done quite well. There is a lot of baseball in the story and it may consequently be termed a play with a national spirit. Anybody who has ever been interested in the welfare of a local ball team can appreciate full well the many life-like touches embodied in this picture. Mr. Hopper's characterization is stronger in the more seriously human qualities than it is in comedy. There is much real heart interest and some mirth in the play.

The Casey of the picture is a clerk in the grocery store. He greatly admires the town heiress, but of course Casey never tells anybody that. The neighboring town's team fears only Casey, who stands up to the plate and bats with the sweeping, nicely timed swings of a natural hitter. A youth who has made a glorious record at college as a pitcher returns to Frogtown and there is much rejoicing, for in him the supporters of the team see the solution of their biggest baseball problem, which is Casey.

The heiress of Mudtown is in love with the Frogtown pitcher and the only thing standing between their marriage is two thousand dollars, which her father insists the youth must show him before his consent will be granted. Then Casey's little niece is ill and the last game threatens to go on without him because he will not leave the bedside of the child. At the last moment he arrives at the field, and bearing in mind the fact that the pitcher and the girl's happiness depend upon Frogtown's victory the mighty Casey strikes out. Lloyd [illegible]ham gave the piece the best of direction. Marguerite Marsh is a charming heiress and Frank Bennett is her sweetheart, the pitcher. He has the worst delivery we ever saw a good pitcher have, but in all other respects the college boy commends himself to praise. The rest of the cast is good. A number of good types are to be found among the people who appear in the picture.

trustworthy vessel in order to get the insurance. Harry Von Meyer is cast as the owner, John Grimes, the most powerful man in the village. Grimes has a worthless son, Stephen, played by George Field. Stephen and Will Dunbar, a young fisherman, played by Edward Coxen, are rivals for the love of Doris, a village girl (Lizette Thorn). Doris prefers Will but is afraid to antagonize Stephen because of the prestige of his father.

Grimes plans to send out "The Dolphin," a heavily insured but dangerous ship. The people are suspicious and Grimes has a hard time getting a crew. At last he decides to complete the number by shanghaing a number of men. Among those chosen is Will. Doris learns of the plot through an old sailor. She has no time to warn Will, but she makes an appointment that night with Stephen. As she planned, the men mistake the owner's son for Will and take him aboard the ship. The vessel is lost in the storm. Will wins Grimes' favor by his efforts to save his son, but it is in vain. The fate Grimes meant for Will befalls his own son.

The cast of players includes Perry Banks and Clarence Burton. Thomas Ricketts is the director, Anthony Coldewey the author.

"The Sacrifice"

Selig Three-Reel Drama Released June 26. Reviewed by Genevieve Harris

THE individual tragedies of war are very sincerely typified in this release. The story is simple and unpretentious, but very sad. It is a vivid presentation of the grief of a woman who sacrifices her husband and then her son on the battlefield. Eugenie Besserer has the leading role of Mrs. Warrington, and her work is notable for its restraint and effectiveness. The picture is one which will arouse thought as well as stir the emotions.

There is a little complication in the plot, which is told in a straightforward fashion. The first scenes show the return of John Archer, an officer in the army, who brings news to Mrs. Warrington that her husband has been killed in battle. The Warringtons have one little son, and John Archer has a daughter. When they grow up, the playmates become sweethearts and are engaged to be married. Then another war breaks out. The mother begs her son to remain with her, but the girl is willing that he become a soldier. He enlists, in spite of his mother's pleading. The girl becomes a Red Cross nurse and also goes to the front. Young Warrington is wounded, leading a charge. He is taken to the field hospital and dies in Mercy's arms. The girl returns home, to bring word to the mother that her son is dead.

Gilson Willets wrote the scenario of the play, which Frank Beal directed. The direction and photography are good, especially in the battle scenes. The cast of players includes Harry De Vere as the elder Warrington, Harry Mestayer as the son, Guy Oliver as John Archer, and Anna Luther as his daughter.

"The Mysteries of Myra"

"The Invisible Destroyer" Is Title of Ninth Episode. Reviewed by Thomas C. Kennedy

IN point of strange events no chapter of the "Mysteries of Myra" surpasses the ninth release in this unusual International serial. Such things as soul transmigration and thought photography are not phenomenal when one compares them with the conversations and concentration of the energy of evil thoughts.

In "The Invisible Destroyer" the Black Order wills the death of Myra. Suspended from the ceiling of the dark chamber is a model of a human heart and the members stand before the swinging object and repeat the words: Slower, Slower, Slower. The Order thus hopes to destroy Myra. If the pendulum is stilled by the resistance set up by their thought energy it will be a sign that the girl's heart has also been stopped by their evil influence.

Doctor Alden learns the design of the Order and at one moment when Myra grows weak he saves her by counter suggestion. While the devil worshipers are saying Slower, Slower, Slower, the doctor repeats the words Faster, Faster, Faster, with the result that Myra is revived.

A new character is introduced in this episode and her entrance into the story serves to show Myra's increasing interest in the doctor who is protecting her from the Black Order. Professor Bert Reese sends Miss Stowe to Dr. Alden explaining that her psychic powers will be of interest and use to him. In testing her psychic power Alden gets the clew which results in his learning the newest attempt of the Order to destroy Myra.

When the girl whose heart attacks are caused by the influence of the Black Members sees Miss Stowe and the doctor together she becomes a bit jealous. Arthur Varney also gives vent to his jealousy of Alden in this chapter. He tells Myra that he, too, has made some study into the occult and in one of his experiments he went too far. A portion of his soul has left him and, according to Varney's story, he is now an "elemental," which means that when his material body dies his spirit will die with it unless he is redeemed through love. Therefore he pleads with Myra to marry him.

The climax of the release is reached when Alden releases the thought energy he has collected in a contrivance he has invented and sends it back to where it comes from. This energy is great enough to fell the Grand Master, at whom it is directed. The picture closes with the master lying helpless on the floor. The next chapter will tell whether or not this force was great enough to kill him.

"Gloria's Romance"

"The Harvest of Sin." Chapter Seven of the Kleine Serial. Reviewed by Genevieve Harris

AS far as the story is concerned, this installment is the most interesting and exciting offered so far, not so much for what happens as for the situation which has been developed in this and the preceding chapters. Events are forming a climax. The threads of plot are being entangled in a most interesting fashion and the value of the story itself is shown. In several of the preceding chapters, the story aroused little curiosity. But in a film serial of this order one should not try to judge the plot by one installment, but as a whole.

Gloria, recovering from her illness, is allowed to see Freneau, to whom she is secretly engaged. Freneau, who is on his way to meet Lois, wife of Gloria's brother, David, presents Gloria with a necklace and explains that he is called away on a business trip and will write her every day. He really intends to go with Lois and has written the letters which his business partner will mail from various cities.

Freneau tells Gloria of his plans for a business trip

Dr. Royce has learned of the intrigue between Freneau and Lois and warns Freneau. David has been made suspicious by an anonymous note and pretends to leave town in order to test Lois. Lois and Freneau seem about to fall into the trap set for them. Then Freneau, whose conscience begins to bother him for deceiving Gloria, and who is tiring of Lois, anyway, decides to meet her for the last time, to return her letters.

The apparent trend of events is changed by the re-appearance of Gideon Trask, the father of a girl Freneau has deceived. In a preceding chapter, this countryman had been run over by Freneau's automobile. Now he is released from the hospital and is seeking revenge.

That night Gloria, unable to sleep, is amusing herself by looking from her window with a pair of binoculars. She sees and recognizes Freneau, to her astonishment. Then she sees another man (Trask) overpower Freneau. She faints. The installment ends here, and judging from the audible comments throughout the Studebaker theater, the audience had been following with keen interest.

The work of the supporting players, especially Henry Kolker, as Dr. Royce, is very consistent and of high quality throughout, while Billie Burke, the heroine, plays with her usual charm. The members of the cast seem particularly well chosen. Jule Power as Lois is a most effective contrast to Gloria, while David Powell makes Freneau interesting if not admirable.

"The Valiants of Virginia"

Selig Five-Reel V. L. S. E. Drama. Released June 26. Reviewed by Genevieve Harris

THIS picturization of the novel by Hallie Erminie Rives is very enjoyable. There are a number of pleasing scenes, and the story holds the interest. As an adaptation from a novel, the play is as clear as far as events are concerned, although in a few points, the reason for certain actions is hazy. It is a story of the south, and a number of scenes of life on a great plantation can be made more effective by a fitting musical accompaniment of southern melodies.

The play opens with a prologue showing events about thirty years before the story proper. At a dinner given at Damory Court, the home of John Valiant, Edward Sassoon, one of the guests, becomes intoxicated and tries to kiss Judith Fairfax, whom Valiant loves. Valiant challenges Sassoon to a duel, but Judith later exacts a promise from Valiant not to kill Sassoon. There is a duel and Sassoon is killed. Valiant sends a letter of explanation to Judith by his friend, Major Bristow, but the latter, who also loves Judith, never delivers the letter and Valiant, believing that Judith loved Sassoon, leaves for the north.

Valiant marries in the north, but his wife dies, leaving a little son. When Valiant dies, the fortune he has made goes to the little boy, who grows up as "Vanity" Valiant, more fond of pleasure than of business.

The Valiant corporation goes bankrupt and in an effort to save it, the young Valiant sacrifices his individual fortune. The girl to whom he is engaged breaks her promise, and Valiant goes back to the old home in Virginia. There he meets Shirley Dandridge, the daughter of Judith. He falls in love with her, but she refuses to marry him when she hears the story of the duel. But in the end the real facts of the case are known when Major Bristow, dying, at last gives up the letter from Valiant, senior.

Shirley is crowned queen of the tournament.

Then Shirley marries the son of the man her mother had loved.

The settings and the photography are good. The scenes of the tournament, of the fox hunt and of various southern entertainments add to the enjoyment of the release. The acting of the cast is pleasing. Kathlyn Williams is featured, as Shirley. Arthur Shirley plays the Valiants, father and son. Others in the cast are Edward J. Piel, Virginia Kraft, Guy Oliver, Fred Carufel, Edith Johnson, Al W. Filson, James Bradbury, Harry Lonsdale and little Billy Jacobs. T. N. Heffron directed the play.

"Power"

Three-Reel Essanay Drama Released July 8. Reviewed by Genevieve Harris

A POLITICAL drama developed in a rather different fashion is this Essanay offering. That the story and not an "uplift" motive of the play is emphasized is a novel feature. The events are interestingly presented and the picture contains a number of exterior scenes of great beauty.

The governor is O'Riley's tool.

Nell Craig and Carroll C. James have the leading roles, while Sydney Ainsworth, recently the villain in the "Mary Page" series, has a rather unsympathetic role, that of the lawyer who is a tool of the bosses. Evan Dexter, the lawyer, is unsuccessful in his profession. His sister, Lucille (Nell Craig), continues to encourage him in his efforts.

O'Riley, a saloon keeper and politician, has a great deal of influence. A wealthy corporation is trying to get a water power bill put through the legislature. O'Riley offers to use his influence if the corporation aids the man he nominates for governor. The bargain is struck, and O'Riley names Dexter because he has met and admired the sister, Lucille.

Dexter becomes governor and begins to show some independence. However, he yields to the offers made him by still more influential politicians, much to the disgust of his sister. Lucille and O'Riley, who because of love for the girl has reformed his own dishonest ways, are able to keep the new governor on the right track, however, and the play ends with the marriage of Lucille and the transformed O'Riley.

Many of the actions and motives, especially the political deals, are very hazy, but the story progresses swiftly and will hold the interest.

"The Unborn"

Kulee Features, Inc., Presents Sociological Drama. Reviewed by Thomas C. Kennedy

IN writing his scenario the author of "The Unborn" attempted the difficult task of attacking a certain practice as an evil, in this case it is birth-control, in a story built along the lines of a human interest play. Not only is it difficult to draw a convincing moral in such a play but the subject dealt with here presents the writer with all sorts of obstacles which stand in the way of delicate and inoffensive treatment. Frequently "The Unborn" gives the spectator evidence of these difficulties though the delicacy of its handling is rather remarkable.

"The Unborn" is essentially a picture for adults and though it is to be marketed on a states rights basis, we understand the firm controlling the film intends to restrict its exhibition to adults only. Taking the attitude that birth-control is "America's greatest menace," the picture unfolds a story which, in accordance with the established rule, punishes vice and rewards virtue, and judged by these standards the moral tone of the play may be said to be good.

As regards production "The Unborn" is commendable. The settings and the photography are both of a good quality. Some of the street scenes are detracted from a bit by the crowds which gathered about and gazed from the actors to the camera, which is always detrimental to the realistic effect such a scene might otherwise produce. But there is no great harm done, for throughout the story there is realism of setting and action.

The physician who practices birth control in this story has a very significant name. He is called Dr. Ahlbad and the last the spectator sees of him is in a cell with stout steel bars. This part is effectively played by Bert Merket. Gertrude Bondhill is the featured player. She enacts two roles. She is first seen as the girl whose sincere love is trifled with by a wealthy young man and later as the illegitimate boy. Miss Bondhill is appealing in both parts. Elinore Jackson, Wharton Jones, Edwin Powers and Esther Hough are other members of a praiseworthy cast.

"The Clown"

Lasky-Paramount Offering Featuring Victor Moore June 19. Reviewed by George W. Graves

THAT which stands out in boldest relief in this picture is its direct appeal to the sympathies, an appeal made through a perfectly plausible, true-to-life situation, acted and arranged so skilfully that its full dramatic import reaches the heart. Another remarkable and delightful thing about the picture is the absence of despicable characters. The main characters act only from the noblest and most normally human motives. It is an unavoidable misunderstanding that causes the trouble and heart-aches. Another notable point in the picture is the excellent way in which the settings have been handled, especially the circus tent sets.

Victor Moore's acting in the role of Piffle, the clown, shows conclusively that his powers do not all lie in the direction of comedy. In fact, the serious nature of this picture far outweighs the humorous and thus Mr. Moore's portion of dramatic characterization is large. His eloquent efforts will please and thrill all who come under the dramatic spell of this picture. The role of the girl in the case is portrayed by Florence Dagmar. Her alluring charm intensifies the store of sympathy which we already have for the clown in his deplorable situation. Thomas Meighan makes a very passionate lover and a man of character second only to that of Piffle. Others making up the cast are Ernest Joy, Master Jerold Ward, Tom Forman and Horace B. Carpenter. The story was written by Marian Fairfax.

Dick Ordway and Millicent Leroy, lovers, allow their passion to overrule discretion. Penniless, Dick departs for a mine in the Death Valley with a friend, hopeful of making a fortune and returning triumphant to claim Millicent and to convince the objecting father, Judge Leroy, that he is worthy of his daughter.

Piffle, a clown in a small circus, saves the life of little Jackie, the crippled son of the judge, and is taken, badly wounded, to the home of the latter. Piffle becomes strongly attached to Millicent.

Then news comes that Dick Ordway and his friend have died on the desert. After Piffle has saved the grief-stricken Millicent from suicide he learns her secret. With the noblest motive, he offers Millicent the protection of his name and they are married. Soon after the birth of Dick's child, Judge Leroy relents and sends for the little family to come and live with him.

Piffle makes no demands whatever upon Millicent. He is satisfied to bask in her presence if he may not take her in his arms, and he rests in the hope that some day he can make the girl love him. Dick, in the interim, has heard of the marriage but misunderstands Millicent's motives and never lets her know that he is alive. But Dick is sent by his company to the town in which Millicent lives and their meeting ensues. There is a conflict of emotions on all sides.

Finally Piffle overhears Millicent tell the father of her child that she cannot now leave the man who has made such a noble sacrifice for her. Piffle realizes where he stands and he resolves to do the right thing. After parting with the child to whom he has become so attached, and bidding a mute farewell to his wife, Piffle, slips away, returns to his old life and leaves Dick and Millicent together.

"Who's Guilty?"

Seventh Issue in Series Produced by Arrow for Pathe. Reviewed by Thomas C. Kennedy

THE moral education of the child is the theme of "Truth Crushed to Earth," which is the seventh release in the "Who's Guilty" series. This theme is at once novel to the screen and large in the opportunities it offers the scenario writer. In "Truth Crushed to Earth" the theme is ably handled and as a consequence the release is one of the most forcible and interesting presented thus far in a remarkably strong and consistent series of two reel photoplays.

Unjust punishment of the child in this story is the real beginning of abhorrence for truth telling which results in a tragedy. The main character in the play is seen when a child, in youth and in adolescence and in each period he is the loser because he is truthful about certain unfortunate circumstances and he finally loses all faith in truth. He then places his confidence in lies to save him from consequences which may later arise. As a child his parents punish him after he honestly confesses to mischievous acts and being a child he is of course most impressionable. These mistakes of the parents are the first which present themselves to him when a young man whose regard for the truth begins to crumble.

One would be but little surprised if this picture served to awaken a number of reformers who use energy and thought in battling with evils confronting young men and young women when as a matter of fact there is no evil greater than the one dealt with in "Truth Crushed to Earth."

A series of unfortunate occurrences finally lead the young man to public disgrace and self murder. This character is introduced as one of strong and noble instincts but other people's failure to prize truth highly enough to give him fair treatment as reward finally causes the mistake which leads to his complete downfall.

Tom Moore uses his opportunities splendidly and gives an effective performance, while Anna Nilsson in a small part is given a few scenes in which she shows to marked advantage as an emotional actress who uses pleasing restraint. Howell Hansel's direction is of particular note in this issue of the "Who's Guilty?" series, which is indeed something the producers, the Arrow Film Corporation, can well be proud of.

"Those Who Toil"

A Five-Reel Lubin V. L. S. E. Offering Released June 5. Reviewed by George W. Graves

IN order to film this story in appropriate surroundings, a better region than that used would have been hard to find. Most of the action transpires in an immense oil refinery in the Pennsylvania petroleum district. With the great oil tanks and the dwellings of the laborers as a background, then, the story, dealing with inhuman labor conditions, has the needed atmosphere. The mob and strike scenes are handled on a very large and effective scale, and the burning of an oil tank lends its fury to that long pent up in the minds of the workmen. A number of big situations, fine acting, and competent direction far outweigh in effect what inclination there is to treat the subject in a lugubrious manner.

Nance O'Neil plays the part of Jane Brett, the daughter of an oil worker, who, because of the dire injustice done her loved ones, makes an appeal in person to William Jameson, the owner of the fields. Meeting only with scorn and maddening indifference at his hands, Jane attempts to kill Jameson, only being arrested for her trouble. John Jameson, the millionaire's son, divines the underlying truth of matters and it is his influence which obtains Jane's release. About the same time that Jane is fomenting a desperate step among the employees, to take form in the burning of some oil wells, John arrives on the scene in the garb of a worker, bound to investigate conditions for himself. The superintendent is the only one who is cognizant of John's identity.

John Jameson and Jane find a tender regard for each other taking root. To save his property John confesses who he is and his sweetheart then tries to make the laborers back down on their intention. Morgan, the workers' leader, discovers John's identity and accuses Jane of being a traitor. Then comes the wild rush to fire the wells, followed by the attempt to "get" John and a battle ensuing after the arrival of armed help. At last the millionaire's son is able to make his would-be slayers understand that he is there in their behalf. The story ends with an amicable settlement of differences between the oil king and his downtrodden laborers and prospects of a bright future.

Nance O'Neil is effective and strong in her role at all times. Victor Sutherland makes a fine character of his John Jameson. Others in the cast are Herbert Fortier, Tom Tempest and John Sharkey. The story was written by Daniel Carson Goodman and directed by Edgar Lewis.

What Happened at 22

Five-Part World Film by the Frohman Amusement Corporation. Reviewed by Hugh Hoffman

BEAUTIFUL lighting and excellent photography make this production a photoplay gem. The story itself is rather melodramatic with more or less double exposure and double identity work as a basis for the mystery. The number 22 is nothing more or less than the address of the house in which some of the action takes place.

A better title could have been selected. The picture really aims at the evil practices of the unscrupulous set who get into wealthy homes by means of crooked employment agencies. In this instance a couple of clever crooks run an employment agency and utilize it for criminal purposes. Therefore a title suggesting this particular pernicious possibility would have been much better, as it really is a very good theme and one which would interest the public if they were to see it mentioned on a poster clearly enough to understand.

Arthur Ashley is co-starred with Frances Nelson. They do not play opposite each other. Mr. Ashley takes the heavy lead and Miss Nelson does an ingenue lead opposite Gladden James. The bulk of the work in the picture falls to Mr. Ashley. It really is his picture, although Miss Nelson is a big help all the way through by her very convincing work. Mr. Ashley always does an excellent heavy part even though his regular line is leads. Miss Nelson is of course equally good in her line but she cannot help it if the part itself does not measure up to her capabilities. As to the work of Gladden James it can be remarked that there is nothing but class to anything he does. He is one of the most distinctive juvenile types in pictures.

The story is about a country girl who comes to the city to get work and drifts into a crooked employment agency. The boss crook falls in love with her and hopes to marry her and work her into his game. Failing in this, he gets her a position as companion to a wealthy lady and has himself made valet to her brother, a famous criminologist and lawyer.

The crook's object in the house is to tamper with a will, and he thinks that the girl might be of some assistance to him. The criminologist quickly recognizes him as a crook and sends for the police. Before the police arrive he is assaulted by the valet who blames it onto the son of the criminologist. The police arrive and by some clever cross-questioning, including quick witted deductions by the girl, succeed in making the crook convict himself.

As a composite whole it is a vrey good melodramatic offering. Mr. Ashley as the chief crook does some disguising that seems quite realistic and his general conduct as a nervous crook is very true to nature.

"The Sign of the Spade"

American Mutual Masterpiece Released June 26. Reviewed by Genevieve Harris

THIS play marks the first appearance in Mutual Masterpictures of Alan Forrest, late of Lubin. As leading man with Helene Rosson, Forrest will doubtless greatly increase his following of admirers, and these two players should, if given the right kind of stories, attain high rank in popularity.

Murdock MacQuarrie, who has been directing for the Signal Company, is their director and the first offering is a mystery story, remarkable for the fact that the love interest is lacking. Forrest and Miss Rosson have the roles of brother and sister. Forrest is Howard Lamson, a district attorney, and Miss Rosson is Shirley Lamson, interested in settlement work. Another player who equals the leading players in interest is Robert Miller, as Theodore Roosevelt Jenks, a street urchin, a friend of Shirley's. The acting of these three is very good, and the balance of the cast gives them good support.

The story itself, of the detection of the leader of a lottery system, is not worked out as well as it might be. There are a number of obscure points which confuse the spectator. The plot deals with a man of high position who is the leader of an unruly gang. They do not hesitate to punish those who betray them by murder, and to the murdered man they pin a card, the ace of spades. The district attorney, when he brings them to trial, finds that his witnesses are afraid to testify. This is because they have been warned of the consequences in a rather dramatic manner by the "sign of the spade."

The final evidence against them is gathered when they use a social center directed by Shirley as their meeting place. When they find that they are trapped they kidnap Shirley, but through her little friend Teddy she is saved.

The scenes of settlement work are interesting, and the suspense in the last acts is well managed. The sets and the photography are good. The cast of characters includes Warren Ellsworth, Harvey Clarke, Clarence Burton and George Gerhardt. Kenneth B. Clarke wrote the story.

Metro Company in Thousand Islands

"The Quitter," "The River of Romance" and Other Classy Rolfe and Yorke Metro Offerings on the Way

Miss May Allison has just finished her a la stump lunch, so this must be number eight of the Thousand Islands, where Metro's "A One-Cylinder Courtship" is in the filming.

"THE QUITTER" is a five-part Metro-Rolfe wonderplay starring Lionel Barrymore and featuring Marguerite Shirvin, which will be released July 10. Among the prominent members of the cast are Edward Brennan, Paul Everton, Charles Prince and Julius D. Cowles.

"The River of Romance," in which Harold Lockwood and May Allison appear, is a picturization of the book by the same title. Director Otto of the Metro-Yorke Company has been endeavoring to find out who is the real author of the story, but although his inquiries brought him the information that the writer is the wife of a United States senator no more definite identification was obtainable.

Harold Lockwood and May Allison with their supporting company are still in the Thousand Islands, where they are working on "A One-Cylinder Courtship."

Harry C. Browne, who plays the western hero in "The Flower of No Man's Land," is singing old plantation melodies for the Columbia Graphophone company accompanying himself on the banjo. Mr. Browne formerly did a banjo act in vaudeville. This actor has had a varied career; he went to Cuba in 1898 with the Massachusetts U. S. Volunteers, on his return he "stumped" for Bryan, afterwards went on the legitimate stage, and then came to the pictures, making his first appearance with Mary Pickford in "The Eagle's Mate."

Harold Lockwood and May Allison narrowly escaped death while working in one of the scenes of "The River of Romance." The two stars were in a row boat in the St. Lawrence just off Clayton, N. Y., when the big steamer "Toronto" hove in sight. Mr. Lockwood being an able oarsman paid little attention to the big steamer, believing he was far out of the regular course. The river at this point makes a sharp turn, however, and before he realized it the big boat was upon them, and missed the smaller craft by a matter of a few inches. The high swells, however, capsized the boat and the players were thrown into the water. Although Miss Allison is not a great swimmer she managed to keep above water until Mr. Lockwood reached her, grasped her arm and started swimming toward the overturned skiff. A speedboat came to their rescue and they were picked up exhausted but unhurt, and after a few hours both were about again.

New Grist of Companies

Eleven new theatrical and motion picture concerns have been incorporated in New York state. The total capitalization of the new firms amounts to $348,000. The list includes the Film Fire Prevention & Motion Picture Equipment Corporation of New York City, having a capital of $250,000. Lee A. Ochs of New York City, president of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America, is one of the directors of the Fordham Theater Company of New York, which will engage in a general amusement business.

The new companies are as follows:

The Fordham Theater Company, New York City. To engage in a general theatrical, operatic, vaudeville and motion picture business; capital $5,000. Directors, William B. Ochs, Lee A. Ochs and Charles M. Rosenthal.

Rutgers Amusement Company, New York City. To produce and present theatrical plays and operas on films as well as on the stage; capital $1,000. Directors, Wolf Traub, Rose Traub and Morris Kutisker.

A. & W. Film Corporation, New York City. To manufacture and deal in motion picture films; capital $10,000. Directors, Abraham Press, Ernest V. Reiss and William G. Keir.

Wintin & Livingston, Inc., New York City. To manage concert and musical performances and maintain an employment agency for musical artists; capital $5,000. Directors, John H. Livingston, Jr., Paul A. Livingston and Charles A. Livingston.

Martin Electrical Manufacturing Company, New York City. To manufacture films and give motion picture and vaudeville performances; capital $50,000. Directors, Ralph Martin, Joseph J. Murphy and Harvey C. Price.

Celebrated Film Corporation, Nyack, N. Y. A general motion picture business; capital $1,000. Directors, Arthur Rosenbach, Louis Shafarman and Harry G. Kosch.

Eman Film Corporation, New York City. To engage in the motion picture business in all its branches; capital $5,000. Directors, Michael Resnick, Harry Hayman and Charles B. Mintz.

E. I. S. Motion Picture Corporation, New York City. General motion picture business; capital $15,000. Directors, Dixon Boardman, Bradford Boardman and Walter E. Green.

Gerard Producing Company, New York City. To provide for the production of plays, operas, burlesques, vaudeville and other stage performances; capital $1,000. Directors, Barney Gerard, Louis Gerard and Jack Gerber.

Film Fire Prevention and Motion Picture Equipment Corporation, New York City. To manufacture goods and equipments relative to motion picture films and apparatus; capital $25,000. Directors, Kenneth S. Ferguson, Wallace MacDougall and Abram MacDougall.

The St. Lawrence river climate agrees with Harold Lockwood, who plays opposite May Allison in "A One-Cylinder Courtship," for which a Metro company is divinding its time among the Thousand Islands.

Present Litigation Contest Between Preferred and Common Stockholders Respecting the Proper Distribution of Large Earnings of the Company

ALBERT E. SMITH, a director of the General Film Company and the only one mentioned as an individual defendant, when asked about the article in one of the eastern trade journals referring to the suit recently instituted by Percival L. "The publication in question, while purporting to set out certain features of the bill of equity filed by Percival L. Waters and James B. Clark, is so misleading as to convey an entirely false impression to motion picture exhibitors and others as to the real facts in the case.

"In the first place, the bill is not brought by Messrs. Waters and Clark as a protective committee representing the other preferred stockholders of the General Film Company, but is brought by them as individuals and as record holders of substantially less than 800 shares of the capital stock of this company out of a total capitalization of 11,000 shares.

"This contest is the outgrowth of a contention on the part of the preferred stockholders of the General Film Company that certain large earnings of this company for the years 1910 to 1914 inclusive, over and above what was necessary to pay the dividends on the preferred stock of the company and a 12 per cent dividend upon the common stock of the company, was improperly distributed among the common stockholders because by their consent it was paid to them as the purchase price of film instead of being paid in the form of an increased dividend.

"The contention of the General Film Company and its common stockholders is that it is no concern of the preferred stockholders how it was distributed inasmuch as it belonged absolutely to the common stockholders and the preferred stockholders had no interest therein because their dividends had been fully paid.

"For these reasons the General Film Company, acting under the advice of counsel, refused to bring suit against its common stockholders to recover the earnings so distributed and hence Waters and Clark bring this suit in their own names of this purpose.

"This is the whole question at issue and all other matters contained in the bill are merely incidental thereto.

"Certain significant facts respecting this controversy are entirely overlooked in this article.

"In 1913 Richard A. Rowland, president of the Metro Pictures Corporation, an active rival of the General Film Company and a former partner of one of the plaintiffs and joint owner with him in the preferred stock of the General Film Company, brought suit in the same court to accomplish substantially this same purpose, and upon the filing of an answer thereto by the General Film Company, setting forth the above cited facts, the bill was withdrawn and the case discontinued.

"That during most of the time covered by these payments and during which the bill of complaint alleges the company was mismanaged, Percival L. Waters, one of the plaintiffs herein, was the general manager of the General Film Company and was active in controlling its business policy and carrying into effect the very transactions of which he now complains.

"In 1915, upon a change of management, Mr. Waters resigned as general manager and at the same time was elected as a director of the company to represent the interests of one of the common stockholders against whom he is now bringing suit.

"That in the suit instituted by the U. S. Government against the General Film Company, et al., both Waters and Clark, the present plaintiffs, were witnesses for the General Film Company and testified to the legal and proper manner in which the business of the company was conducted during the very periods covered by their present complaint.

"These facts speak for themselves and the exhibitors and the public generally may draw their own inferences therefrom.

"The business of the General Film Company is being conducted as heretofore. It still maintains its numerous branches, covering the entire United States and Canada, and supplies over 6,000 customers regularly and promptly with the product of many of the leading film manufacturers of the country, and is constantly improving its facilities and its service, and will continue to do so.

"When these facts are understood I am sure that the publication of the article referred to will not cause any dismay or lack of confidence in the minds of the customers of the General Film Company."

Organ for the Medium-Sized House

The Marcola Sales Company of 62 West Madison street, Chicago, reports that it finds it necessary to make extensive improvements in its Austin avenue factory, owing to the demands for the Marcola pipe organ, which the company has been marketing for nearly a year.

The Marcola was first made about ten months ago more as an experiment than as a business proposition to ascertain if it was possible to make a pipe organ for a price by which the medium-sized-house motion picture showman could give his patrons music in competition with the higher priced pipe organs made by musical companies in the field for many years.

The experiment has been so successful that the Marcola Company has sold hundreds of organs at a price several hundred dollars lower than the price of organs heretofore on the market. One of the Chicago houses now using the Marcola is the Kozy theater at 40 South Clark street.

The features of the Marcola consist of pipe organ, piano, (vox humana) human voice, violin, flute, 'cello, harp, bass melodia, organ, swell-tremolo, sub-bass, soft bass and bourdon diapasion.

The combination organ long ago was taken out of the experiment class and has become a practical instrument, made by a manufacturer with years of experience in the musical business back of him.

World Program for July

The list and description of July carries out this Brady policy of excellence admirably.

On July 3 Kitty Gordon, last seen in "Her Maternal Right," will make her third World appearance in another highly emotional tale, "The Crucial Test," in which the famous British player has an excellent opportunity of expressing her vast and versatile dramatic senses.

In direct contrast, in a story as unlike and theme as dissimilar, Holbrook Blinn will characterize the release date of July 10 in a powerful tale, "The Weakness of Man."

July 17 will see two World stars, Carlyle Blackwell and Muriel Ostriche, in their first co-starring vehicle, "Sally in Our Alley," which was produced from a scenario inspired by the famous old song.

On July 24, Gail Kane will be seen again, this time in "Paying the Price."

Following upon her tremendous success in "La Vie De Boheme," and in a picture story, as alluring, comes Alice Brady on July 31 in "Miss Petticoats," based entirely on the popular novel of the same name.

"Miss Petticoats" brings out the Alice Brady personality to a nicety. It shows her off to equal delight as that attained in "Then I'll Come Back to You" and "La Vie De Boheme," and in a sense the story is even more attractive, being of American locale and on a timely theme. There will be no let down in Brady productions during August.

First Mirror Production

"The Marriage Bond," first feature made by the Mirror Films, Inc., featuring Nat C. Goodwin, has been sold to the Unity Films. The picture was made at the studio of the Mirror Films at Glendale, Long Island, and was the first picture to be produced at that plant.

Two other features in which Nat Goodwin is starred are about ready for market at the Mirror studio and will be shown before long. Walter McNamara, who has been associated with the Mirror Company for some time, has just returned from a trip to Albany where he made some of the preliminary arrangements on a big sociological film which he will write and which will be made at the Mirror studio.

Adler with Blaché

Following the widely announced offer of one thousand dollars apiece for feature scenarios, comes news of the engagement of Bert Adler as assistant to Herbert Blaché. In about two weeks the new Blaché studios will be formally opened with a dinner to the press. Madame and Herbert Blaché will direct all the pictures to be taken in the new studio, with James Johnson, as formerly, their general aid.

Levey Opens Export Office

Announcement is made that Arthur Levey, well known to the trade, and who recently resigned from the Australasian Films, Ltd., will shortly open an office for the exportation of American films to Australasia, India and South America, besides handling commercial agencies for these territories. Mr. Levey, one of the pioneers in the industry, at the time

"State Rights" were in vogue maintained an office in the Candler Building, which was a rendezvous for buyers and through which he handled many of the most prominent foreign features, among them "A Message from Mars," "Little Lord Fauntleroy," "World, Flesh and the Devil," "Harry Lauder Comedies," etc., etc., besides doing a general export business and import business with England.

And he can have his job. One of the spectacular spots in chapter seven of "The Secret of the Submarine," American's big serial.

Unity to Handle Eagle Comedies

Andrew J. Cobe, vice president and manager of the Unity Sales Corporation, has completed negotiations with William J. Dunn of the Eagle Film Company of Jacksonville, Florida, whereby he will handle all that company's comedy releases. The films will be known as the "Tweedledum and Tweedledee" series, each being complete in itself but connected by an underlying plot.

Mr. Cobe declares that Fernandez Perez, the famous Spanish comedian who portrays the principal comedy character in these pictures, is a future Charlie Chaplin.

The Unity Company is also planning extensive advertising campaigns in connection with "The Yellow Menace," the sixteenth episode serial in which Edwin Stevens is starred. This will be presented in serial form in 1,100 newspapers at the same time it appears on the screen, and many of the papers are planning prize competitions in connection with it.

The business of the Unity Sales Corporation has increased so rapidly that new quarters have been engaged for the press and advertising department, the auditing department enlarged and an efficient system of bookkeeping and general auditing installed. Mr. Cobe reports unusually heavy business with "My Country First," the big six-reel feature starring Tom Terriss and "The Pursuing Vengeance," in which Sheldon Lewis, Jane Meredith and Henry Mortimer appear.

Rialto Effects Organization

Jesse J. Goldburg, the general manager of the Rialto Film Corporation, has returned from Detroit where a meeting of the board of directors of that company was held and the plans for future operations of the company were definitely determined upon. Officers of the company were elected for the ensuing year as follows: President, I. Goldberg; vice president and general manager, Jesse J. Goldburg; secretary and treasurer, S. T. Goldberg. Messrs. I. and S. T. Goldberg are the financial backers of the Rialto Film Corporation and are also the owners of the Lilies Cigar Company of Detroit, Chicago, Tampa and Havanah, Cuba. The company has produced one feature.

Ivan Film Booked by Loew

The Loew and Fox Circuits have booked Ivan's "Her Husband's Wife," The Poli and other large circuits have also run this film and some are repeating.

Although it is not expected to be ready for release until the first of July, "The Faded Flower," the Ivan play which is now in process of filming is being sought for first run showing by the leading circuits in New York.

It is the first all-star-cast picture to be made by the Ivan Film productions and features Marguerite Snow, Alma Hanlon, Rose Coghlan, Arthur Donaldson and Edward Mackay.

New Unity Films

Andrew J. Cobe, vice president and general manager of the Unity Sales Corporation, announces that the firm is now putting out a diversified program of strong features which have been specially selected by Mr. Cobe from hundreds of photo dramas, comedies and spectacles which he has looked over. "My Country First," "Pursuing Vengeance" and "The Bishop's Secret" are among recent Unity releases.

Universal Gets Travel Pictures

Through an arrangement with Joseph S. Klotz, of 110 West Fortieth street, New York, the Universal Company has acquired one of the most unusual and valuable pictures which the camera has yet produced. It is the Dorsey Expedition, covering the greater portion of India, Japan, China, Mongolia, Ceylon, Persia, and takes the spectator into places very seldom visited even by the most adventurous of tourists.

Noted Actor Gets Divorce

Wilfred Lucas of the Fine Arts Company, one of the screen's finest actors and a prominent and popular member of the Los Angeles film colony, was granted a decree of divorce this week from his wife, Alice Louise Lucas, who is now in London with her two children, Alice and Kirke.

While Mrs. Lucas was in London her husband sent her $60 each week for her support, and in one letter she writes, "You are awfully good to me. What a pity we can never seem to understand each other."

The divorce was given on the grounds of desertion.

Seena Owen Leaps

Seena Owen's "family" name was Signe Auen. Then she changed it to Seena Owen "so folks could say it right." She has now decided Mrs. George Walsh is really the best name in the world for her.

Miss Owen is remembered as a Griffith star and Mr. Walsh has been designated as "Handsome George" Walsh of the Fox Film Company.

The wedding of Norman S. Rose, one of the heads of the publicity department of the Triangle Film Corporation, and Miss Eloise de Montford, stepdaughter of Maurice V. Samuels, a New York playright, who is widely known in theatrical circles as secretary of the Society of American Dramatists and Composers, was solemnized on June 10.

D. W. Griffith is working night and day at his studios in California putting the finishing touches to his forthcoming production of "The Mother and the Law."

"Ready—Lights—Camera—Shoot!" Marie Doro, the luminous-eyed Lasky luminary, catching a close-up of the powder on Blanche Sweet's smiling nose. The P. A. says that the camera was given to Miss Doro by the Hon. Charlie Chaplin.

Sifted from the Studios

ATLANTIC COAST NOTES

Robert Grau has been appointed by Thomas H. Ince as general manager for both national and international publicity campaigns to be undertaken on behalf of "Civilization."

Norman S. Rose, of the publicity department of the Triangle Film Corporation, was married on June 10 to Miss Eloise de Montford, stepdaughter of Maurice V. Samuels, the playwright.

Shannon Fife, the photoplaywright, who has been in Dallas, Texas, for the past few months, has returned to New York.

Jule Power, who appears with Billie Burke in "Gloria's Romance," writes poetry for publication.

Olive Thomas, of the Ziegfeld "Midnight Frolic," has joined the International Film Company forces as leading woman for Harry Fox in comedies.

Victor L. Schertzinger, who wrote the musical score for Thomas H. Ince's eleven reel photodrama, "Civilization," at the Criterion Theater, has introduced a new march into his music, dedicated to Mr. Ince, and entitled "The Civilization March." This will be published shortly in sheet music form.

Bennett Southard, who has appeared on the speaking stage and in pictures for the Famous Players and the Equitable, has been engaged to play opposite Mabel Taliaferro in Metro productions.

Reina Valdez, who has been leading woman with Essanay and Lasky companies in the west, has returned to New York, where she will join an eastern film company. Miss Valdez has also written and directed photoplays.

Antonia Gaudio, formerly cameraman with the Universal and American companies, has joined the Metro-Yorke forces and will travel to California with Harold Lockwood and May Allison when these players finish their work in "The River of Romance," now being produced at Thousand Islands. Before coming to America, Mr. Gaudio was head cameraman for the Ambrosio Film Company of Italy.

Paul Dickey, director general of the International Film Service, played football for the University of Michigan in nineteen hundred three, four and five.

Gertrude McCoy is being starred in a series of three-act features now being prepared at the Gaumont-Mutual studios. The first, "Gates of Divorce," a story of city life, was written by Robert Burns, a New York newspaper man.

Gertrude Robinson, who has returned from the Gaumont winter studios at Jacksonville, recently entertained a number of her studio fellow workers at dinner at her home.

Irene Castle, who is to do a series of pictures for the International Film Service, has returned from a short trip to England.

In the Vitagraph play "The Secret Kingdom," Dorothy Kelly, who plays "Inez," the villainess, assumes many disguises, appearing as a little old lady, as a parlor maid, as a widow, as an innocent ingenue, and as herself, the wicked adventuress.

Charles Brabin, who has been directing for the Essanay Company, is now with Vitagraph and will direct Marc MacDermott's next play, which was written by Mary Imlay Taylor. Brabin formerly directed MacDermott in the latter's first five-reel features, when both were with Edison.

The Wharton studios at Ithaca, N. Y., where "The Mysteries of Myra" is being produced, employ no violet ray lights, being equipped with 1000-watt Mazda lights throughout. They also have the dimming process well worked out and are able to take advantage of many rare photographic effects.

*Par $5.00.

General Film Corporation: A receiver for this company has been asked by P. L. Waters of New York and Jas. B. Clark of Pittsburgh, acting as a protective committee, and action was begun in the Superior Court of New York against various directors by owners of the common stock of the General Film Corporation. The plaintiffs are represented by one of the leading law firms in New York—Messrs. Cadwallader, Wickersham and Taft—and the action charges gross mismanagement and improper dissipation of assets amounting to $2,240,164.87. The summons and complaints were served upon defendants Monday, June 12th. The net of the whole suit seems to be in the charge of discrimination against the interests of the General Film stockholders in favor of the organization known as V. L. S. E. and also the George Kleine Feature service, which is in violation of Paragraph 6 of contract dated 1910. It is impossible to secure a bid on General Film preferred at the present time.

Paramount Pictures Corporation: At a meeting of the Paramount stockholders it was announced the Famous Players and Lasky Film corporations, instead of becoming affiliated with another organization, will continue to distribute through the Paramount Pictures Corporation.

Vogue Films Incorporated: There is no question in the minds of the management of the company but that Vogue comedies will show net earnings in excess of 50 per cent for the year. While they have taken on the more expensive program and highest paid stars, such as Turpin, the popularity of the Vogue releases has been exceptional all over the country. It is pretty generally understood that this company, with its very small capitalization of $100,000, will, eventually, be increased to a very much larger figure. With Thanhouser out of the Mutual production program, Vogue now partially fills that vacancy and has an opportunity to greatly increase its earnings. Purchases at anywhere near the present market we feel will very decidedly repay the investor.

American Film Company Incorporated: Is making a world's record in output of film, averaging between 700,000 and 800,000 feet per week, or at the rate of 40,000,000 feet per year. This, of course, includes the printing they have to do for outside companies. The American Film Company Incorporated, in its new policy of financing with its own money such special features as "The Secret of the Submarine," has justified its judgment. Bookings on that serial have already gone to $200,000 and the most conservative expectations are $400,000. At this rate the American makes about $110,000, and it has already made $100,000 and over in net profits on "Damaged Goods" alone. The company also makes approximately $90,000 profit in printing for other concerns. At the present time it is reported to be earning at the rate of $500,000 per year.

North American Film Corporation: Bookings in England are in excess of $20,000. There has been a wonderful impetus in the demand for "Diamond From the Sky" in all the country districts throughout the United States. It has already been pretty thoroughly shown in the cosmopolitan cities. Common stock is again in demand between 40 and 47.

Lone Star Corporation: If the company stopped operations today or its principal died, there would be sufficient net earnings to pay out the entire preferred and pay off a very substantial surplus to the common stockholders. In one week in Los Angeles theater, Lone Star Corporation secured $750 for the Chaplin releases, or at the rate of over $107 per night, which is a record for a two-reel comedy in the United States.

Mutual Film Corporation: Directors' meeting occurs this week. While nothing definite is known at this time, it is reported a number of the directors favor a resumption of dividends on the preferred (at the rate of 7 per cent per annum) and on the common at the rate of 6 per cent per annum. If this news is confirmed there should be at least a 10-point advance in the preferred and about 15 points in the common.

A company of Kalm players, headed by Ivy Close, will continue work at the Jacksonville studios throughout the summer. Robert Ellis, who directed the "Sis Hopkins" comedies, will direct these. Henry Murdock is the leading man. William McKey, who played "David Farnum" on the speaking stage for three seasons and in Charles Frohman's production of "Eben Holden," is also a member of the company.

At a dinner which she gave recently in honor of her fellow-player, Alice Joyce, Naomi Childers presented Miss Joyce with a twenty-pound box of fine candy.

Lucille Lee Stewart, who organized a bowling club among the Vitagraph players last winter, is now president of a tennis club which takes the place of the bowling club during the summer.

Anita Stewart is particularly enthusiastic over her role of "Philippa," in "That Girl Philippa," which the Vitagraph Company is producing from the novel by Robert W. Chambers.

Nance O'Neil is busy reading scenarios. She is to appear on the speaking stage this fall, but in the meantime will work in a picture play.

H. Carrington, who wrote the story for "The Mysteries of Myra," became a member of the Society of Psychical Research when nineteen years old. His library contains four thousand volumes of psychic lore. He was responsible for the tour of America in 1909 of Euspaia Palladino, the famous psychic and medium of Naples.

Margaret Gale, one of the stars of "The Yellow Menace," the sixteen-chapter serial which the Unity Corporation is producing from a story by Louis Tracy, wears more than two hundred gowns during the course of the picture.

Douglas Fairbanks has engaged a professional prize fighter to keep him physically above par and fit for the "rough stuff" and the fights which the pictures require.

Jean Sothern, star of "The Mysteries of Myra," has an interesting collection of dolls from all parts of the world.

Paul Dickey, director general of the International Film Service, was formerly leading man on the legitimate stage. Then he became a playwright, and in collaboration with Charles W. Goddard, wrote "The Ghost Breaker," "The Misleading Lady," "The Man from the Sea," and "The Last Laugh."

Edwin Stevens is playing "Ali Singh, the Mongolian Demon," in "The Yellow Menace," the serial which Tom Terriss, who produced "My Country First," for the Unity Corporation, is making for the same company.

Antonio Moreno and Edith Storey are working in an ambitious Spanish romance, "The Tarantula," for the Vitagraph Company.

Peggy Hyland is to have her portrait painted in oils by Anders Randolf, the artist member of the Vitagraph Company, who plays heavy roles in the pictures.

When the huge ball-room scene for the Vitagraph production, "The Battle Cry of War," was filmed, the entire studio was converted into the set. One hundred and fifty extra dancers were engaged from a theatrical agency as the guests.

A PROFESSIONAL MAN

George E. Periolat, master of make-up and leading character man of the American Company, is a living example of the falsity of the belief that the camera cannot lie. No doubt, to nearly all of his screen friends he is pictured mentally as an aged, cheerful man of rotund figure, probably with gray hair and wrinkled face.

Instead, Periolat is a young, strikingly good-looking, rather chubby-faced man around thirty. He hasn't whiskers, and his clothes are the exact opposite of those in which he is usually filmed.

George E. Periolat, American.

George Periolat is a Chicagoan. For years he did the hardest kind of work traveling with stock companies, with Augustus Thomas in "The Man of the World," with Julia Arthur, William Gillette in "Secret Service"; Otis Skinner; Frohman, in "The Prisoner of Zenda," and other prominent stage folk. His first screen engagement was with the Essanay Company, which he left to go with Selig for four years.

After that he signed with the American, and here his character work brought results. The Universal engaged him for a period, but he returned later to the Santa Barbara studio, where he has been ever since, and where his study of make-up brings him strong parts in the American features.

PACIFIC COAST NEWS

A delegation of western Triangle exhibitors paid a recent visit to the Fine Arts Hollywood studio, where they watched with intense interest a number of scenes in production. The delegation was headed by H. C. Schmidt, of the Marquee Theater, and included W. Nassar, of The Palace, George Roy, of The Lyceum, R. Friedburg, of Burlingham Photoplay, Jean Nassar, The Castor, and H. Seen, of Bijou Theater.

Arthur Shirley, who plays "John Valiant" in the Selig production of "The Valiants of Virginia," in which Kathlyn Williams is featured, is an Englishman by birth, but almost his entire theatrical career has been spent in Australia. For two years previous to coming to the United States, he was with the Australia Films, Ltd., in Sydney.

A leap from an aeroplane onto a moving freight train is the latest thrill in "The Hazards of Helen," the Kalem railroad serial featuring Helen Gibson.

The supporting cast in the Selig production of "The Valiants of Virginia," from the novel by Hallie Ermine Rives, in which Kathlyn Williams is featured, includes Arthur Shirley, Guy Oliver, Edward J. Piel, Al W. Filson, James Bradbury, Harry Lonsdale and little Billy Jacobs.

The affection of an old man for a young girl is the theme of "The Old Legit," the Triangle play in which De Wolf Hopper appears as an old actor in poor circumstances, and Bessie Love appears as the girl, a young actress.

A. F. Wilson, formerly master of properties for the Robert B. Broadwell company at the David Horsley studios, has been appointed director's assistant with that company.

The Lasky Company is to produce two ten-reel pictures in the near future. Geraldine Farrar will be the star of one, Marie Doro of the other.

Claire Glenn, formerly on the vaudeville stage, has join the Balboa Company.

Anita King, the Lasky star, with the assistance of Mayor Rolph of San Francisco, officially dedicated the new Mission theater in that city.

Theodosia Harris, head of the scenario department at the David Horsley studios, has just completed a Centaur feature which will be the next co-starring vehicle for Margaret Gibson and William Clifford. In one of the scenes more than five hundred ostriches will be used.

Mae Gaston and John Oaker had a most exciting experience in one of the scenes of the forthcoming Centaur feature, "The King O' Make Believe." They were called upon to ride behind a runaway team of horses and as they made a sharp curve, the four-wheeled vehicle came within a few feet of skidding over the edge of an embankment. At the critical moment Oaker threw his weight to the far side of the buggy, probably preventing a catastrophe by his quick move.

Ruth Roland and Roland Bottomley of the Balboa studio won a silver loving cup recently for being the best one-steppers in a free for all dancing contest.

Edward Johnson of minstrel fame, has joined the Balboa Company.

Francis Ford and Grace Cunard are working on the eighth episode of "Peg O' The Ring." With them in this serial are Mark Fenton, Jean Hathaway, Marcia Avery, Irving Lippner, Jack Ford, Lionel Bradshaw and Eddie Roland.

Fred Huntley has been added to the staff of Balboa directors.

Morris Meyerfeld, Jr., president of the Orpheum theaters, was entertained at Universal City recently by E. G. Patterson, secretary of the film company.

The Smalleys are filming in five reels a story entitled "Saving the Family Name," written by Lois Weber and suggested by the story of the same name by Evelyn Heath. Phillips Smalley and Mary McClaren will be featured, supported by a large cast of capable players.

Director Lynn Reynolds has commenced work filming his own story, entitled "The Girl of Lost Lake," which will be made into a five-reel feature. The leading roles will be played by Myrtle Gonzalez and Fred Church.

One of the scenes in "Men and Women," of the "Dollars and Sense" series of one-reel stories being filmed by Director Jacques Jaccard, was taken on "The Race Through the Clouds," the biggest roller coaster in the world, at Venice, California. The camera was strapped in the car.

Paul Le Blanc, who plays a dope fiend in "Acquitted," portrays the same type of part in the new Norma Talmadge-Tully Marshall Triangle vehicle, "The Devil's Needle."

The Balboa studio gave a plunge party in the Long Beach natatorium recently. The free-for-all swimming race was won by Henry King, with Ruth Roland a close second. First honors in the ducking contest went to Myrtle Reeves.

Fay Tincher has started on a new Triangle comedy, written by Anita Loos. Edward Dillon is the director. Max Davidson is the leading man.

Anita Loos is writing a comedy-drama for Mae Marsh and Robert Harron. Lloyd Ingraham will be the director. This will be his third Marsh-Harron production, the first two being "Hoodoo Ann" and "A Child of the Paris Streets."

Dorothy Dalton won the second prize in the recent automobile fashion parade at the Ascot Park motor carnival for the benefit of the Actors' Fund. She was dressed in a suit of white flannel and wore a velvet "Tam."

Frank Borzage, director and leading man of "Mustang" dramas, and Rena Rogers, ingenue in Vogue comedies, were married recently.

William Russell's next five-reel picture, in the series personally supervised and presented by Samuel S. Hutchinson, is to be "The Torch-bearer," in which he appears as a wealthy owner and editor of a newspaper devoted to clean politics.

George Melford, who has returned from his vacation, has begun a five-reel picture at the Lasky studios, with Cleo Ridgeley and Wallace Reid as his stars. The title of the picture is "The House of the Golden Windows."

William D. Taylor has a town built recently on a desert location for his present play, "The Parson of Panamint," written by Peter B. Kyne. Dustin Farnum is the star.

John Mackenzie, the Balboa cameraman, is a globe-trotter. After returning from the Mexican frontier, where he filmed war pictures, he set out across the Atlantic Ocean. Mackenzie went through the Balkan war with a camera, and photographed the Zeppelin raid of London.

Ralph Lewis, who played "Stoneman" in "The Birth of a Nation," has been cast in Mary H. O'Connor's new Fine Arts play, written for Wilfred Lucas and Bessie Love.

A. D. Sears, now with the Fine Arts players, was formerly a member of the operatic stage.

Robert Lawler before joining the Fine Arts studio was a well-known stock actor. He played Mark Antony's messenger in the recent outdoor production of "Julius Caesar."

Some unusual night photography is introduced in "The Little Schoolma'am," the Fine Arts-Triangle play, which stars Dorothy Gish.

James Smith and Rose Richter, who are at the head of the assembling department at the Fine Arts studio, are to be married on the eighteenth of July. This film factory romance started two years ago.

Six companies are working on multiple reel features at the Long Beach Balboa plant. This studio is engaged in the production of two serials at the same time.

Enid Markey, who plays "Katheryn Haldemann" in "Civilization," interrupted her education at Stanford University to go on the stage. She first appeared in one of Oliver Morosco's stock companies on the coast, later going on tour in "Oliver Twist" with Nat Goodwin.

Bessie Love, as "Briar Rose," a western waif, in Mary O'Connor's latest feature drama, appears wearing overalls.

William S. Hart is at present working in a Kentucky feud story, "The Apostle of Vengeance." Nona Thomas has an ingenue role in the play.

"APRIL'S" GIRL

Helene Rosson of the American company, is developing with almost startling rapidity. In a wonderfully short space of time she has become well known to the fans and every week finds her popularity growing.

Helene Rosson, American Beauty.

Helene is only seventeen, very young to be a leading woman, but she is fully entitled to her position, for she has talents far above the ordinary, and is working hard to achieve the success which is bound to come her way.

She has not been in the profession for very long, although she was well known on the concert platform and in amateur theatrical circles. She started her picture career with the Universal. Then S. S. Hutchinson of the American saw her on the screen and engaged her. She has been playing leads at Santa Barbara ever since. In "April," especially, she has found many admirers.

She is very ambitious and never fully satisfied with what she does, which is a sure sign that she is going to do better things.

In private life she is an athletic girl who rides, swims and plays tennis. She is bubbling over with fun and is a general favorite. She lives in a pretty bungalow with her brother and sister, both of whom are prominent in their profession.

CHICAGO GOSSIP

"The Way of Patience," a coming three-reel Essanay, deals with a Quaker girl in Pennsylvania who rebelled against the creed of her people and explored the outside world. Nell Craig is the girl. Darwin Karr is leading man, with Ernest Maupin in a heavy role.

Eleven-year-old Joyce Fair has a grown-up role in "The Chimney Sweep," a two-act Essanay release, in which she appears as a girl of eighteen.

"The Girl at the Curtain" and "The Voice in the Wilderness" are the next Essanay re-issues featuring Francis X. Bushman.

Lillian Drew is working in a three-act drama, "A Million for a Baby."

After her work in "That Sort," the Essanay V. L. S. E. offering, Warda Howard began two three-reel plays, "The Regeneration of Margaret" and "The Higher Destiny."

The new state capitol building at Madison, Wisconsin, was used for several scenes in "Power," a three-reel Essanay play, in which Sydney Ainsworth plays the role of the governor. Madison is Mr. Ainsworth's home town.

Marshall Neilan, Selig actor and director, is only twenty-four years old. At present he is playing the title role and directing "The Prince Chap" at the company's Chicago studios.

The entire Mississippi National Guard participated in the scenic action for "The Crisis," at Vicksburg.

Ida Damon of St. Louis, the girl who won the "Million Dollar Mystery" moving picture contest last season, was married recently to Arthur Painter, after considering one thousand seven hundred and forty-two suitors who corresponded with her because of her contest victory.

The National Cinema Syndicate, Inc., has just purchased the World's rights to the official Panama-Pacific Exposition negatives from E. M. Asher, who recently acquired the rights to these negatives from the Exposition Players Corporation. Messrs. E. H. Kaufmann and S. M. Krellberg, executives of the National Cinema Syndicate, Inc., announce that they will market the pictures in serial form. This being the first attempt to market scenic educational pictures in this manner.

A transaction of importance is reported by the Sun Photoplay Company, which has announced the recent sale of its great five-reel feature, "A Woman Wills," to the Pioneer Feature Film Company.

The territory covered includes the state of New York, Greater New York and New Jersey.

Complete Record of Current Films

Believing the classification of film pictures by the nature of their subjects to be of greater importance to the exhibitor than clsasification by makes, MOTOGRAPHY has adopted this style in listing current films. Exhibitors are urged to make use of this convenient tabulation in making up their programs. Films will be listed as long in advance of their release dates as possible. Film manufacturers are requested to send us their bulletins as early as possible. Reasonable care is used, and the publishers cannot be responsible for errors.

Brief Stories of the Week's Film Releases

General Program

The Unwelcome Guest—Biograph—June 26.—Featuring Mary Pickford, W. Chrystie Miller, Jack Pickford and Claire McDowell. The miserly wife hoards the money which she receives from her husband and when she dies its hiding place remains a secret. The son is advised of his mother's death and is informed that unless he gives his father a home the old man will have to go to the poorhouse. This the son and his wife are unwilling to do, but to avoid scandal they consent to take him in. About this time a little girl from the workhouse comes to the son's home, she having been engaged to do the housework. Upon the old man's arrival at the home of his son, he is made to feel that he is unwelcome. He and the little girl, being treated most unkindly by the son and his family, run away, and by a peculiar turn of conditions the son is made to regret the persecution to which he had subjected his father

No Place Like Jail—Lubin—June 26.—Featuring Davy Don. Michael Finnigan is locked up by Patrick Brogan for making love to his daughter. Finnigan makes his escape and arriving home sits down on the back steps to regain his breath, and Mrs. Finnigan sitting by the window on Brogan's lap spies him and orders Brogan to club Finnigan on the top of the head when he enters. Mrs. Finnigan and Brogan plan an elopement and leave a note to this effect on the table. Finnigan, when he recovers, finds the note and writes his answer on the opposite side announcing his suicide. Mrs. Finnigan sees Brogan flirting with a pretty nurse and goes back home to destroy the note. Mrs. Finnigan discovers the note and weeping bitterly she darkens the house, lights a few candles, drapes her supposed dead husband's picture in mourning and invites a few neighbors in. Finnigan enters the house unnoticed, routs out an old sheet and after placing it over his head walks into the parlor. They rush from the house, while his wife crouches in the corner of the room terrified. Finally he removes the sheet, explains it all to her and then rushes into her outstretched arms, assuring her he will never do anything to cause his arrest.

The Sacrifice—(Three Reels)—Selig—June 26.—Featuring Eugenie Besserer, Guy Oliver and Harry Mestayer. A review appears elsewhere in this issue.

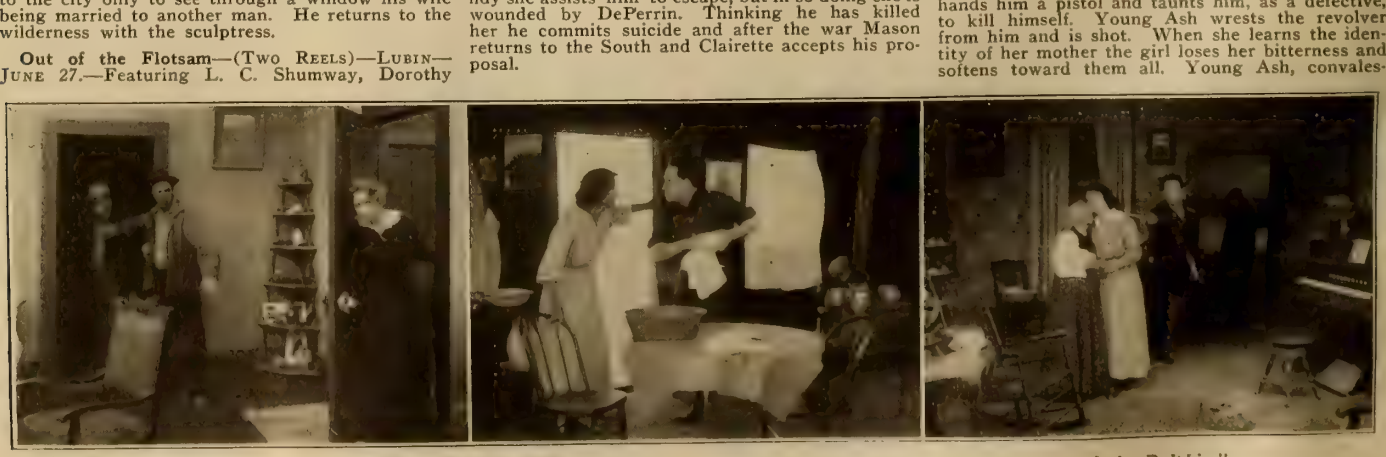
The Voice in the Wilderness—(Two Reels)—Essanay—June 27.—Featuring Francis X. Bushman, Irene Warfield and Gerda Holmes. A young author decides to spend a few months in a small village where he can work without distraction. His butterfly wife accompanies him unwillingly. Strolling in the woods he stumbles over a small precipice. The sculptress, also seeking quietude, finds him and takes him to her cabin where she nurses him for weeks until he regains his senses. His wife gives him up for dead and returns to the city to take over her uncle's estate. Against his possible return, however, she places a note in a jug explaining her departure and leaves it with the storekeeper. The sculptress purchases the jug and finds the wife's note. Herself in love with the author, she hides the paper and he believes his wife has deserted him. Finally he discovers the note and hurries to the city only to see through a window his wife being married to another man. He returns to the wilderness with the sculptress.

Out of the Flotsam—(Two Reels)—Lubin—June 27.—Featuring L. C. Shumway, Dorothy Barrett, George Routh and Melvin Mayo. Henry Buckley, president of the Winton State Bank, is under the control of one Gerald Barker, who uses his power over Buckley to compel him to use his influence to make Frances, Buckley's daughter, become his wife. She agrees to this in order to save her father, but as the wedding day approaches she sickens of her intended sacrifice and disguised in male attire she runs away and tries to "beat" her way on a freight train. She is thrown off, however, and her ankle is injured. Bob Harrison, one of a band of crooks, who wants to break away from the gang and live an honest life, runs across Frances, whom he takes to be a boy, and befriends her. When he discovers her sex, he determines to care for her until she is able to be about. Barker, who has been taking money from the bank vault with which to speculate, loses heavily and when he learns of Frances' disappearance he is unable to cover his embezzlement and plans to have the bank looted. This plan, however, is frustrated by Bob, who, learning of the plan to rob the bank, does the job himself to help Frances. She returns home and Bob, brought to the realization of his better self through thoughts of Frances, returns the money to the banker and is given a chance to make good.

It is our aim to make this department as complete as possible, although to do this, we must have the co-operation of all the manufacturers of film in the United States. If brief stories of the films you are releasing this week are not contained in this department, it must be due to the fact that you have not supplied us with synopsis sheets. In that case please see that we are advised of your film titles and release dates, and furnished with a brief synopsis of the story. This department is intended for every film manufacturer, whether he uses our advertising pages or not.

A Fair Rebel—(Three Reels)—Biograph—June 28.—Featuring Charles Perley and an all-star cast. Steve Monteith and Ezra Mason, upper class men, and Bill Bronson, a plebe, are chums and room-mates at West Point before the Civil War. Steve leaves for his home in Virginia and shortly after the Civil War breaks out and Steve, now a major, and his father a general, leave with the Confederate troops. Mason, now a colonel in command of the Union forces, makes his headquarters at the Monteith home and falls in love with Clairette, Steve's sister, much to the disgust of Captain DePerrin, her cousin, who wants her to marry him. Through DePerrin Mason is made a prisoner and when Clairette learns of his perfidy she assists him to escape, but in so doing she is wounded by DePerrin. Thinking he has killed her he commits suicide and after the war Mason returns to the South and Clairette accepts his proposal.

Vernon Howe Bailey's Sketch Book of St. Louis—Essanay—June 28.—St. Louis has been pictured in motion picture drawings with unusual care by this artist. During the exposition there Bailey, then a newspaper artist, received a commission to produce drawings for 22 full pages within three days. With hardly any sleep in the 72 hours he was able to deliver the drawings of the exposition on time. This stands as one of the greatest achievements in newspaper art work. In picturing this city for the screen he has handled a topic with which he is thoroughly familiar. Not the least feature is his reproduction of those quaint sections of the city which have furnished settings for scores of novels since Civil war times. This release shares a reel with western scenic.



The Return of John Boston—(Three Reels)—Lubin—June 29.—Featuring George Routh and Golda Madden. A review appears elsewhere in this issue.

Better Halves—Vim—June 29.—Featuring Babe Hardy and Billy Ruge-Plumb is likely a jellyfish in the hands of his masterful wife, while little Runt is the boss of his house. Finally Fatty is inflamed by his little pal's sarcasm and he returns home full of new-found courage, bound to cast off his shackles. Mrs. Plumb likewise educates Mrs. Runt and proves to her that woman should be lord of the manor. In the final clash, our two would-be conquerers find that in theory the female may be the weaker vessel, but in practice, never.

The Head of the House—Knickerbocker—(Three Reels)—June 30.—Jean Kelly, a reporter, is outside the seashore home of Lynn Morril when a burglar enters. Scenting a story, she waits. Morril surprises the burglar, notes that the man resembles him, and changes places with him—for his aunt and cousin Lillian, whom he dislikes, are coming on a visit. The new watchman fires a shot at Morril and he flees, dragging Jean with him. Hard pressed, he boards his motor-boat. The girl jumps overboard and he tries to rescue her. They are cast upon a small island, from which they later escape on a raft. Reaching home, they find the masquerading burglar in disgrace. He makes a quick exit, and Lynn introduces his fiancée to the guests.

For Value Received—Vim—June 30.—For a good reason Ethel tells Jabbs that their engagement is at an end. She also tells him that she will marry the first man she meets. Pokes happens to be the latter individual, and for a considerable sum of money he is persuaded to become Ethel's wife in name only. It is not long before Pokes' behavior makes Ethel sorely rue her move. Next comes Jabbs with his explanation, which Ethel is now only too glad to accept. The two former lovers rid themselves of Jabbs in a very permanent way.

The Regeneration of Margaret—(Three Reels)—Essanay—July 1.—Featuring Warda Howard. Shortly after the death of her husband Mrs. Chanler's daughter is born. She is defective and when Dr. Ash calls in the eminent surgeon, Dr. Belknap, that expert persuades the mother there are enough defectives and leaves the baby to die. Dr. Ash believes he can save her, however, and operates successfully. As the child was believed dead he takes her into his own home where she grows up with his son, William. She becomes a nurse and Dr. Belknap, now the husband of her mother, and who is stricken with paralysis, is her patient. Knowing he once left her to die she hands him a pistol and taunts him, as a defective, to kill himself. Young Ash wrests the revolver from him and is shot. When she learns the identity of her mother the girl loses her bitterness and softens toward them all. Young Ash, convalescent, is delighted to learn she is not his sister and that they can marry.

Under a Barrel.—LUBIN—JULY 1.—Featuring John Edwards. Shine, a tramp, rising from his downy bed and making his toilet from nature's fountain, feels like a drink so repairs to the nearest saloon. Being short of the price he begs the saloon keeper for the love of humanity to please oil his in'ards. In response to such an appeal he is thrown out on his ear. But there is more than one way to get a drink free, so he finds his way into the cellar of the saloon and with the aid of some tools he manages to make first class connections to the liquor barrels of the saloon above. Now finding that he is unable to dispose of all the stock at hand he invites two of his cronies to participate. After taking several champagne bathes they have quite a little smoker. That proves to be their downfall, for the smoke issuing from the cellar window attracts the attention of the fire department. A general confusion takes place in which the suffragettes honor the tramps for destroying the liquors in the saloon.

Edison Bugg's Invention—LUBIN—JULY 1.—Featuring Babe Hardy and Raymond McKee. The chief of Tyretown Fire Department has a bunch of pinochle players for a crew. They get so much interested in the game that he has to go up and remind them that the alarm has sounded. Edison Bugg gets an idea. He rigs up a counterweight and ropes all the chairs. When he presses a button the counterweight is released and the chairs are jerked from under the pinochle players. It works fine and Edison gets his sweetheart to bring her friends down to see it perform. She comes with a whole bunch of girls. The other firemen find out and poor Edison is crowded into the discard, even with Rose. The iron enters his soul. He presses the button. Coming on the scene of chaos they pounce on him and beat him up, but there is an interruption. The chief has been smoking under the counterweight. They go to his rescue and once more Edison gets his reward.

The Girl of Gold Gulch—SELIG—JULY 1.—Featuring Tom Mix and Eugenie Forde. Jack Wallace, who drives the stage coach, is in love with Irene Bolton, daughter of the storekeeper. Ned Wilson, a schemer, also is in love with Irene, knows that Bolton has paid a deposit on Dick Mullen's mining claim, and secretly sends his henchmen to investigate the value of the mine. They return with the report that the mine is very valuable. Wilson sends Mullen a note stating that if Bolton does not show up with the money at the appointed time, he will buy the mine and Mullen agrees.

Irene Bolton leaves with the money for the claim. Wilson has tampered with the stage coach and there is a breakdown. Jack Wallace discovers Wilson's plot, sends Irene on ahead, who defeats Wilson in a race to Mullen's home, where Irene receives the deed to the claim.

Hughes, the Republican nominee for President, and his daughter, are photographed by Selig-Tribune cameraman on Saturday following nomination.

Never Again—VIM—JUNE 22.—Featuring Babe Hardy and Billy Ruge. Not to be thwarted at any point, Plump and Runt board the same boat upon which their sweethearts are being rushed off to Spain by their parents. In Spain, Plump and Runt fall in love with a Spanish dancer and so also does the girl's father. The girls and their mother decide to make the faithless men pay for their folly. However, the punishment of the male members of the party is automatic, for it seems that the dancer is already married and blessed with six children. Mother and the girls are on hand to witness the disillusionment of father and the boys.

For Better or for Worse—VIM—JUNE 23.—With Walter Stull and Robert Burns. Jabbs, the chief of police, uses his authority against his rival Pokes, and thus wins the girl. Later, when Jabbs and his wife are having their home renovated, a strike of paperhangers is called and thus the home of the newlyweds is left en deshabille. Pokes, now out of a job, is sent with another man as a strikebreaker to finish the papering. When Jabbs and his wife return and see the wrecked state of their once beautiful home the arrows of vengeance fly thick and fast in Pokes' direction.

A Safe Loss—VOGUE—JUNE 27.—Featuring Rube Miller. Arthur Travares, a dishonest clerk, has been taking money from the firm and making false entries on the books. One day when he pockets money received from a client, the stenographer spies him, as does Rube, the janitor. She demands that he go fifty-fifty with her and he agrees. The office boy catches them in the act of taking money from the safe and they leave the money and return to the outer office. The office boy puts the money in the vault and later he is locked in the vault by the stenographer and Art, who take the cash box, thinking the money is in it. Rube and a crook, however, escape with the safe and when the boss returns from lunch trouble starts, but in the end everything turns out well.

When Adam Had 'Em—BEAUTY—JUNE 28.—Featuring John Sheehan, Carol Halloway, John Steppling, Mary Talbot and Al. Santell. Mr. O. Graidy loved his little evenings at the club, while wife rather liked him to stay at home, and his little jaunts were the cause of much worry on her part. Mrs. Marle called on Mrs. O. Graidy and offered some unusual advice. She suggested that Mrs. O. Graidy join the "Serpent-Cult," a mysterious clan ruled by Serius Roma, who gave her a demonstration of crystal-globe-gazing that quite surprised her, especially when the crystal spoke and told her that the man she could best charm was her husband She goes home and awaits hubby's homecoming. When he arrives she comes into the living room wild and starey eyed. Hubby thinks she has gone insane but when he sees the booklet the whole thing is cleared. He pacifies his wife into believing that he was falling for her charms, but finally a compromise is effected and hubby agrees to give a few of his evenings at the club if wifie would cease the charming stuff and leave serpents to their own wiles.

Tangled Skein—(THREE REELS)—AMERICAN—JUNE 29.—Featuring Vivian Rich and Alfred Vosburgh. A review appears elsewhere in this issue.

The Demon of Fear—(TWO REELS)—MUSTANG—JUNE 30.—Featuring Anna Little, Jack Richardson, Queenie Rosson and Frank Borzage. James Oliver, who has a delicate wife about to become a mother, is told by the family physician that he must not become engaged in any physical encounter or get hurt in any way or it would kill her. Soon thereafter Oliver encounters a rough fellow of the town and is insulted by him and forced to fight or acknowledge himself a coward. Oliver admits cowardice. They all jeer at him, but an old man, a quiet spectator of the scene, tells the following story. He tells the story of a young man who had a feeling of fear born in his physical being. He met a girl, Anna, with whom he fell in love and married. Later, living by the sea, a dreadful storm arises and she sees two fishermen wrecked and clinging to rocks. She urges her husband to save them, but he hangs back afraid. She goes to their rescue herself, but before reaching them her boat capsizes and she is cast helpless into the waves. With superhuman courage he plunges in, rescues her and then with a mad desire to earn her praise he saves the two men. When he returns to Anna's side again he finds her dead. As the old man finishes his story the loafers, interpreting its meaning, file out one by one after the stranger had told his own heart story to prove his point.

Jerry's Big Haul—CUB—JUNE 30.—Featuring George Ovey. In this comedy, Jerry, as usual, gets into trouble with everybody, but, not as usual, he comes out on top after the seething waters have receded. He has a fine chance to get back at Hank, who has thrown him out of his boarding house and he has the latter arrested as a crook. Then, the closing scene shows Papa, the strong-box owner, with his daughter on one knee and Jerry on the other, giving them consent to marry as well as access to the money box.

The King O' Make-Believe—(TWO REELS)—CENTAUR—JULY 1.—Featuring Crane Wilbur and Mae Gaston. This story concerns itself with the deliverance of a crippled girl from the persecutions of her guardian and his son. The guardian being Justice of the Peace, marries Hope by force to his son. But the end is not yet, for Hope's champion, a "movie" actor, comes to her rescue, the brutal husband meets an untimely death and all ends happily, with the restoration to health of the crippled girl.

Just for a Kid—VOGUE—JULY 2.—Featuring Paddy McQuire and Ben Turpin. Bungling Bill and Bloggie, two lovable rogues, read in the paper that a prize of $50,000 is offered by the leading newspapers in the city for the most perfect baby. They see one Moon and his wife just returning home and enter their home with their child and Bill schemes to kidnap the child and engages Moon in conversation while Bloggie enters the house through the entrance at the rear. Entering the parlor Bloggie discovers Mrs. Moon struggling with a burglar, who after flooring Bloggie makes his escape through the front door. Moon and Bill, who are thrown down by the burglar, enter the house and while Moon is trimming Bloggie for loving his wife, Bill escapes with the child. Bloggie, fleeing from the ire of Moon, steals a baby carriage which contains a pickaninny. The police are told of the situation and a merry chase ensues for the missing children.

Universal Program

Peg o' the Ring—(Episode 9)—June 26—Featuring Grace Cunard and Francis Ford. In this episode Peg and Dr. Lund come as near to death, perhaps, as they ever will. The ruffians shut the door of a freight car in which Peg and the young doctor are and push them out upon a trestle in the path of an onrushing train. The doctor finally forces an entrance in the end of the car through a window used for air and thus they escape into the stream below just before the inevitable collision.

The Browns See the Fair—Nestor—June 26.—With Neal Burns and Betty Compson. It has been so long since Harry Brown has had a vacation that when he takes wife and children to the San Diego fair he hardly knows how to demean himself. He starts flirting with a pretty girl, but one of his children tells Mamma all about it. The pretty girl's lover discovers her duplicity and there ensues a chase all around the fair, with the lover and Harry's wife in pursuit. Then at the wife's stern command the happy family sets sail for home immediately.

Jackals of a Great City—(Two Reels)—Gold Seal—June 27.—Featuring Harry Carey. Tom is in love with Leila. The latter's grandmother, not liking his timid advances, shows him a diary in which the writer states that the man who is to marry her must take her by sheer force. The diary is really the grandmother's but Tom thinks it is Leila's and arranges his campaign accordingly. A white slave gang is maneuvering to get Leila and both she and Tom are unconsciously thrown into its meshes. Tom's valiant behavior does win over the girl, although he believes he has taken a terrible misstep when he learns who owns the diary.

Peggy and the Law—Imp—June 27.—With Harry Benham and Edith Roberts. Stanley Rose intends to foreclose the mortgage on his property, but when he discovers the beautiful maiden living there he becomes more lenient. Many humorous and interesting situations lead up to the climax, when the two young people decide to marry and live on the property together.

The Toy Soldier—Rex—June 27.—A toy maker dreams that in putting one of his toy soldiers through his tricks he breaks him. He appeases his furious employer by offering to take the place of the toy. Accordingly he is sent to the home of the purchaser, where he distinguishes himself by checkmating some burglars. This wins the gratitude of the household and they forgive him his deception.

God and the Baby—Big U—June 28.—Featuring Zöe Durea. In order to save his daughter by sending her to a different climate, Rock, after trying every honest method, resorts to a theft. His little daughter writes a note to God begging him to arrange for the trip. The miraculous way in which Rock uncounsciously becomes the outwitter of two thugs, puts a touching end to the picture.

Pirate of the Air—L-Ko—June 28.—Featuring Alice Howell and Fatty Voss. The proprietor of the Crowing Rooster Inn has stolen an airship model from the War Department, which he keeps in his workship. A Secret Service agent tries to get the head waitress to tell about the aeroplane in the garret, but she refuses. Later she has a dream in which she tries to secure the model with the assistance of the Secret Service man and some local cops. She awakens after a perilous trip through the air, chasing the bandits, who have escaped in a fast aeroplane.

Twice at Once—Big U—June 29.—With Ernie Shields and Marcia Moore. Through some unlucky incidents Ernie finds himself engaged to two girls at once. He tries to elude one of these ladies, who is exceedingly fat, and thereby starts an avalanche of trouble in which the janitor, the other girl and a mysterious gentleman in a black hat participate. All kinds of terrible things come to pass and the result is utmost confusion.

The Human Cactus—(Two Reels)—Laemmle—June 29.—With Rupert Julian, Elsie Jane Wilson and Douglas Gerrard. It is the theory of Henry Roylance, a sociologist, that ladies and gentlemen are made and not born. In order to prove his theory to Dr. Smead, who believes just the opposite, Roylance takes into his home a girl brought up in the slums and finally makes a perfect lady out of her. Dr. Smead, who has closely watched all the developments, agrees with Roylance. The girl then returns to her family and a condition almost unbearable to her, but, just as she is being turned out by her father, Dr. Smead arrives and asks the girl to come to his home and make a gentleman out of him.

The Children's Paradise—(Split Reel)—Powers—June 29.—This picture first sets about to show how the children of the New York lower East Side live, eat, play and sleep, and then, in contrast it gives views of the way poor children are cared for at the Christian Herald Home at Nyack-on-the-Hudson. Three thousand enjoy a ten days' outing here every year. On the same reel is:

Blind Man's Buff—(Two Reels)—Imp—June 30.—With Matt Moore and Jane Gail. Mr. Livingston is mistaken by a young girl for the blind man to whom she is to apply for the position of attendant. Livingston decides to keep up the deception, but he is finally discovered and Jane leaves in a fury. Later Livingston is stricken blind in earnest and Jane comes to care for him. The story ends happily with the man's recovery and his reunion with Jane, whose pique at her lover's former act has to be duly appeased, however.

Such Is Life in China—Powers—June 30.—This is a combination of Hy Mayer cartoons and travel pictures, which go to make a travel comedy. Among the things shown, with comic comments in the form of cartoons, are Chinese architecture, the jinrikisha contrasted with the auto, market scenes, restaurants, theater interiors and the plying of the different trades.

Muggins—Victor—June 30.—With Norbert Myles and Gretchen Lederer. A wealthy society girl marries a farmer but in time tires of the common life and returns to her former life in the city, taking her child. She becomes intimate with some young doctor and neglects her child, Muggins, who finally becomes ill. At a very serious point in his illness the child's father feels that Muggins needs him and comes to the city house. The child then is the means of bringing the farmer and his wife to a new understanding.

Sammy Johnsin, Magician—A very original comedy cartoon by Pat Sullivan.

The Money Lenders—(Two Reels)—Bison—July 1.—Featuring Marie Walcamp and Lee Hill. In order to raise money to save himself from disgrace, John Murray is about to sell his daughter to Hickman Bruce. He first, however, resorts to dishonest means to raise the funds, which, when Bruce discovers them, uses as a lever to force Murray. The murder of Bruce by an enemy and the freeing of Howard, the girl's lover, by the murderer's dying statement, follow.

Bashful Charley's Proposal—Joker—July 1.—With Gale Henry and William Franey. Charley finds it most convenient to have a twin brother who can do his proposing for him. The brother's price is $5,000, and he deserves it, for the narrow escape he has when the widow tries to force him to marry her causes him much anguish. The widow and the minister finally come upon Charley himself, whom they think they have been pursuing all the time, and thus Heine is able to escape to his own sweetheart.

Baseball Bill—(Chapter 1)—Laemmle—July 2.—Featuring Billy Mason. Bill, the star player on the Town Picks team, is forced to be absent for a while from the inter-village championship game because his unfeeling father, a confectioner, makes him deliver ice cream. Finally, however, Bill arrives at the ball field and revives the spirits of his team. The former manager of a circus proposes to Bill that he accompany him to one of the larger towns, where he will have opportunity to develop his ability. Because of parental interference Bill loses his girl, but there are chances of his winning fame for himself in the future.

The Sting of Conscience—(Three Reels)—Rex—July 2.—Featuring Doris Pawn. Gavin McDonald is a lover of the wilderness. He marries a girl from the city, who, in a moment of weakness, elopes with a member of the Northwestern Mounted Police, McGraw. Both she and McGraw, however, regret their act and return to right wrongs. But it is too late, for McDonald has moved with his child to other parts, while McGraw's wife refuses to forgive him his part in the affair. The latter dies not long after. Years later fate brings McGraw's daughter and McDonald's son together and the story closes with their happiness after many exciting situations.

Destiny's Toy—(FIVE REELS)—FAMOUS PLAYERS—JUNE 15.—Louise Huff is featured in this story by John O'Brien, who directed the production. Reviewed elsewhere in this issue.

The American Beauty—(FIVE REELS)—PALLAS—JUNE 29.—Featuring Myrtle Stedman. Martin Ellsworth, a wealthy American, with his young wife and baby, are returning from a trip to Newfoundland when the liner becomes wrecked and they become separated from their child, who is picked up by Cleave, a fisherman, and adopted. The adopted daughter grows up as Ruth Cleave and later becomes the model of Paul Keith, a wealthy young American painter, who is in a contest with several painters to paint his national type of beauty. He names his painting "The American Beauty" and it is awarded first prize. The nationality of Ruth is challenged, however, and cannot be established, and Keith's picture is disqualified. Lorimer, a patron of art and beautiful women, becomes infatuated with Ruth and entices her to come to his luxurious studio with the promise of employment. Paul Keith hears of the appointment and rescues her, and then the realization that he loves Ruth comes to him, but because of her lowly station in life refuses his offer of marriage. At this time Ruth's own father, an art patron, through "The American Beauty" finds her and established in her new station of life she becomes Paul's wife. Elliott Dexter, Howard Davies, Jack Livingston, Adelaide Woods and Edward Ayers complete the cast. Wm. D. Taylor directed the picture.

Paramount Pictographs — JUNE — "Taming a Green Lion" is the heading under which the first scenes appear. This touchy work is shown in all its detail. The scientific way in which the professional tamer goes about his task shows that he has made a thorough study of the animal's proclivities. Next comes something which will delight the hearts of all zealous golfers, "Golf Demonstrated by Alec Smith." Some extremely "pretty" shots are made by this famous golfer and a little instruction is also given. Views of interest taken at the Wistar Institute of Anatomy and Biology in Philadelphia and pictures of the seething 1916 crowds at Coney Island complete a decidedly interesting offering. G. W. G.

Imperial Berlin—JUNE—This release of the Burton Holmes Travelogue series concerns itself mainly with the architectural and civic beauty of the city of Berlin, Germany. The scenes are photographed from excellent vantage points, setting them off to great advantage. The Kaiser and his "war chiefs" are shown in all their resplendency. Not many travel pictures of the same length have as much of educational and historical value as does "Imperial Berlin." G. W. G.

Red Feather

It Happened in Honolulu—(FIVE REELS)—RED FEATHER—JUNE 26.—Featuring Myrtle Gonzalez and Val Paul. Larry Crane, in partnership with his father, is in love with Mabel Wyland, but her mother favors Lord Percy. In an effort to force Lord Percy on her daughter, Mrs. Wyland plans a trip to Honolulu. Mabel begs Larry to come along, but he meets with such opposition from his father that he decides to remain at home. Mabel promises her mother that she will marry Lord Percy, and fearing that she will be forced into the ceremony against her will she sends a telegram to Larry. Larry has another interview with his father, who tells him to take $5,000 and go, but not to return. Larry takes the money and leaves. Velie, cashier of the firm, seeing a way to steal without being caught, appropriates all the cash of the firm and blames Larry. Mr. Crane dispatches a detective to arrest Larry and bring him back, but upon landing Larry manages very cleverly to elude the detective long enough to marry Mabel. In the meantime Larry's father discovers the identity of the real thief and wires the detective to release Larry, who is forgiven by his father and by his mother-in-law.

The Idle Hour and Star Theaters in St. Charles are now under the management of Bryant & Kramer.

Waukegan's new motion picture house, the Academy, which has been under construction for months, has been opened to the public. The spacious lobby is decorated in colors, with one wall covered with a reproduction of the old Waukegan Academy which stood for fifty years on the spot where the theater now stands, and on the other end of the lobby a painting of the local harbor and lighthouse. Interior decoration is confined to stucco work, with moldings and copings of great beauty. The building is fireproof throughout, with concrete floor, sloping so that every seat in the house has an unobstructed view of the screen. There is no stage. A balcony, with boxes, furnishes a place for parties. Music is furnished by a pipe organ. George K. Spoor is owner.

Indiana

The appointment of a receiver for the People's Amusement Company, which operates three motion picture theaters in Indianapolis, was asked in a suit filed in Superior Court, Room 3, by Daniel G. Scheible, treasurer of the company. He alleges the company recently sold one of the theaters for too small an amount, that the company is insolvent with debts of about $25,000, of which about $3,000 now is due. The company has an authorized capital of $50,000.

Iowa

Montana

A contract has been awarded Dave M. Anderson of Bozeman for the erection of a new theater building in Three Forks by E. C. Waddell, manager of the Ruby theater. The building will be two stories high, devoted to stores and offices. In the rear of the stores on the first floor will be a moving picture theater to be ready for occupancy October 1.

Work has been started on the moving picture theater to be erected in Hinsdale.

Work has been commenced on E. C. Waddell's new theater building in Three Forks, the contract having been let to contractor Dave M. Anderson of Bozeman. The building will be one story and will house two store rooms and the moving picture theater.

Missouri

Woods & Weaver's moving picture theater in New London was destroyed by fire.

Nebraska

Oakdale now has an airdome.

The Lyric theater in David City is being extended forty-eight feet and a new front installed. The theater will be very cozy and pleasant when the improvements are completed. William McGaffin is owner.

The new Dundee Theater in Omaha has been opened. It is very attractively decorated and cost $25,000. It is located at Fifty-first and Underwood and is managed by A. C. Hartman.

The seating capacity of the Gem theater in Gothenburg has been enlarged.

A deal was closed whereby F. C. Inhelder disposed of his moving picture show in Wisner to Brisben Brothers of St. Edward, and they will take possession July 1. The new proprietors are young men with a number of years experience in this line and come well recommended. They will make Wisner their home.

P. G. Armbus, of the Pastime theater in Gering, is getting his new theater building well under construction. The building will be located about a block north of his present quarters. It will be 28x125 feet in size, with a 16-foot ceiling, inclined floor, and a stage 18x21 feet in size. Four commodious dressing rooms will be conveniently placed under the stage. Mr. Armbus says the building will be strictly modern in every way. He expects to have it ready for occupancy by August 1.

Frank Keenan and Enid Markey in "The Phantom"

Not since the days of the famous "Raffles" has there been a detective story so exciting, so full of adventure, so thoroughly absorbing as "The Phantom," the latest TRIANGLE PLAY, with Frank Keenan and Enid Markey, to be released July 2nd.

Chock full of surprises—abounding with quick action and tense moments—this TRIANGLE PLAY is different from any other in which Frank Keenan has appeared.

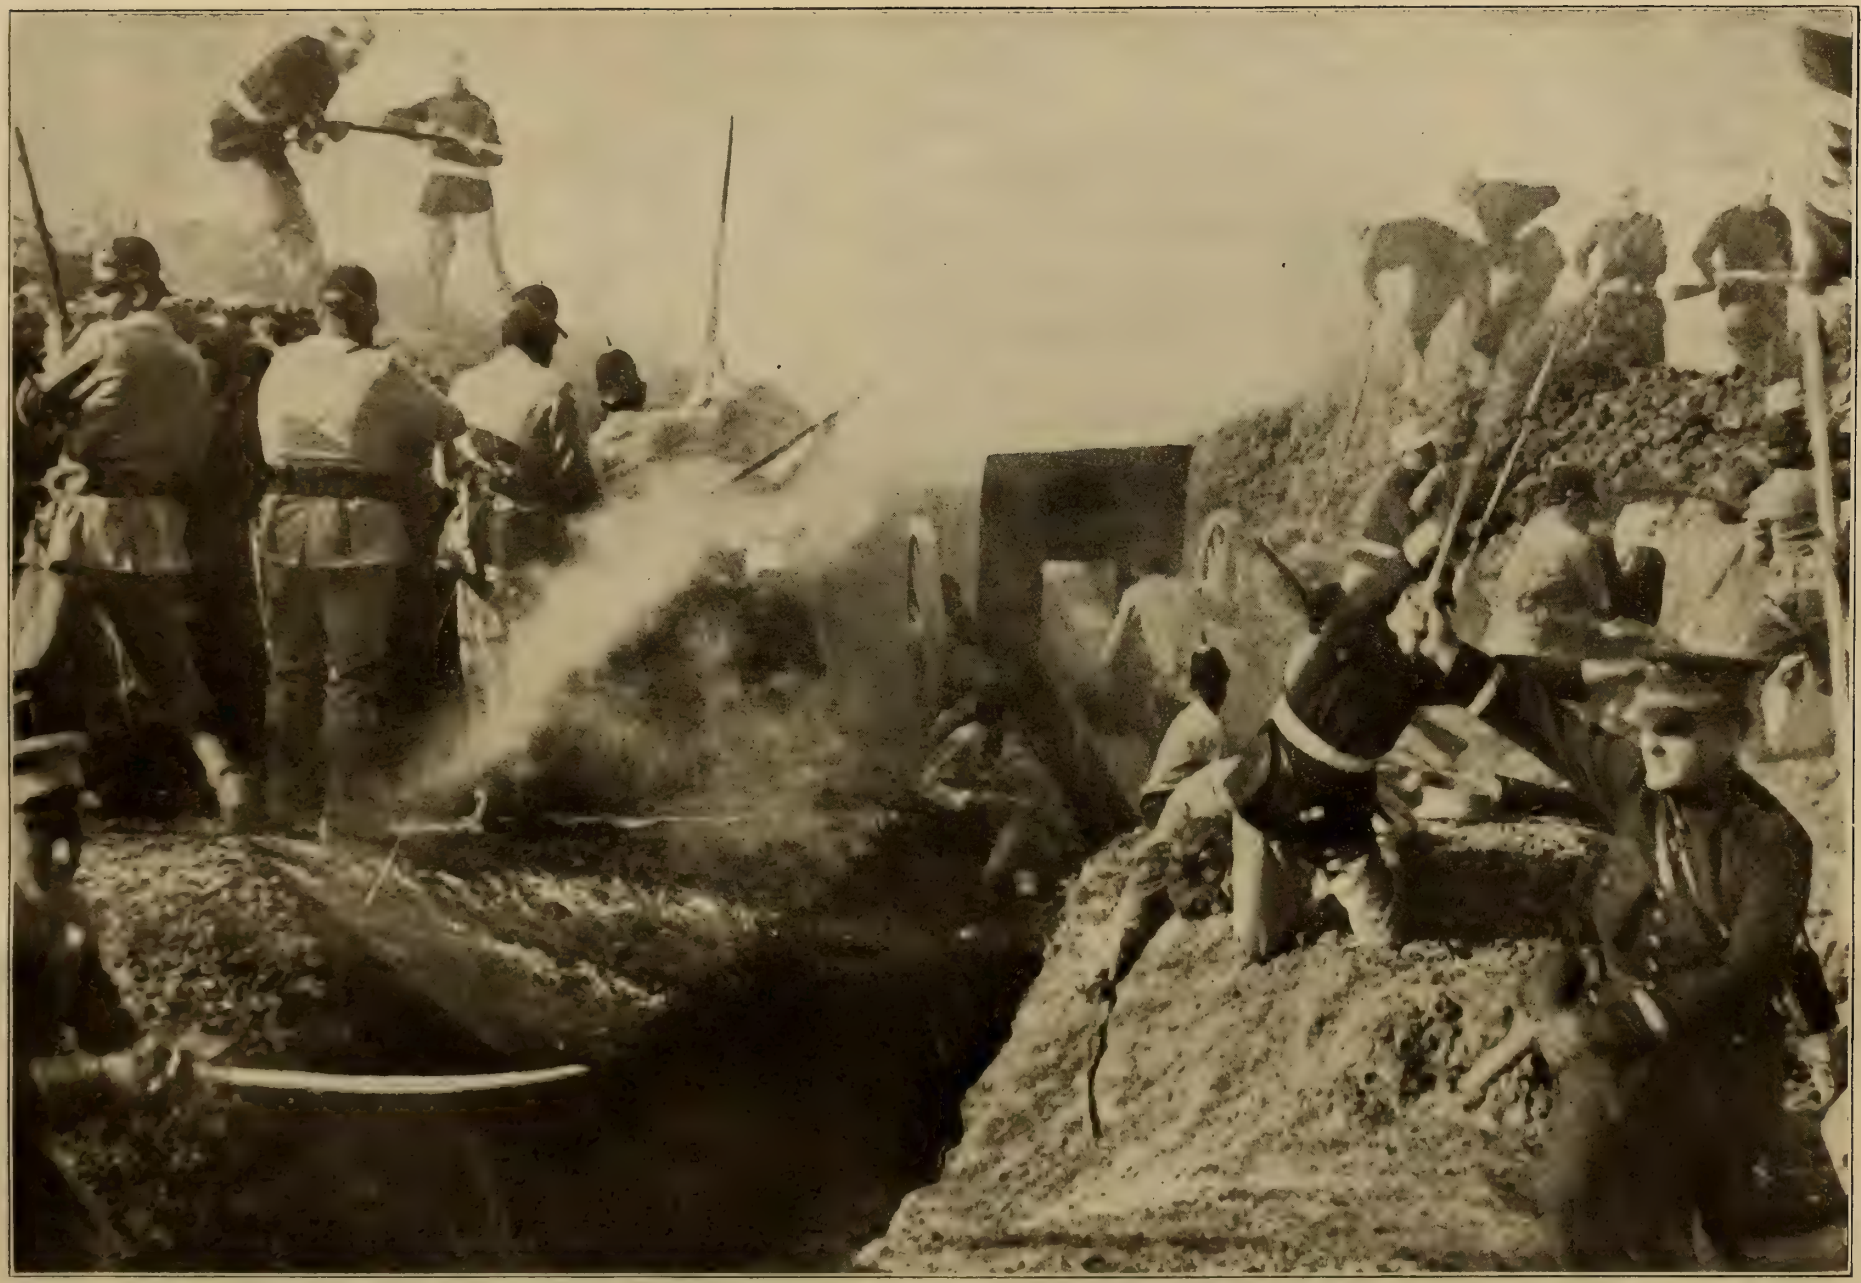
So cleverly is the story handled that the most enthusiastic fan won't be able to foretell the final ending. By the time Keenan has changed from Gentleman Thief to Central Office Detective and then to U. S. Secret Service Officer anything seems possible. And when the end is reached you are more surprised than ever at the outcome.

If your patrons enjoy detective plays they certainly will appreciate "The Phantom."

"The Phantom" was one of the first TRIANGLE PLAYS to be made at the new $1,000,000 studio in Culver City, Cal.

Four modern steel and glass studios have already been erected at the new plant which occupies eleven acres, while four more are being planned.

With the latest possible equipment—much of it ahead of the times, this TRIANGLE Studio is now producing photo-plays like "The Phantom" for the benefit of Triangle Exhibitors. As before the policy is to make the best possible pictures regardless of time or cost.



Other TRIANGLE PLAYS to be released at an early date are:

July 9th, Charles Ray, in "The Deserter."

July 16th, William H. Thompson, in "The Eye of the Night."

Every Exhibitor should carefully consider the question of presenting TRIANGLE PLAYS at his theatre. If you have not received information regarding these motion pictures use the coupon below for information. There is no obligation.

Chicago Show to Settle Big Questions

BY NAT S. STRONGE

DELEGATES are starting from their homes to attend the annual convention of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America to be held in Chicago, opening on July 10 next.

This annual convention is the most important ever held.

It is even of more importance than the meeting of six years ago when the League was first formed.

At its formation the organization was an experiment. It has passed through the experimental strata and experience has taught many of the members the necessity for the organization of a stable influential body.

Probably the most important action to be taken by the delegates is to render a decision as to whether or not the film manufacturers and film distributors and film accessory manufacturers shall be taken into the organization.

To make the manufacturers, distributors and accessory manufacturers eligible to membership it will be necessary to amend Secton One of Article Four of the constitution. This section provides that the League is for "exhibitors only."

Owing to the fact that the Board of Trade, organized in New York City, looked upon with suspicion by exhibitors throughout the country because dominated by manufacturers, was a failure it is the consensus of opinion among League members that the Constitution should be so amended as to provide for the membership of manufacturers and accessory men.

The plan now talked of is to pass the amendment, in order to make the three branches of the industry, other than the exhibiting branch, members of the organization. This probably will be done by having two sections to which exhibitors will be eligible to membership in section one and the manufacturing end of the industry in section two.

The individual initiation fee for member exhibitors under the present constitution is $5, and the dues are $10 a year. These are paid into the treasury of the state branch.

The state branches are assessed $35 initiation fee and $2 per year per member for membership in the National League.

In the proposed new manufacturers' section it has been suggested that the initiation fee of manufacturers be $100 and the dues $100 a year, of distributors $100 initiation, and $500 a year as dues, and of accessory manufacturers $100 as initiation, and $50 a year as dues.

In arriving at these figures it has been argued that manufacturers, distributors and accessory manufacturers will represent many units, whereas the exhibitor represents but himself, and owing to this condition it is reasonable to assume that those persons representing the manufacturing end of the business will be anxious and willing to pay a larger initiation fee and larger dues than might be expected from the individual exhibitor.

It has been suggested that the two proposed sections will keep their own working organizations. They will meet as sections and will take action as sections and in case of disagreements, the point at issue will be referred to a grievance committee. This grievance committee shall consist of two manufacturers, two exhibitors and one accessory manufacturer. In case of appeal from a decision of the grievance committee the two sections will meet as a body and as one body will vote on the appeal from the committee decision.

The persons in the fore-front of this movement to combine the manufacturing and exhibiting ends of the business under authority of the Motion Picture League of America, have made a close study of the by-laws and constitution of the National Electric Light Association, probably the most powerful organization in the United States and one which has reached its strength through the co-operation between the manufacturer and the middleman. It is planned to have the amended Constitution and By-laws follow as closely as possible those of the National Electric Light Association.

In connection with the section for the manufacturing end of the industry the argument has been advanced that this section will make unnecessary the proposed trade body now being formed in New York City. It has been argued that to make that trade body a success the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America must apply for membership as a body. Leading exhibitors of the country are a unit in declaring that the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America is a going concern, whereas the proposed New York organization to date is simply a matter of talk, and for that reason the going body should annex the proposed body rather than have "the tail wag the dog."

Chicago for Permanent Headquarters

Probably the most important action to be taken by the coming convention, after the settlement of the changes in the Constitution and By-laws is the establishment of a permanent headquarters for the League.

William Brandt, executive secretary of the Brooklyn branch of the League, has issued a statement in which he declares that New York City should be the headquarters. His line of argument is that ninety per cent of the executive officers of the producing and releasing companies are in New York City and he seems to think that because these officers are in New York City the headquarters of exhibitors likewise should be there.

A. P. Tugwell of Los Angeles offers the suggestion that because at least ninety per cent of the films produced are made in Los Angeles and along the Pacific coast the permanent headquarters of the League should be in Los Angeles.

Both gentlemen are sincere in their claims. But Alfred Hamburger, Aaron Jones, Charles J. Schaefer, William Sweeney and hundreds of showmen of the middle west declare that the permanent headquarters should be in Chicago.

In making their claims they do not mention that Essanay produces at Chicago, that William N. Selig likewise produces dramas at Chicago, that S. S. Hutchinson does his work there, that Watterson R. Rothacker leads the world in commercial film making at his Chicago plant, that the American Standard Motion Picture Company is active in Chicago, but they do say that Chicago is so situated geographically that the greater number of members of the League will receive their notifications of League activities twenty-four hours earlier than if headquarters were situated in New York City and approximately three days earlier than if headquarters were located in Los Angeles or any point on the Pacific coast.

The claims of the Chicago men are that it is more necessary to have headquarters at a point where all exhibitors and manufacturers may be reached at approximately the same time than it is that headquarters should be in close proximity with the manufacturing heads of the business.

The showmen of the middle west, while admiring the loyalty of Mr. Brandt to his own locality ridicule his claims that New York City should be the permanent headquarters. They likewise ridicule the claims of the Pacific coast, calling attention to the fact that everything in the producing line is primarily directed from the headquarters of the manufacturing company.

The delegates will be asked to vote on this matter of headquarters and they will find that it is a subject for considerable thought. The Louisiana exhibitor will feel that he is entitled to receive notice of League activities just as rapidly as his fellow exhibitor in New York City receives such a notice. The Minnesota, North and South Dakota, Nebraska, Kansas, Iowa, and Missouri, Arkansas and Mississippi, and as a matter of fact all exhibitors who recognize Chicago as the hub of the United States should feel exactly the same about the matter.

Many of them appear to feel that they will have little difficulty in persuading New York City and Los Angeles that the claim of Chicago as headquarters should be recognized.

Leading exhibitors in the Middle West who are in close touch with the manufacturing end of the business predict that if the League at the coming convention maintains a middle of the road course and names Chicago as League headquarters it will not be a great while before the leading film manufacturers and concerns move their executive offices to Chicago.

It is common gossip among the trade that the two leading distributors in the film business today have been figuring for months on moving their executive offices from New York City to Chicago. The exodus of these two men from the eastern metropolis would practically force the removal of all of the executive offices now located in New York City to the big western city on the shores of Lake Michigan.

MOTOGRAPHY, desiring to be of all possible assistance to exhibitors visiting Chicago, will be glad to make arrangements for hotel reservations. Exhibitors desiring reservations will kindly name the price they desire to pay for hotel accommodations and name the hotel preferred. Visiting exhibitors may have their mail and telegrams addressed in care of MOTOGRAPHY. Every effort will be made to make delivery of these letters and telegrams from MOTOGRAPHY'S booth at the Coliseum.

Convention to Elect Officers

The third question of real importance to come before the convention will be the election of officers. It is acknowledged that the League needs a big man to run its affairs and to give it the standing it should have in the business world.

By the thinking exhibitors it is conceded that the election of a socialist or a hot-head or a man who brags of his conquests over any other branch of the business would be an error. It is conceded that the next president of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America must be an individual with that finely adjusted balance wheel that can bring all branches of the business together.

The ideal selection would be a man who has had experience in all ends of the business. He should be a man who is neither pro-manufacturer or pro-exhibitor, nor anti-manufacturer or anti-exhibitor.

There are three candidates for president:

F. J. Rembusch of Shelbyville, Indiana.

Lee A. Ochs, of New York City.

Fred J. Herrington of Pittsburgh, Pa.

Mr. Rembusch is an exhibitor and a manufacturer. According to his own statements he is an exhibitor first and a manufacturer second, but he believes in peace and prosperity rather than warfare and starvation. He believes that the motion picture business is a five cent business. He believes that there is more money to be made in a million nickels than in a hundred thousand dimes or fifty thousand quarters. He believes that the money to be made in the business should be distributed between the men at present in the business. He believes that some action should be taken to prevent a surplus of competition and the opening of numerous motion picture houses which are doomed to fail before they rent their first film.

Mr. Rembusch says that he has a well-defined plan to prevent the opening of new houses where statistics show these new houses cannot be run on a money making basis. He has not confided this plan to MOTOGRAPHY but if his plan is a success it only can be made such by the co-operation of the manufacturers and distributors.

The Washington authorities recently have ruled that a film distributor may choose his customers. Broadly this rule also means that film distributors or manufacturers may refuse to rent to certain persons the films distributed.

The plan of Mr. Rembusch for the curtailment of competition apparently takes this federal ruling into consideration and he no doubt plans to furnish the distributor and manufacturing companies with the necessary statistics that will keep unhealthy competition out of the film business.

Lee A. Ochs, the avowed candidate from New York City, makes his appeal on the statement that he forced the Board of Trade, during its recent show, to recognize the exhibitors and to contribute to the exhibitors 50 per cent of the proceeds of that show.

Rumors, unauthenticated, reaching this office would tend to show that there was a large deficit rather than any credit balance after the balance sheet was made up on the New York gathering.

Mr. Ochs also has declared himself as emphatically opposed to any form of the deposit system in the renting of films. In this stand he will find that he is radically opposed by numerous exhibitors throughout the country, many of whom look upon the deposit system as one of the best methods to keep down unhealthy competition. He also will find many exhibitors who feel as he does about the matter.

But it is generally believed that the deposit system is something outside of League business and when the League as a body attempts to dictate to the manufacturer as to whether he will or will not demand a deposit for the fulfillment of contracts, the League is skating on very thin legal ice. In other words, as a combination it is attempting to dictate the rules of another man's business methods.

But Mr. Ochs is an avowed candidate and as such will stand on the platform he has built, which head literally is "exhibitors first, last and all the time."

Fred J. Herrington, president of the League and a candidate for re-election, has said nothing regarding his platform. He stands on his record made since his election at San Francisco one year ago. His record speaks for itself. He has had his trial. If he has been successful and can so shape his course in the next year as to follow the desires of the League members, no doubt he will be re-elected.

If the league members feel that his record does not justify re-election, after the coming convention he will be known as "a former president of the Motion Picture League of America."

The constitution at present provides that the president of the league shall receive a salary of $300 a year and necessary traveling expenses. It has been proposed to eliminate this salary and to make the presidency of the League such an honorable office that the leading men of the business will seek it. To the leading men of the business the $300 is of no consequence.

But in lieu of paying this small salary to the president the present plan is to appoint an executive secretary who shall be in charge of the League's headquarters and who shall receive a living salary.

It has not been decided finally whether the office of executive secretary will be appointive or elective. It may be that the leaders of the movement will leave this appointment to the president but this is not thought to be wise, as the consensus of opinion appears to be that the executive secretaryship should be an office for a term of years and should not change with each administration.

Sweeney Has Clear Track

The only name mentioned for executive secretary is that of William J. Sweeney of Chicago. Mr. Sweeney is known wherever films are exhibited. He also is known wherever they are made. He is one of the pioneers of the business. He is one of the old showmen who forsook the saw-dust ring for the lure of the animated pictures. He forsook the motion pictures for the purpose of putting some organization in the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America. He was with it at the start and he will be with it at the finish, whether he is executive secretary or just a worker in the ranks. He is one man who can negotiate with the exhibitor and the manufacturer. He has the confidence of both. He will fight for the rights of the exhibitor and recognize the rights of the manufacturer. He remains with the business because he likes it. He is not a promoter. He is essentially a motion picture industry organizer.

Another and equally important question to be settled at the coming convention is the place of holding future annual meetings and annual motion picture shows. The present plan of holding the annual meetings in different cities is conceded to be an error.

In giving consideration to this question Chicago again must be placed in the spot light. It is the one city in the country easy of access to all motion picture showmen. It is easier for the Atlantic coast showmen to journey to Chicago than it is for the western coast showmen to journey to New York City. And those showmen who desire to see how motion pictures are made have the same advantages in Chicago as they would have on the western coast.

There are many other questions to come before the convention, so many in fact that it is impossible to enumerate them. Numerous of the non-thinking showmen of the business have written headquarters that they propose to attempt to infuse certain strictures in the manufacturing end of the industry that apparently have no place in the annual convention of the League. Any of these attempts will be killed in their infancy as "Harmony" is to be the watchword.

While the show to be held in connection with the annual convention is of secondary importance in so far as the industry itself is concerned, it is of primary importance to the manufacturer. It is at this show that the executives of the manufacturing companies will have an opportunity to become personally acquainted with the exhibitors. It is at this show that the manufacturers will show their wares and will prove that they are willing to do their share in behalf of the industry at large.

Big Manufacturers' Exhibit

Nearly every manufacturer of any importance in the country has contracted for space at the show to be held at the Coliseum, Chicago, July 12 to 18, inclusive. Many of them have spent thousands of dollars arranging a program that will attract exhibitors to their releases.

Essanay is arranging a National Exhibitors' Day, to be held Tuesday, July 11, at the plant of the Essanay Company in Chicago and the company has arranged to bring nearly every one of its stars from far distant points to greet the exhibitors.

Paramount, Metro and Vitagraph each will have a day set aside for them during show week. The plans of these companies are being carefully guarded but it is predicted that each will endeavor to outdo the other in calling attention to their respective products.

The entertainment committee has arranged to hold dancing each day in the Coliseum annex and it is planned now that some of the rabid motion picture fans of the country will be given an opportunity to dance with their motion picture idols in exchange for a small fee which ultimately will find its way to the treasury of the League.

Another innovation is to place the Chicago committee in charge of the show in special suits. These suits are now being built on the very latest lines. They will be of the most prominent tiger stripe, in order that the committee members may be seen from any distance on the horizon.

If the plans to unite the entire industry in two sections of the League is consummated, at future shows only members of the manufacturing section will be allowed to purchase and show their wares. That portion of the manufacturing section which may not care enough for the business to contribute for floor space and incidentally to the treasury of the League will not be allowed to take advantage of these meetings for the purpose of personal capitalization.

Ten Convention Specials

From the latest reports there will be not less than ten special trains to carry state delegations to Chicago, other than those already mentioned in previous issues of Motography. Kansas City is planning on two special trains, one to be in charge of Elmer Pierson of V. L. S. E., Inc., and the other under charge of Charlie Harding of the Kansas City Metro office.

Owing to the unfortunate controversy between the Chicago hotels, hundreds of visiting showmen have not arranged their hotel reservations.

The committee has decided that the convention will be held at the Hotel Sherman but the management of the La Salle hotel is threatening to make trouble if this decision is adhered to.

Some time ago, according to the La Salle management, Fred J. Herrington, president of the League, contracted with the La Salle to bring the Sixth annual convention to that house. The committee in charge claims that President Herrington went beyond his authority in making this contract. In this contention the committee is upheld by the Constitution, which reads: "All contracts where arrangements are made for holding conventions and exhibits shall be signed by a special committee, appointed by the executive committee, and no state or local organization shall have the authority to make arrangement for holding national conventions until the committee, appointed by the executive committee shall have read all contracts and approved same."

About thirty per cent of the motion picture showmen of the Chicago district attended a meeting held at the Colonial Theater on June 28 which had been called by Alfred Hamburger to make arrangements to take care of the delegates to the national convention.

The meeting was probably the most representative ever held at Chicago. Showmen of the Middle West will realize this when they read that seated on the same stage were Aaron Jones, of Jones, Linick and Schaefer; Nate Ascher of Ascher Brothers, Alfred Hamburger, Charles J. Schaefer and Bob Levy.

Several prominent residents of Chicago addressed the meeting and arrangements were completed for taking care of the showmen visitors to the city and their wives.

"CIVILIZATION" IN CHICAGO

One Hundred and Fifty People Used in the Presentation of Ince War and Peace Spectacle at Grand Theater

Thomas H. Ince's "Civilization" opened at Cohen's Grand Opera House in Chicago on June 30, for a run which is expected to be of from four to six weeks.

One hundred and fifty people are used in the presentation of the big war and peace spectacle. Fifty of these are employed in the action prologue, fifty in the chorus and the remainder in the splendid orchestra. The latter is under the direction of Victor L. Schertzinger, who came for the Chicago run from New York, where "Civilization" is now running past its seventy-fifth performance at the Criterion Theater on Broadway.

Thomas H. Ince and his family are in Chicago where the prominent but unassuming producer took personal charge of the showing of his latest film handicraft. The impressive stage sets, the cast, the orchestra, the music, in fact every detail of the performance are in exact duplicate of those used in the New York presentation. Two screens are employed. The foreword of some length is thrown upon the special sub-title screen while the stage is being set in the rear. The drama itself appears upon the picture screen which forms a part of the design of the scenic setting.

The next city to be favored with "Civilization" will be Brighton Beach, New York, where the shadow drama opens July 9. Leander Richardson has been engaged as advance man for "Civilization," in addition to J. L. Barnard and Lou Housman who are also handling the press work in Chicago. Mr. Richardson was formerly a member of William A. Brady's publicity force with the World Film. After a few weeks in Chicago, he will proceed to seven other leading cities of the country where "Civilization" is shortly to be shown.

Several state rights buyers are bidding for this picture and Mr. Ince will remain in Chicago until these deals are closed.

"LA TOSCA" TO BE FILMED

Prodigals Return to Universal City From Eastern Studios—Forty-one Companies Now Working in West

Director Rex Ingram of the Universal Company will produce a film version of "La Tosca" under the working title of "The Chalice of Sorrow." The atmosphere will be strictly Mexican and special sets are being built and costumes designed particularly for the players. This will be a five-reel production in which Cleo Madison will play the featured lead, assisted by Wedgewood Nowell, Charles Cummings and John McDermott.

The Universal Company is closing its eastern studios at Fort Lee, N. J., and the players are arriving at the western city. The latest arrivals include Rex Ingram, Bill Dwyer, Jane Gail, Matt Moore, William Garwood, Joe Gerrard, William Welch, Edna Hunter and Lois Alexander.

When the exodus is completed there will be forty-one companies working at Universal City. A printed card has been given to each newcomer to be handed out to the "native sons." These cards read "I think the climate is great," "I am from New York," "I will stay here as long as I receive a salary," "I don't want to rent a bungalow," " I have already purchased a machine."

H. O. Davis, president and general manager, made a flying trip to the west and completed preparations for the reception of the additional companies so that immediately upon arriving each director and star will be able to go to work. Also matters were arranged in the laboratory so as to enable them to take over the increased work caused by the great transference. Mr. Davis will remain in New York about ten days and then return to California to remain permanently.

Vice President and General Manager Davis of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company recently returned to Los Angeles from two business trips to New York.

Chicago Gets Mutual Distributing Offices

FREULER RE-ELECTED PRESIDENT

EXECUTIVE offices in Chicago for the distribution of Mutual films will be established at once. This is the result of a unanimous vote of the board of directors of the Mutual Film Corporation held in New York City June 27.

President Freuler claims that Chicago is the logical location for a national distributing center as he can call a meeting of sixty-eight branch managers and have them together in the Windy City with a minimum loss of time. This does not mean the doing away with the eastern offices which will continue as usual. He pointed out that communication can be carried on easily by means of the Twentieth Century. The eastern offices, however, will concern themselves particularly with problems of production while Chicago will deal with distribution. President Freuler expressed his conviction that the commercial unrest which has been prevalent during the past year has passed as far as the Mutual is concerned, at least.

The action of President Freuler in choosing Chicago for the national distributing center of the Mutual company is the first definite move which has been made in confirmation of the rumor that a number of the big film companies which have their executive offices in the east are considering Chicago as a more central point and more easily accessible to their numerous branch offices both in the east and the far west. This step of the Mutual Company will be watched with great interest by others in the film industry who are contemplating making the same move, and undoubtedly will be followed by definite action on the part of many other companies.

At the meeting of the Mutual directorate John R. Freuler was re-elected president of the organization. A number of changes were made in the lesser offices: Crawford Livingston, former chairman of the Executive Board, was elected first vice-president, George W. Hall of Chicago, second vice-president, Samuel S. Hutchinson, treasurer and Samuel M. Field, general counsel, was re-elected secretary.

A new executive board was formed headed by John R. Freuler as chairman. The other members are Samuel S. Hutchinson, Samuel L. Field, J. C. Graham, assistant to the president, and T. H. Cochrane of Portage, Wis.

CHURCH LAUDS PATHE SERIAL

Benefit Performance and Sermon Utilize "Who's Guilty?" Series—John Philip Sousa Composes Simple Song for "The Weaker Strain"

The Pathe series "Who's Guilty?" bears the distinction of not only being sanctioned by the church but being advertised from the pulpit by a minister who recommends that every member of his congregation see each chapter of this photo novel.

In spite of the fact that seats were selling at prices ranging from two to three dollars more than two thousand people packed Loew's Theater, New Rochelle, New York, on the occasion of a performance for the benefit of the Blessed Sacrament Church, to witness a showing of "Who's Guilty?" and to greet Anna Nilsson and Tom Moore who appeared in person. This photoplay was chosen because of the belief of the members of the large Catholic parish that it was worthy of the attention of every man and woman. At each appearance of Miss Nilsson and Mr. Moore on the screen there was enthusiastic hand clapping and when they finally stepped upon the stage the applause was deafening.

Another incident of this endorsement by the church was shown in the fact that Rev. D. J. Bradley of the Highland Avenue Church, Cleveland, Ohio, was so impressed by these photo novels that he chose them for the topic of his sermon. Dr. Bradley says he approves of these picture because they make people think and will help us all to realize how much we often share in responsibility for crime which others have committed.

Dr. Bradley's sermon was based on the first two chapters of this series and in closing he advised every member of his congregation to see this series of pictures.

Director "Larry" McGill of the Arrow Film Corporation, faced a problem when filming "The Weaker Strain," one of the fourteen photo novels in the "Who's Guilty?" serial. In a number of scenes the heroine had to be actually singing and usually there is nothing sillier than watching a motion picture in which singing is the basis of a scene. The director unfolded his troubles to John Philip Sousa, and asked the musician whether he could write both the music and lyrics of a song so simple that by watching the lips of the singer on the screen the audience could read the words and in imagination supply the simple music. Mr. Sousa created a composition called "The Song of the Dagger," in which every word is but one syllable and consonant sounds rather than vowels are used so that the lips could be most impressive. Arrangements have been made whereby the song will be brought out for the public within a few weeks. It has a maximum range of twelve notes, not a sharp or flat is used, and every word is a short one.

Oklahoma Exhibitors to Chicago

The executive board of the Oklahoma branch of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America convened on June 30 at the Lee Hutchins Hotel, Oklahoma City.

This was a special meeting of the board to take up unfinished business that was left over from the February meeting. Ways and means of assisting the Chicago Convention, July 10 to 18, were also discussed. A party will be made up composed of delegates and visiting members to attend the big Chicago show.

Mabel Has New Pilot

James Young is no longer the director of Mabel Normand. Mr. Young directed a few scenes for the former Keystoness, then resigned. He has been succeeded by J. Farrell McDonald, late of the American Woman Film Company, and for a long time with the Biograph.

Full Pay for Film Men at War

VITAGRAPH, V. L. S. E. AND METRO ENCOURAGE THEIR SOLDIERS

SEVERAL of the leading film corporations have announced their intention of paying their salaries in full to employes who are called to the colors on account of the situation in Mexico.

In taking this commendable step these corporations are in line with the foremost concerns in the various industries of the country. Among the film corporations who have made the above statement in regard to caring for the finances of the soldiers from their organizations are Vitagraph, V. L. S. E. and Metro.

In addition the heads of these companies are in many cases giving their employes every encouragement to enlist, assuring them that their places will be theirs again upon their return from the front. Commodore J. Stuart Blackton and Albert E. Smith of the Vitagraph company have caused an announcement to be posted in their studios emphasizing the above and dispelling any fear in the minds of members of the National Gard that their finances will suffer because of their service to the country.

Richard A. Rowland, president of the Metro Pictures Corporation, announced personally practically the same facts. This statement from Mr. Rowland came when several employes in the executive offices, publicity and scenario departments and among the employes in the studios, were instructed to report to their regiments in the National Guard with a fair prospect of seeing some lively service along the Rio Grande.

Among those who have already answered the call in the Metro offices are Howard Irving Young, scenario writer at the Metro-Rolfe studio, Alexander Duane, in the publicity department, and Percy Scotfield, chief stage carpenter at the Metro-Rolfe studio. Both Young and Duane are members of the Seventh Regiment while Scotfield is in the Fourteenth of Brooklyn. Merritt Crawford, managing editor of The Pictures Magazine, and associated with Arthur James, director of publicity, who is a former member of the Seventh Regiment, and recently joined the Depot Battalion of the regiment, was ordered to the armory. As a member of the reserve he will assist in the recruiting work, do guard duty at the armory and drill new recruits. James Curtin, who is employed in the auditing department, under Charles K. Stern, is anticipating a call any moment from the First Battalion, New York Naval Militia, of which he is an active member.

Practically every producing company in the country is furnishing troops for the National Guard and in the majority of cases the soldiers' salaries continue to run in full.

MICHIGAN EXHIBITORS MEET

Unanimous Vote Given to Resume Semi-Annual Meetings—Next Convention to Be Held in Detroit—Officers Elected

The annual convention of the Michigan State Branch, No. 4, Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America, was held at the Hotel Wenonah, Bay City, Michigan, on June 13 and 14. Two executive sessions and one open session were held.

Tuesday morning was given up almost entirely to the registration of those in attendance and very little business of any kind was enacted. The afternoon session was given over almost entirely to the reports of the officers and the standing committees and the appointment of special convention committees. The evening was devoted to entertainment of the guests, seeing the sights, automobiling and visiting the various theaters.

The Wednesday morning session was a most enthusiastic one and a great deal of business was transacted. A unanimous vote was given for the resuming of semi-annual meetings, and Detroit was decided upon as the meeting place for the next semi-annual convention to be held in December. It was also unanimously agreed to hold the annual meeting in Detroit as this city, being the headquarters of the state film exchanges, it was believed that more people would attend meetings held in Detroit than in any other city in Michigan.

At the afternoon session President Herrington of the national organization addressed the meeting on the subject of the moving picture industry, past, present and future; he also spoke most interestingly on the work of his association, pointing out the great importance of co-operation between exhibitors, exchanges and producers. Another speaker for the afternoon was Peter Jeup, who told what the Michigan association had done, and commented upon unfavorable legislative matters.

The election of officers resulted as follows: President, August Kleist, Mt. Clemens; vice-presidents, J. M. Neal, Lansing; S. A. Moran, Ann Arbor, and H. L. Rahn, Bay City; secretary, A. J. Moeller, Howell, and treasurer, George Thatcher, Bay City. Mr. Simpson of Bay City was elected national vice-president. Seven delegates to the national convention were elected.

While a great deal of enthusiasm was displayed by all in attendance the committees in charge were greatly disappointed by the small number present at the convention. It was hoped that the next session held in Detroit would be very much larger, and that every exhibitor in the state would plan to be present.

EXHIBITORS STIRRED

Now Noted Article in Motography Entitled "Do We Know Our Own Business," by Frank J. Rembusch, Starts Discussion

Country-wide discussion among film circles, particularly among exhibitors has been stirred up by the striking article by Frank J. Rembusch, "Do We Know Our Own Business?" which appeared in the June 10 issue of Motography. Mr. Rembusch is one of the most prominent exhibitors and business men in Indiana and he is a candidate for the office of president of the M. P. E. L. of America. His home is at Shelbyville. In his article referred to Mr. Rembusch analyzed the motion picture exhibiting business with fearless words and pointed out the lack of business methods unfortunately so often found to exist in theater management.

Following are extracts from some of the letters which the article brought forth:

Remington, Ind., June 17, 1916.

Motography, Chicago:

Mr. Rembusch's article, "Do We Know Our Own Business," in Motography hit me right where I live. He is the first one in this business that I have heard who had nerve enough to "speak out in church." He has been in long enough to know. I haven't. But I want to say that he gave a few sub-conscious thoughts to my growing pains. And I have been in the business but a year, at that.

This is a village; 1,000 souls, mostly widows, old maids and orphans. From his article I judge that a Packard hits the same chuck-holes that a Ford does, arguments as to which rides the easiest waived. Town of 6,000, box-office receipts $300 a week. One-sixth of $300 is $50 a week. That is me. Mr. Rembusch certainly knows what he is talking about. The revivals, the ice cream socials, the weather, the carnivals, the tent shows, etc. Everything going up but the gate receipts. Oh, his ten commandments are "there." And they always will be until we wabblers get enough brains to working in the right direction. Can there be much stability in anything theatrical though? Isn't our business doomed to be ballasted and un-ballasted?

But I want to thank you for that article. I was about to take the needle on my business to the tune of $1,000 or two. Now I think I shall go a little slow. Wait until I can get the bit in my mouth and see the road. You get me that I was about to pay real money for a guess on what a big picture business could be "did" in Remington.

That confounded directory of new theaters in a certain publication had me thinking that I could unearth a little U. S. mint in Remington if I spent enough dollars on a real classy little "Rialto."

With just a year's experience with rather mediocre equipment, programs and features, I hadn't found anything solid enough for a foundation or precedent except the dope in the trade journals. Thanks to you I am now able to again tread the earth and await developments. What are we going to do?

Yours very truly, Frank Keith Spencer, Manager Lyric Theater, Remington, Indiana.

Dayton, Ohio, June 8, 1916.

Dear Mr. Rembusch:

We read your very interesting article in the June 10 Motography and want to congratulate you on it. As you well know there are certain reasons why people do not attend picture shows in summer and winter and spring and fall; and each one of these seasons have about fifty-seven varieties of other reasons which influence attendance. We wondered if you would be kind enough to give us your opinion on certain points.

There are thirty-seven picture shows in Dayton, five and ten-cent houses; ten of which are located in the central part of the city. Three of these are ten-cent houses and the others are five-cent houses with occasional ten-cent days. We have a Keith house which is now running summer vaudeville—fifteen hundred seats—for ten cents.

As you so truly state in your article, none of the picture houses are making money. Do you think it would be possible to get the exhibitors together and raise the price to ten cents for the five-cent houses, ten cents for the matinees and twenty cents for the nights of the ten-cent houses? Would it, in your opinion affect our attendance if such an agreement could be reached among the exhibitors? Would people pay the increased price or would we drive away what little business we have?

It seems strange that people, even those of supposed intelligence, put picture houses all in one class. They do not do so with restaurants or hotels or any other business. When they go to a better restaurant or grill they expect to pay a higher price than in a dairy lunch. But in the few cases in which we have shown pictures at advanced prices we have had some of our better patrons frankly tell us that no picture is worth more than ten cents.

If it will not take up too much of your time, will you mind giving us your advice on the above problems? We shall consider ourselves under great obligations to you.

Very truly yours, Majestic Theater, Per Gerber and Haas.

St. Louis, June 6, 1916.

Frank J. Rembusch, Esq.

Dear Sir: I read with quite a little interest your very interesting article in this week's number of Motography, headed "Do We Know Our Own Business?"

I think your article shows that you have benefited very greatly by your experience in the motion picture business, and have a keen grasp of the reasons for success or failure in that branch of business.

Yours, Samuel Bowman, president Automatic Ticket Selling and Cash Register Company, New York.

War Hits Southern Exhibitors

Exhibitors in the states along the Mexican border have been hit "where they live" by the war. Movements of troops mobilizing toward the scene of the danger and the constant menace of raids from Mexican bandits, to say nothing of the intense excitement at the prospect of active warfare, has thrown the picture business into a state of chaos and uncertainty. People who are not familiar with the keen racial feelings existing between Mexicans and Americans cannot realize the difficulties of exhibiting in the border states. Many houses which depended upon Mexicans largely are now practically patronless. Many houses are closed and others are showing but two or three nights a week. These will close also if war is actually begun.

For originality in overcoming the war detriment to business T. E. Larson, manager of the Orpheum theater, Santa Rita, New Mexico, and the Elk theater, of Silver City, New Mexico, is entitled to a niche in the advertising hall of fame. Both of the theaters are situated near the Mexican border, where the residents are in constant dread of a visitation from bandits. The Mutual special feature, "Damaged Goods," was booked for both houses recently. Mr. Larson, seeking an attractive and an unusual way to let people know about this great picture, got hold of $100,000 in Mexican money on which he had printed, both in English and Spanish, the announcement that "Damaged Goods" was to play at his theaters.

The innovation met with a hearty response, and large audiences turned out for each performance. Mr. Larson in distributing this huge sum of money suffered no pecuniary loss as Mexican currency is at no premium, and it is safe to conjecture that the cost of the printing exceeded the outlay in obtaining the money.

A Bit of Sad News

The sunshine drama is to lose one of its finest and most universally beloved interpreters. It is reported upon good authority that Marguerite Clark, the bright little luminary of the Famous Players Company, is to depart from the screen next fall to accept a speaking role in a new production under the management of Charles Dillingham. It is to be hoped that the capable little actress will not remain permanently away from the silent drama.

"The Public Be Pleased"

L. C. SMITH, manager of the New Kingston Theater, 1068 St. Johns place, Brooklyn, N. Y., is not only one of the youngest but one of the most successful exhibitors in Greater New York. He was early attracted to the field of motion pictures, and began to study the game from the exhibitor's standpoint at a time when it was given little consideration by serious minded people.

L. C. Smith.

He has kept in the van of the progress of the art until at the present time when it has been accorded its rightful place in the field of entertainment. Mr. Smith, in the New Kingston Theater and New Kingston Airdrome, both models of architectural art, caters to a clientele of patrons not surpassed in the city of Brooklyn.

His success has been honestly won, for his slogan first, last and always is "The public be pleased." This genial manager absolutely insists on quality from the film exchanges for his patrons, and courtesy from all employees to his patrons.

Mr. Smith was one of the first of the exhibitors to inaugurate the special Saturday morning matinees for the "little folks," which proved a decided success.

He is an organization man in the true sense of the word and can always be depended upon to do his full share in everything pertaining to the good of the Brooklyn Exhibitors' Association and the motion picture art. At present he is running "The Iron Claw" and Metro, V-L-S-E, Fox, Pathe and Triangle feature pictures. The latter he uses twice a week, booking them through Samuel P. Reiben of the Big T Film Company in Brooklyn.

Beach Theater Contains Hotel and Bath House

By S. G. Parker

G. K. Jorgenson, the premier exhibitor in Galveston, Texas, the island city, some time ago interested local capitalists in an enterprise which is of particular interest to the picture world.

Mr. Jorgenson has operated a number of theaters in Galveston, several on the beach and a few downtown—the Beach Crystal, the Crystal Airdome, the Crystal Theater, the Crystal Vaudeville Theater, etc. He erected the Crystal Theater in Dallas, which is now operated by P. G. Cameron.

Mr. Jorgenson's new enterprise has many novel features. Under the general heading of "Crystal Palace," a huge structure has been erected. In this building is a hotel, a theater, bathhouse, dancing pavilion, etc.

The property on which the building stands is valued at $150,000, and the bare concrete structure represents a cost of over $100,000. When completely equipped, it will run $75,000 more.

In design the Crystal Palace is a decided departure from the usual bathhouse and pavillion found along the Gulf Coast. There is no wood in the Crystal Palace. It is built of solid reinforced concrete and is fireproof throughout.

In addition to the usual private bath rooms and lockers, the building contains a big swimming pool, gymnasium, Turkish baths, hot salt water baths, rest rooms and facilities for ice skating, in addition to the hotel and picture theater. The skating rink is 75x75 feet, and during this fall ice ice skating, a decided novelty in the warm southern climate, will be an innovation.

The picture theater seats 700 in comfortable upholstered chairs. A large unit style electrically operated musical instrument furnishes music for the theater, in addition to an orchestra, which alternates in the promenade of the pavilion and the theater. Throughout, the house represents all that is modern in seating, heating, ventilation, cooling, music and projection equipment.

Stick to Your Guns

By John H. Barncord

Owner Lamara Theater, Phoenix, Arizona.

In order to find out the details of the business I started into the game in partnership at Winslow, Arizona, and after four months withdrew from the business there and came to Phoenix, where I purchased the Lamara Theater.

Here, the "pass evil" was one of the worst things I had to overcome and it seemed to me that every public official and his family had a pass to my theater. Of course, this was disgusting and I absolutely abolished all free admittance to the Lamara, carefully seeing to it that every person who entered my doors had paid for that privilege.

I had noticed that a great many theater men, on acquiring a business, put a lot of "pep" into the work until business became profitable, then were satisfied to rest on their laurels and sort of let the business run itself. I have rigidly adhered to my original enthusiasm and spent every hour of the business day at my theater utilizing every ounce of my energy toward its betterment.

Here's the practical foundation of my success:

The best feature program obtainable.

The best projection modern projectors and good operators can give.

Roomy, comfortable seats.

Exceptionally good ventilation.

Ample, but fair, admission prices and seeing that every patron pays for the privilege of seeing my program.

Courteous and persistent attention to business.

Conservative and truthful advertising.

I have no idea that any of these principles are new to the business, but perhaps the strict adherence to them is, at least, not general.

My program is changed three times weekly and comprises:

Fox—Saturday, Sunday and Monday.

Equitable—Tuesday, Wednesday.

World—Thursday, Friday.

I want to thank you for the interest you are taking in the success of the motion picture theaters, also, and to wish you continued success in your efforts.

P. S.—Don't forget that I always enjoy my copy of Motography. Please enter my order for one year's subscription and forward invoice for same at once.

The Regent Seats 600—Every Day

When not engaged in the pleasant business of operating a highly successful theater, L. L. Levine practices law at 215 Montague street, Brooklyn, New York. He is a member of the firm of Seley and Levine, and has had the right to practice at the New York bar since he was twenty-two. That was ten years ago.

Regent Theater, Brooklyn, L. L. Levine, manager.

Only the latter four of these ten years have had anything to do with the motion picture business, however.

Two years ago Mr. Levine built the Regent Theater at Fulton and Bedford Avenues in Brooklyn. It seats six hundred people—and does it right along—and is one of the prettiest and most physically perfect theaters in the populated end of Long Island. With the comfort of his patrons foremost in his mind, Mr. Levine had installed a one hundred per cent ventilating system, opera chairs, a Gold Fibre screen, two Powers 6A projection machines and courteous, efficient house service. For music, he decided upon a four piece orchestra. The investment was costly, but in its lasting and pleasing qualities it has proven worth while.

Twice a week the Regent Theater receives Triangle pictures from the Big T Film Corporation. On these nights its admission charges are 10 and 15 cents. On other nights but 10 cents is charged. Within a block from Mr. Levine's theater the Loew and Fox circuits are represented. But competition doesn't worry this exhibitor in the least. He has only his own entertainment to sell, and he makes that as wholesome and complete as he can. Besides Triangle, the Regent uses Fox, Metro, and Bluebird service.

A fighter for what is right and better, Mr. Levine is an active figure in Brooklyn film affairs. He was one of the organizers of the Brooklyn Exhibitors' Association, and has been named as one of the delegates to the coming exhibitors' convention in Chicago. He holds the office of First Vice-President in the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of Brooklyn.

Makes Success Grow Out of Failures

When Frank H. Mackey, manager of the Grand Theater, of Elwood, Indiana, celebrated the second anniversary of his coming into town the local newspaper, The Call Leader, came out with a large picture of him, a reader about his bill, and a six-inch ad.

In two years Mr. Mackey has brought his house up from one with a continuel deficit to one which is very much worth while. It is natural that Mr. Mackey should have enjoyed real success with the Grand, as he is old and experienced in the game, although still a young man so far as the calendar goes.

For eleven years he was manager of his own traveling company, Kurray and Mackey. Following this he managed houses in both Salem and Warren, Ohio. Both these theaters were rather run down at the heel when he took hold of them but efficient business methods, a careful study of the wants of his patrons and eternal courtesy and consideration added to good clean performances built success out of failure.

George Wight, publicity man of the American Film Company, Santa Barbara, has been placed in charge of the company's scenario department, succeeding William Pigott. Mr. Wight will continue to direct the publicity work of the studio. He is a New York and Chicago newspaper man and came to the Flying A studios from the San Francisco Examiner in February. The American is in the market for the best in the way of good stories by trained writers or well known authors.

DeWolf Hopper, the prominent Fine Arts star, will soon appear in a series of two-reel Triangle comedies, to be produced at the Fine Arts studio, and released at spaced intervals on the regular Triangle program.

Mothers Hinder Children's Matinees

BY M. J. MINTZ

Manager Harvard Theater, Chicago, Illinois.

THE keynote of success for the special performance for children at moving picture theaters is co-operation between the manager and the mothers. The reason for the many ineffectual attempts to run these programs is that the partnership is entirely one-sided—the manager has to do all the co-operating.

What the mothers desire is not clean, wholesome entertainment for their children but a day nursery where the little ones will be taken care of while the parents attend bridge parties.

What the clubwomen crave—and they talk so beautifully about this movement—is not to look after the welfare of the younger generation but to be able to tell at the club what they have accomplished in bettering the community.

What the children want is not considered, the idea being to force upon the kiddies instructive, educational films which their elders or the childless clubwomen desire them to see.

My experience with these matinees is, I believe, typical of nine-tenths of the exhibitors who have tried to cater to the public in this way. The community in which my theater is located is an exclusive one made up of representative American families of the better class, intellectual and affluent, whose childen have every advantage and are supposed to be well brought up.

The members of the Woman's Club and the Parents-Teachers Organization of the neighborhood came to me and asked if I would not consider running a special matinee for children. I assured them I was most willing to do so on one condition—that the mothers and clubwomen would co-operate with me in this matter—that they would come with the children to these matinees. They all declared this was their intention, and the clubwomen said they would see that at least eight members of their club were present at each performance. They were most enthusiastic about the proposition and I began to catch their spirit.

First of all they wanted to choose the program themselves. I agreed to help them all I could in this way but warned them that I could not always get just the film I wanted at just the time I wanted it. Their idea was that the entertainment must be educational, the children must be taught, they would choose only instructive subjects and if the young people did not enjoy them at first they could be trained to like them. I argued with them on this point because I have children of my own and know what makes them happy and it seems to me that when the children have been studying in school for five days in the week they might be allowed a little real fun on Saturday. I notice the fathers and mothers use the motion picture theater as a means of entertainment and relaxation and know they would not care to be forced to see only the films that were "good for them." But I was dealing with women and might just as well have saved my breath. The first program was planned by the ladies. It consisted of Salisbury's Wild Animal Pictures, the Deep Sea pictures, and at the end a short fairy story—for the kiddies' sake I was thankful for the little fairy story put on almost as an afterthought.

My plan was to run this special matinee from one to two o'clock on Saturday immediately preceding the regular afternoon performance. The first day arrived, the children all came accompanied by their mothers, automobiles drove up and let out a party of eight or ten children accompanied by one of the mothers, another followed, the house was rapidly filling with a very enthusiastic audience. I thought this was great and began to congratulate myself. The program started, the children were interested at first, then they began to wiggle, gradually they became more restless and inattentive—they liked to see the fishes but they could not read in many cases and none of them could understand the descriptive subtitles of the deep sea pictures. Three or four of the women came to me very much upset—the children did not seem to care for and appreciate their carefully chosen program. I was secretly laughing to myself, but simply said I did not believe the subjects appealed to them and if they would allow me I would demonstrate what the children really wanted. I slipped into the office and wrote on a slide that Charlie Chaplin would be there on Tuesday of the next week and invited all the children to attend. The slide was thrown on the screen. Where were the restless, inattentive children now? They could all understand this. They clapped, they laughed, they screamed with delight. They could tell what they wanted to see on the screen if allowed any voice in the matter. It was about five minutes before the house could be quieted to show the remainder of the entertainment—the fairy story, which all thoroughly enjoyed.

The ladies suggested that I choose the program for the next week, so I did, starting with a cartoon comedy, followed by a picture of a little girl champion swimmer and diver and ending with a two-reel fairy-story. Did the children enjoy it? They hardly moved during the whole hour. Here was what they wanted, they could laugh, they could understand, they could enjoy.

But to return to the mothers and their promises, at this second performance the attendance was just cut in half and there were almost no mothers present with the children. The next performance cut this attendance in half and there were only children, and from that time on my children's hour was turned into a day nursery.

The children came by themselves, they did not stay only for their matinee but for the afternoon performance—the mothers told them to wait until they were called for. They paid five cents for an hour show and stayed two hours and a half while the mothers went shopping or played bridge.

Then I began my duties as nursemaid—and take my word for it three to five hundred children gathered under one roof are no small responsibility. If any accident should befall one of these petted darlings where would be my reputation and that of my theater?

A mother arrived at one o'clock with four small children and informed me these were her babies, she did not want them to stay after the special program because she did not care to have them see the feature which was being shown for the afternoon, would I please see that these four children were brought out of the theater and started home at two o'clock. The next mother appeared and was most unkind in her language—to put it mildly—because I had allowed her children to stay through the afternoon performance the previous week and she wanted them to come home as soon as their program was over for she worried when they did not arrive until half past three. The third parent wanted me to be sure that her children stayed until she came for them, she didn't know just when it would be because she was going to attend a club meeting, but would I please see that they did not come out before she came for them because there was no one home to take care of them. And so it went, most of the parents not even coming near the theater but simply sending their children. And those eight chaperones from the club who were always to be present? They had vanished as the myth which they were.

The children tired from sitting still so long so they ran up and down the aisles, they fussed with each other, they brought candy, peanuts and popcorn into the house and it looked like a picnic ground after a church outing. I would not have objected to this so much at their own show but it continued during the regular afternoon performance and they annoyed the older people.

And then the mothers began to stream in after their youngsters in the middle of the regular matinee. "I just want to go inside a minute to get my babies." They went in but couldn't find the children readily so they fluttered around the house and in many instances called the children by name from one aisle to the other. Then they had to get them ready, put on their hats and coats and see that no one and no thing was left behind —and all this time my regular patrons were being annoyed, they could not see the picture, the noise and confusion spoiled the feature for them.

To protect myself against the anger of the mothers whose children would stay although they were forbidden to do so I showed a slide immediately after the special matinee to the effect that all children having permission of their parents might stay to see the afternoon performance, the others would please pass out. I tried to make the mothers understand that it was not their dimes I wanted but their presence. I would gladly have let in every mother free if she would only have come with her little ones.

Some people claim that anything done for the children is a good advertisement—perhaps it is in a way but at the same time it is very detrimental in others. In the first place I had to pay more for my special films to be shown during the children's hour than I took in at the box office. Again these children who had stayed through the afternoon feature are questioned by their parents as to how good the show was. Probably it was a subject far beyond their comprehension and they would say "It was no good at all." The parents would accept this immature and unreliable judgment any say, "Well we will go to the other theater tonight, Clara says the show at the Harvard is no good."

The advocates of films for children may be right in their stand on this subject but I contend that there must either be a co-operation of the public and the manager on this phase of the business or there must be no programs for the kiddies. From the experience gained I may some day start a creche but never again a children's special performance under conditions as they exist at present.

In my opinion this problem of the children and the moving picture theater can only be solved in one of two ways—either by barring the children entirely up to a certain age, or by passing a city ordinance to the effect that no children be allowed in a picture theater unless accompanied by parents or some older person. In this way the parents can be their own censors and each one will be responsible for what their own offspring see. They can look over the program for the week, can study the billboards and the pictures showing different scenes in the film, ask the manager's opinion if they desire, and decide whether it is a film which they care to have their child see. The responsibility will then be upon the shoulders of the parents where it belongs and not on the manager who is simply trying to please his patrons.

The "No Children Admitted" Sign

By Margaret Foley.

It would seem to me that we who are interested in moving pictures have a great deal to complain about.

I have gone to a picture house, where the "No children admitted" was very much in evidence, and sat through a picture that could not have injured the morals of any child. Then probably, the very next evening, accompanied by my small daughter, visit the same theater, and see a film so full of suggestive situations and explanatory inserts, that it taxed all my resources to answer the questions put to me, with any degree of truthfulness and plausibility.

I seem to hear some childless person say—"the moving picture theater is no place for a child." May I ask, why? They are certainly a boon to the ordinary family man and housewife! Each has their own trying duties to perform in the course of the day's work, and at night, the hour or so of recreation makes them forget their worries for the time being. Along with this father and mother must come the children, for aside from the fact that most mothers would hesitate from a financial point of view, to call a nurse maid in for the hour or so, it is not always possible to procure one at a moment's notice.

The moving picture theater is the poor man's friend, and when children are barred, in most cases, so are the mothers. If, when one saw the "No children admitted" they could feel certain the film really was unfit for a child to see, and not merely a clever piece of advertising to fill the house, it would be a different matter. Then, you would feel safe in taking a child when this sign was not shown; but now, even in the films for children, one will see murders, hold-ups, shooting scrapes, everything to stir the imagination of the youngsters.

Is there not some writer who can put over good, clean, interesting scripts for the little ones? Elaine Sterne did, in her "Sonny Jim" series; these stories of hers were interesting to both young and old, judging from the packed houses the nights her films were shown.

As it is the women and children who practically support the neighborhood picture houses, it would seem to me that their "point of view" should be given a little consideration.

(Editor's Note: We are glad to publish this interesting letter on the motion picture theater and the child, from a mother's viewpoint, and would like to receive expressions from a number of mothers as to their feelings on this very important subject.)

Incandescent Lamps for Projection

BY W. T. BIRDSALL

THERE are certain differences between ordinary stereopticon and moving picture projection work. In Fig. 1 three representative rays are shown diverging from a point in the arc and brought to a focus by the condenser 1 at or within the projection lens 3, finally becoming incident on the screen 4 at three different points, a, b and c. The rays from any other point in the arc will, of course, behave similarly. The light passing through the point d of the slide 2 is represented by three characteristic rays which are brought to a focus on the screen at b by the projection lens 3. The characteristic features of this arrangement are that the transmitted light flux passes through the slide at low density on account of its great area (about 8 square inches), and the point of maximum density (the image of the radiant) occurs either in or beyond the projection lens.

The area of a motion picture film is only 0.616 square inch, and if the resulting picture is of the same size and brightness as the stereopticon picture it is evident that the same amount of light must pass through the film. This means that the film must be illuminated so as to be thirteen times as bright. To secure the enormous illumination necessary the film is placed at the most intense part of the beam, which is the image of the radiant. This is shown in Fig. 2, where an image of a point in the arc is formed on the film 2 by the condenser 1. The rays passing through this point are again focused on the screen 4 by the projection lens 3.

Recently the Mazda C lamp has been applied to motion picture work, and tests have shown that it can be made to yield even better results than the direct-current arc. The purpose of the present article, as explained for the Westinghouse Lamp Company in the Electric Journal, is to outline the technical limitations which are encountered in making this new application.

In the stereopticon, all the light from the condenser strikes the slide. If the radiant is fairly concentrated its image is smaller than the projection lens and, consequently, all of the light from the slide enters the projection lens. Thus, except for the usual losses in the lenses and slide, all of the light finds its way to the screen. Furthermore, since all of the light is used, the brightness of the picture is a function of the total lumens falling on the condenser and of no other factor. For this reason any lamp with a fairly concentrated filament will be satisfactory in stereopticon work.

In the motion picture machine, the brightness of the projected picture depends on the brightness of the image of the radiant superposed on the film. This, of course, depends in general on the intrinsic brilliancy or candlepower per square centimeter of the light source instead of the total candlepower. The intrinsic brilliancy of the crater of the carbon arc is usually figured at approximately 15,000 candlepower per square centimeter of area. The intrinsic brilliancy available in a tungsten incandescent lamp is about 2,000 at 0.35 watt per normal candlepower and only about 3,000 at the hitherto unheard-of efficiency of 0.30 watt per candle.

To yield the same results as the carbon arc this five to seven-fold difference must be canceled by some means of increasing the brightness of the image of the radiant.

There are only two methods of solution possible and both have been utilized. The first and most important of these consists in changing the magnification of the image of the radiant. If light from a source one square centimeter in area falls on a condenser, and thence on an image ten times as large, the light flux density in the image is, neglecting losses, only one-tenth as great as at the source. It is evident that, by changing the position of the condenser a smaller image can be formed which will be brighter in inverse proportion to its area. If the image is of constant size, just large enough to cover the film, the radiant must be increased in area. Consequently, a radiant of low intrinsic brilliancy but large area can be used to replace one of higher intrinsic brilliancy and the same candlepower by changing the magnification of the image by the condenser.

The difficulties, due to the low intrinsic brilliancy of the Mazda lamp, were so magnified in the early days of the development that it is important to show why they really do not exist in this application. The beam of light projected on the film differs from the beam obtained from flood lighting or searchlight outfits, in that the angle between the edges of the beam may be fairly large. If the light passing through the film diverges ten to twelve degrees on each side of the axis, most of it will fall on the projection lens and consequently serve its purpose, while so wide a spread would be useless in a searchlight and most flood-lighting work. The searchlight problem is to render light parallel, and to do this the radiant must approximate a point source which must have high intrinsic brilliancy to produce enough light. The motion picture problem is to illuminate the film with an intensity of about 200,000 foot-candles with light which is incident throughout a comparatively large solid angle. High intrinsic brilliancy is not necessary to accomplish this.

To further increase the light on the films, devices may be used with the incandescent lamp, which collect a larger percentage of the total luminous radiation than is possible with arc lamps. Condensers must be placed so far from the arc, to avoid cracking, that they rarely cover more than one solid angular unit. They can be placed much closer to the Mazda lamp so that the solid angle subtended, and consequently the light collected, is larger by 20 to 30 per cent. Further, an arc lamp yields its maximum candlepower in one direction, while the incandescent radiates equally from the front and back of the filament.

To sum up, therefore, the low intrinsic brilliancy of the incandescent lamp is compensated, first, by enlarging the radiant and reducing the size of its image, and, second, by collecting more of the total radiation than is possible with an arc lamp. The first method allows a thousand candlepower Mazda lamp to replace a thousand candlepower arc. The second method involves economy and increases the light obtained for a given nominal candlepower.

It would appear superficially that the arc with an efficiency of 0.17 watt per maximum candlepower should show considerable economy of power over the incandescent operating at about 0.32 watt per candle. Actually, however, the difference is in favor of the incandescent lamp. The light which is useful in projecting motion pictures is solely that from the positive crater. The intrinsic brilliancy of the crater is uniform and the area is proportional to the watts expended. The light from the crater, therefore, uniformly requires the same watts per candle, and whereas the arc as a whole may require from 0.165 to 0.241 watt per maximum candlepower, the arc as used in projection work uniformly requires 0.243 watt per candle, as indicated in Table I. Further, as has been pointed out, much more light per nominal candle can be obtained from the incandescent lamp than from the arc and, on the basis of watts per unit of light delivered, the incandescent lamp is reduced to about 0.200, as compared to 0.243 for the arc.

If the losses between the mains and the lamps are included, at 40 per cent for the arc and 10 per cent for the incandescent, the ratio of watts per candle is as 0.405 to 0.222 in favor of the latter. An alternating-current arc delivering the same light will require from three to five times as much power as the direct-current arc, and consequently will operate, assuming 10 per cent loss in the leads, at a specific consumption of about 1.10, as compared to 0.222 for the incandescent. Tests indicate that while a good average direct-current arc system of 35 or 40 amperes will throw about 0.345 lumen on the screen per watt at the arc, a simple incandescent lamp system at 0.32 watt per candle horizontal will give about 0.600 to 0.850 lumen per watt. These figures are, of course, round numbers and will vary with the construction of the lamp, the design of the condenser and the care with which the apparatus is set up.

Negro Film Company Formed

The Lincoln Motion Picture Company has been organized in Los Angeles to produce pictures in which negroes will appear exclusively. Noble Johnson, who has played negro and Indian roles in different Los Angeles studios for the past two years, is the president and leading man; Dr. J. T. Smith is treasurer; Clarence Brooks, secretary; and Beulah Hall is the leading lady.

Before the organization of this company the officers made a thorough investigation of the market for its productions and found that there are over a thousand theaters in the United States catering exclusively to negroes, a majority of them being located in the south. They believed that pictures enacted by negroes would draw patronage to these houses and the partnership was formed with sufficient capital to make a number of two-reel pictures.

The first two-reel subject which will be produced will show the possibilities of the colored race to improve their conditions through education. The hero is a graduate of a colored men's college, secures employment as a civil engineer—his chosen vocation—through his heroism in saving the life of a big factory owner's wife. There is a love interest throughout, and the photoplay points the way to happier days for the negroes if they will but persevere.

Michelena Owns Canine Prize-Winner

At the show recently given by the Oakland and Alameda County Kennel Club, Nicholas II, Beatriz Michelena's champion Russian wolf hound, added new laurels to those previously won at a score of canine exhibitions throughout the western half of the United States. Not only did Nicholas II, who is a son of the internationally famous Nicholas I, win first prize in his class but he also carried away a number of special trophies.

"Nick," as he is affectionately called at the California studios, was one of the big sensations of the kennels show of the Panama-Pacific Exposition. The honors he won there placed him in the front rank among the greatest Russian wolf hounds of this country.

Beside competing in shows, Nicholas II is a motion picture performer in support of his mistress, Beatriz Michelena. He made a magnificent appearance in "The Unwritten Law," and it is understood that it was only his Russian blood and the consequent fear of international complications that kept him out of the European production "The Woman Who Dared."

Miss Michelena has just acquired possession of a second Russian wolf hound. Miss Michelena intends next year to invade the big New York dog shows with her two contestants.

The Universal Company has just completed "The Undercurrent," featuring Flora Parker De Haven.

The Fate of the Storyless Picture

THE super films—that class of big pictures that attain magnificence because each tries to outdo all its predecessors—are becoming more numerous. When "The Birth of a Nation" started on its long run it had few rivals. Now there are a dozen or more, either performing or producing, that class with it, in claims at least. There may be a dozen, or two dozen, more whose producers and publicity directors aspire to include them in the first class; but they never succeed in doing so unless their films actually belong. The first class of picture productions is very definite and limited; all of our readers can name the list and all the lists will agree without checking against each other.

There are two or three points about these super-films that are worthy of study by those who do not attempt to make them, and even by those who disapprove of the big picture on general principles.

In the first place, these biggest pictures, despite their enormous production cost, bear all the ear-marks of commercial success. They are money-makers—which is more than can be said for a host of excellent films of lesser caliber.

Another interesting point is that practically none of these super productions depends upon, or even uses, any super-salaried star for either acting or advertising. They use players of fame and master ability, surely; but their payrolls are not overmuch topheavy. Their star-salaries are big, but not extravagant. As a rule the cast fits the story; the story is not written around an advertised star.

Story, therefore, is the success factor of the Class A film. Whether it comes from a free lance author, or is prepared by a brilliant staff writer, or emanates from the versatile brain of the director himself, or is an adaptation of some wonderful book—whatever its source, the story makes the film that makes the money. That fundamental truth is so clearly demonstrated—proved beyond dispute—that we must view with amazement the constant efforts, the constant expenditure of money, to put over pictures made expensive by a sort of forced extravagance, and made dull and shallow by the mediocrity of story. Producers who, surely, have been engaged in the amusement business long enough to have acquired some showman instinct, still persist in delivering pictures that, save for the marvelous fact that they move, hold no more emotional power than an oil painting. And while people may appreciate a great painting, it is of record that few of them will pay admission to see it.

The highest class of film—and we repeat that everybody knows what we include in that class—depends absolutely on high class story and an efficient director. These are the two factors on which, as we all know in our hearts, picture success wholly rests. No substitute in the way of advertised stars, or spectacular feats, or magnificent settings, or evidences of extravagance, can fill their place.

The directors who produce the big films gained their experience by producing smaller films. Take the director of any one of the current masterpieces—there are not very many of them—and study his record for the last few years; his productions of single and two-reel "ordinaries." You will find, all through, the evidences of efficiency and the respect for story that made his big success.

These few big films are models for the industry; not by any means because they are big, but because they follow the ideal lines of production.

The successful film of any length, or of any class of importance, must pattern after the present acknowledged super-film. Even the now despised but very necessary one-reeler must be a small, simplified, economical prototype of the big success, or the little money it does cost will be thrown away.

Chasing after the strange gods of production, the clever substitutes for real merit; hoping to put over soul-less pictures by the aid of psychology and noise, the humbuggery stolen from circus Barnumism, will lead only to disaster. In this we make no futuritial prediction; the advance guards of the condition are here now. Those producers who have dallied with the storyless picture disguised by scenery and settings and salaries, who have relied upon extravagant announcement and the conception that the people are pleased with just pictures, already are feeling the pinch of disappointment and loss.

The condition will not change. The public will continue to demand STORY first, and good direction second. For those producers who will not recognize that truth, who persist in offering beautiful but hollow shells of picture, there is little hope of picture success. We may be thankful that the industry boasts so many clear-visioned producers whose efforts to encourage real story value are continuous and earnest.

For a Broader League

A GREAT deal of the discussion at the coming Chicago convention will center around the question of broadening the League to include manufacturers and distributors as members.

There are several reasons why we regard this as a desirable move.

In the first place, the theory that manufacturers and exhibitors are natural enemies is foolish. While there must always be a certain amount of bargaining between them, and hence an occasional point of dispute, they depend absolutely upon each other for success. Neither is a complete unit in himself; they are two halves that make a whole business only when they fit together in perfect cohesion.

That being a fact that no amount of argument or independent spirit can overcome, and the two factors being already fellow members, in spite of themselves, of the industry, it follows that they should also be fellow members of the industry's single representative organization.

Another reason is that practice in other trades has proved the arrangement to be most satisfactory. In fact it may be said that, in most industries, the representative associations would have a hard time to get along were it not for their manufacturer members. These are usually quite generous in their financial support, and thereby provide the sinews whereby the indifferent operating units may be pulled into membership.

An association with manufacturer members is invariably a richer, and therefore stronger and more effective organization. And we have never observed a case where the manufacturer members attempted to dominate the association or in any way made their membership obnoxious.

The operating members—the exhibitors, that is—small as they may be per unit, are nevertheless the purchasing power of the industry, the trade on whose favor the manufacturers depend for their very existence. The operating members always dominate a trade association. So there need be no doubts on that score as to the advisability of changing the League's Constitution to admit the manufacturers and distributors as members.

There is plenty of evidence right now that a closer understanding between the exhibitors and the producers is a dire necessity. The exhibitors, representatives and students of the public, can help themselves by helping the producers better to understand the public's wants.

If a broader League can help even slightly to bring this about, the convention that votes for it will leave an important mark in history.

"Split Reel" Notes for Theater Men

HOW OTHERS ARE STEERING THE SHIP

THE Wayne Theater of Wayne, Pennsylvania, runs a blank in its neat program for the use of patrons in criticising plays.

Manager A. Rothchild, of Loew's New York Theater, announces that the roof will now be open until one in the morning, presenting a motion picture bill de luxe.

The patriotic spirit of the hour is being reflected in the music at the Rialto Theater, New York, in that every performance is closed by playing "The Star Spangled Banner."

Over two hundred theaters in Iowa have booked the Pathe serial, "The Iron Claw," which is said to have broken the record for any serial in Iowa since serials have been made.

The Saturday Club of Cohoes, New York, has passed a resolution opposing the opening of motion picture theaters in that city on Sunday. A copy of the resolution was filed with the mayor.

George R. Wallace, well known to the exhibitors of Eastern Pennsylvania, has been appointed manager of the Wilkes-Barre office of the Unicorn Film Company with offices at 35 South Pennsylvania avenue.

"The Worst Mule in England" is the title of one of the sections of a film released by Davidson of London, England, under the general head, "Reforming Army Outlaws," showing how horses and mules are trained for army use.

A new studio is being erected in Milwaukee, Wisconsin, by the Gregory, Mahler Company. Ray D. Clinton, formerly with the Universal corporation will be one of the directors. E. F. Gregory and E. H. Mahler are the incorporators.

The Colonial, one of Chicago's large loop theaters, has again reverted to pictures, with a large military orchestra and special settings for its opening feature "How Britain Prepared," which is being shown for the first time in this part of the country.

A denial is made by the management of the Rialto Theater, New York, that Hugo Riesenfeld, its musical director, who arranged the musical accompainiment for "Macbeth" in collaboration with S. L. Rothapfel, will conduct the orchestra at the Gaiety Theater.

On its weekly program the Strand Theater of New York recently ran "The World's Greatest Snare," with Pauline Frederick, Paramount's "Microbes," a scenic and a Mutt and Jeff comedy. The Strand camera car is busy all the time filming events about the city for the daily news service.

Capacity business is being done by the new Strand of Raleigh, North Carolina. The house seats 800 and is already known for its excellent shows. This ultra-modern house is managed by Aronson and Brown, veteran managers, who also control three other houses, the Academy of Music, the Grand and the Almo.

The Weekly Film News, the attractive little magazine issued by the J. H. Kunsky Theatrical Enterprises, of Detroit, now carries in each issue a "Letter from the Film Tramp." That worthy, theoretically at least, attends different film performances and writes down his informal thoughts with a good slang flavor.

"Quo Vadis" was revived at the Globe Theater, New York, last week, in conjunction with the Billie Burke picture, "Gloria's Romance." The resurrection of "Quo Vadis" is particularly interesting, for the reason that it claims the honor of being the first "big feature" picture.

William K. Buchanan, proprietor of the Mabel Theater, Chicago, will donate the entire receipts of his house for one night to the soldier's fund which is being collected by the Chicago Tribune to aid the wives and families of the soldiers who have been called to the front.

Manager H. H. Wellenbrink of the Montclair Theater of Montclair, New Jersey, uses the following graded scale of prices: Matinees, balcony 10 cents, orchestra 15 cents; evenings, balcony 10 and 15 cents, orchestra 15 and 25 cents. Saturdays and holidays, entire balcony 15 cents, entire orchestra 25 cents.

The manager of the Berchal Theater, Des Moines, Iowa, who has been running "The Birth of a Nation" for six weeks, announces that he will hold the film over another week. Seventy-five thousand people have paid admission to the photoplay spectacle and over half of these, the management estimates, were from out of town.

The Lyric Theater of Dover, New Hampshire, has issued a neat and rather ambitious little souvenir booklet containing views of the town and surrounding country together with a page of ads for each picture page. The cover bears simply the words, "Compliments of the Lyric Theater, Dover, N. H." The book, about three by five inches in size, carries the time table of the local interurban railroad.

The Rialto Theater of New York, S. L. Rothapfel, director, scored another beat in its news service when it presented motion pictures of the graduation exercises at West Point on the evening of the day of the event. A large number of clergymen attended the Rialto during the showing of W. S. Hart in "The Apostle of Vengeance," because a minister is the lead in the story.

For the purpose of exploiting the six-part motion picture sensation, "Race Suicide," the Banner Film Company has been organized with offices at the Gaiety Theater building, Kansas City, Missouri. This company has contracted for the purchase of the film for the territory of Missouri, Arkansas, Oklahoma, Kansas and Iowa.

The Rosewood Theater, Chicago, Illinois, has a very neat program printed in black on green stock with a red border. This theater uses a Seeburg Master pipe organ and solo orchestra. It runs a continuous performance every day from 1:30 to 11 p. m. The program carries the slogan "Safety First—More exits, wider aisle space, wider and more comfortable seats and better ventilation than the law requires."

S. L. Rothapfel, manager of the Rialto Theater, New York, is receiving congratulations on the speedy manner in which he obtained pictures of the West Point graduation exercises. Late in the afternoon of commencement day Mr. Rothapfel and a crew of photographers returned with the negatives of the whole ceremony including the presentation of diplomas by President Wilson, and by a record-breaking job in the laboratory the prints were ready to show at the evening performance at the Rialto.

A new Hope-Jones Wurlitzer organ has been installed in the Regent Theater, Tacoma, Washington. This instrument is so large that it had to be set up behind the screen or the volume of sound would prove too great for the theater. This is one of the finest organs on the coast, and will be played by Roscoe Knuppe, who has been handling the organ in the Liberty Theater, Seattle, Washington.

The moving picture theaters in Columbus, Georgia, can run all day Sunday as far as the city council is concerned, that body having adopted a report of the police committee in which it was claimed that the council had no authority in the matter and the question of observance of the Sabbath was up to the grand jury. The ministers, however, have declared against the picture houses and assert that the matter will be taken up when the grand jury again convenes.

Japan has an interesting little film magazine all its own, published in Tokio. Its name is The Illustrated Kinema News and Manager S. Isono or Editor Y. Matsushita has taken the trouble to send a copy of the latest issue to Motography. It is printed in Japanese, with a sprinkling of English in titles and captions. News concerning American, Italian and German films and players is printed, with the American beauties predominating.

The Rialto of New York recently ran the following excellent music program: Mme. Regina Vicarino, coloratura soprano, formerly of Hammerstein's Manhattan Opera Company, and more recently co-star with Bonci and Constantino throughout Latin-America; M. De Frere, baritone, of the Chicago Grand Opera Company, and Arthur Aldridge, tenor, late of the Hippodrome. The Rialto orchestra, under the direction of Hugo Riesenfeld, played Tschaikowsky's "1812 Overture" with special effects and light tonings as its principal contribution to the program.

The "Cinema-Concerts" at Orchestra Hall, Chicago, continue to please discriminating patrons. The house is under the direction of Wessels and Voegeli, with H. W. Hill as manager. The lobby is very attractively decorated in roses and vines and the stage setting is superb. A full symphony orchestra is used together with splendid soloists. Four daily performances are given, at 2 p. m., 4, 7:30 and 9:30. Paramount features are run, and recently a revival of Mary Pickford in "Tess of the Storm Country" proved a successful innovation. Since Mr. Hill ran the latter several other houses in New York and Chicago have employed it with profit.

Morris Meyerfield, Jr., president of the Orpheum theaters, was entertained at Universal City recently by E. G. Patterson, secretary of the big film concern. The head of the greatest vaudeville chain of theaters in the world exhibited keen interest in the work of the twenty-six producing companies at Universal City and said the institution was to be highly commended for the picture plays it is making for the public.

"This plant," said the Orpheum president, "is a real beehive of industry and is something that every Californian and every visitor to the Golden State should not fail to see."

Every two weeks L. F. Guimon, of the Lyceum Theater, Monticello, New York, gets out a news and program paper he calls Motophotograms. It is rather ambitious and is printed on newspaper stock. Here is a sample of the worth-reading editorials and it's safe to say patrons read the Lyceum organ:

About the least expensive thing you can wear is a smile and nothing is one half as becoming. We can outfit you with all varieties from seven to eleven each week day evening. Come in when you want to; go out when you like. Come in without knocking; go out the same way—unless—the show doesn't suit you. In this event slide out and get a tomato and heave it at the manager, only be sure it isn't wrapped in a can. We don't believe we are due for any tomatoes for a few weeks at any rate, our program is too good.

The London Bioscope prints the following catch lines originated by Smith Lord, manager of Elysian Palace and Cross Lane Picture House at Bradford, England:

We don't book the first run of everything, we book the best of everything run.

Excuse me, but we don't purchase poisonous pictures for our patrons, for we don't deal with poisonous producers—and we taste the pictures ourselves first. You are therefore safe at the Elysian.

You can purchase five distinct things for 2d. at Cross Lane, viz., a Ticket, Comfort, Civility, Pictures, Satisfaction.

Away from this neighborhood you may say you know a place equal to Cross Lane Picture House, but in it you dare not say so; people would be very disrespectful to you; they would say you were lying.

Troy, New York, is having trouble with the sandwich men who have been employed by the moving picture theater exhibitors to walk up and down the business streets daily. The managers have been paying these men $1.00 and they have now struck and demand $1.50 a day. The exhibitors are determined to keep the price at $1.00 however. Recently one of the men, more enterprising than his fellows, made a contract with his theater as usual and took on a side line of merchandise. He would carry one set of signs for fifteen or twenty minutes, then slip into a neighboring alley where he would shift to the other set of signs which he would carry for twenty minutes. He earned $2 the first day and his discharge by the theater the second day in this manner.

First Aid to Theater Men

BY S. L. ROTHAPFEL

THE problem which one of our fellow-exhibitors has presented of running a Sunday performance is one, I imagine, which many managers in small towns have had to face some time or other in their experience. If anyone has been able to cope with this situation in a satisfactory manner his methods would be invaluable to this exhibitor who is now facing it. We would all like to hear about experiences along this line and ask that you send in letters telling what you did under similar circumstances.

S. L. Rothapfel, director Rialto Theater, New York.

41—The next time I settle in a small town where the people are small-minded but not small-tongued, I'll know it. If it was not for the fact that I have a wife and family I would move away from this little burg and start a new business where there are not quite so many busybodies to make my business theirs on any and every occasion. All small towns are bad enough because the people have nothing to interest them except other people's business and anything is food for gossip over the back fence. There is no ordinance in this town against keeping a moving picture theater open on Sunday and so I have always run an extra good program on that day, especially as my competitor is a deacon in the church and doesn't dare to keep his open. Sunday is naturally a big day with me, and I play to a packed house all day long. A lot of the ladies in the church have gotten their heads together lately and decided that it is terribly wicked and I am sending the young people straight to the bad place by letting them enter my theater on Sunday, and are making a big fuss about it. The town is about equally divided, half on my side and half on theirs, and I won't give in to them by closing up, but would just as soon compromise and break up the hard feeling if possible, for it may work against my business during the rest of the week if they get too sore about it. Any suggestions you can give me will be thankfully received.

You certainly have a very delicate matter to handle here for, as you say, you do not want to antagonize the inhabitants to such an extent that a large proportion of them will boycott your theater and give all their patronage to your competitor. You would better try some scheme whereby they can gradually be won over to your way of thinking. Just recently I ran across a little item which gave the Reverend Cyrus Townsend Brady's opinion on the Sunday motion picture theater and am giving it to you herewith. Perhaps the approval of so well known a man may help to influence the objectors in your favor. I would suggest that if possible you get this printed in the local newspaper. If there is no other way pay for its insertion as part of your regular advertisement, as it may bear much weight and be to your advantage. Mr. Brady says:

I am strongly in favor of the exhibition of moving pictures on Sunday, and I might say that I haven't any objection to Sunday baseball. To my mind there is no more harm in the display of motion pictures on Sunday than there is for a man to go to his club and golf all day, or start out bright and early in his motor car. We hear a great deal of objection expressed against keeping open the picture shows, but we do not hear any protest against the sale of automobiles for Sunday riding, or the keeping open of the golf courses or tennis courts on the Sabbath. The rich members of the church amuse themselves by riding around in their cars and we don't hear any cavil about it. To the man and woman, tired with the drudgery of a week of hard work, the recreation which they get by attending a moving picture show on Sunday afternoon is needed, and certainly should not be begrudged.

Have you been careful not to run films on Sunday that could possibly be objected to on that day? I would advise you as the first step in this campaign to make a very careful selection of themes which could be shown in a church without causing criticism and make up your Sunday program of these for a while. There are a number of films on the market which deal directly with biblical subjects, for example, "From the Manger to the Cross," "The Rosary," "The Three Wise Men," and numerous others the names of which I do not recall just now. Also you might show educational films, stories based on history, topics of the day, scenic films, travelogues, and pictures that could not possibly be objected to as being frivolous, and which you could claim were entirely educational. This program will probably not please your regular Sunday audience as well, but I imagine in your small town your theater is the only place to go on Sunday and I believe the people would come anyway. Keep up this strictly censored program for a while until the controversy dies down, and gradually little by little you can lighten it and make it more entertaining, and eventually you can run whatever you want again. It will take a little looking around to find films which will be interesting and at the same time be on subjects which could not possibly be tabooed because of their being shown on the Sabbath day. See that your house is kept very orderly and an atmosphere of quiet and decorum reigns, and I believe before long you will have the majority of the people on your side.

Of course if the controversey grows stronger and you find that you will eventually lose out by turning too many of the townspeople against you, it would be better to swallow your pride at present and close the theater—but this seems very unfair to you.

42—Some of my patrons have been objecting lately, saying I run too many advertising slides. I cannot see that there is any reason for their finding fault and besides these slides bring in a little extra each week and I need the money. Nobody raises a row over the advertisements that the newspapers or magazines run to help pay their expenses and I can't see that they have any kick coming when a theater man runs them to help him along. I only use up about ten minutes between the performances showing the advertisements and the announcements of what will be shown during the week. Do you see any harm in that?

I certainly do see "harm" in ten minutes of nothing but advertising slides and think that your patrons have just cause for complaint. Advertising is legitimate to a certain extent and has its place in the moving picture theater, but ten minutes at a time is twice too long—in fact, I do not think it is wise to devote more than three minutes at a time to this business proposition. Do not let the small amount of additional profit it will bring blind you to the fact that a displeased audience soon means a big falling off in your box office receipts and a poor reputation for your house.

You evidently have allowed this advertising idea to become one of the most prominent features of your show. It is best to limit this display to a very short time at intermission only. While the people are passing out of the theater and waiting ones are being admitted an opportunity is given to display these slides because if the regular program was shown it would be spoiled anyway by all the confusion and the passing to and fro. The audience do not object to these slides at this time, in fact, if they are changed often and are made as artistic as possible they become mildly amusing and help to interest while waiting for the crowd to be seated and quiet down.

If you think it necessary to project advertising slides on the screen just before the first film particular care should be taken not to consume too much time as the audience is naturally anxious for the show to begin and does not take kindly to any interruption of this nature.

The people come into your theater ready to be entertained, they are seated and in the mood for anything which comes, be it to laugh at a comedy or weep at a tragedy. They are anxiously waiting to see just what the first picture is to be, the house is darkened and they straighten up with anticipation—and on the screen is flashed an advertising slide, then another and yet another, and at last as the patience of the spectators is almost exhausted the feature of the evening starts. But where is that anticipation and eagerness, that receptive attitude ready to be pleased with anything? It is gone, you have a bored, half peevish and critical audience to deal with. The introduction was poor and it has hurt your evening's entertainment. Is this a wise policy? Is the little extra revenue worth this? Is it worth while to spoil your audience and your reputation in this way?

The conditions differ in respect to this advertising problem, in the cities it will not be tolerated at all in the best houses, while in the smaller towns it is taken rather as a matter of course and a part of the program. The manager has to study his patrons in this respect and the wise man is the one who does not overdo it.

If you do not use a printed program in your house then it is well to utilize all the obtainable time showing slides advertising your theater, telling of the program of the week or attractions you have booked for the future, announcements as to how often the program is changed and any special performance you are going to have. The audience does not resent these because they pertain to the theater itself and they are interested in knowing what you have booked. If you distribute a printed program the place for the advertising is in this sheet, for the people take it home with them and keep it all the week and you are able to give the advertiser better publicity than is obtainable simply from a slide flashed on the screen.

Another method of keeping the advertising out of the program itself was told me recently by a manager who was running a two hundred seat house in a village. His was the only picture show in the place and he found the merchants quite ready to take advantage of the advertising he could give them, but on the other hand the audience rather resented this as stealing their time away. The exhibitor was in a quandary for a time for he also needed the money to help realize any profit from his house. After thoughtful consideration he hit upon the scheme of utilizing the space around his picture screen to display this publicity matter. His screen was the whitewashed wall of the theater and he did not need all the space for the projection of the pictures, so he painted a heavy black border around to outline the screen and outside of this he established a regular billboard. The top, bottom and two sides outside the black border were covered with the advertising of the different merchants in town. Some had their sign painted right on the wall and others had bills pasted on which were changed from week to week. The house was kept well lighted before the first show so that this billboard showed up in fine style. Only two or three slides were thrown on the screen announcing events pertinent to the program itself. When the house was darkened for the pictures the advertisements were entirely obliterated and only the white screen with the black border appeared. At the end of the show the house was lighted up for three minutes to allow the people to pass out, and during this time again the billboard flared forth resplendent. This struck me as a very good scheme and one which might be utilized in many small houses. The exhibitor collected the additional revenue from the advertising and at the same time it interfered in no way with the pleasure of his audience.

Another unobjectionable method is the use of the drop curtain. The white stretch of canvas is not attractive when a person comes into a theater and many houses are using drop curtains before the screen and this can be utilized as advertising space if desired. The ads should be changed often, however, so they will not become too monotonous. This advertising screen is not a thing of beauty by any means, but this is a common practice in vaudeville and some of the smaller stock company houses and there seems to be no voiced objection to it.

The solution of the advertising problem ultimately is going to come in the printed program which carries all advertisements and the adoption of the animated advertising slide. Some of these animated advertisements are very clever and now, while they are still rather new, the people do not object to them, in fact, find them rather amusing. Their price is prohibitive to the small merchant, however, and unless changed often they become an old story and a bore.

This question of advertising is one which has to be faced and worked out by each exhibitor individually. Rather hurt your pocketbook than hurt your house, for this will mean no pocketbook at all. Study your patrons and you will find here the answer as to how much or how little of this advertising you should allow to be shown in your house and what method you should use. In your case there seems to be objection, you have been running too much. Cut down the amount or try some other method of displaying it, but do not antagonize your regular patrons and kill your box office receipts.

Six on Ince Staff of Writers

John Lynch, a well known short story writer, has been added to the ranks of the staff authors at the Ince-Triangle studios in Culver City. This addition increases the members of the staff to six, the other five writers being C. Gardner Sullivan, J. G. Hawks, Monte M. Katterjohn, Lanier Bartlett and Russell E. Smith.

"The Girl Philippa," story by Robert W. Chambers, which ran in one of the popular magazines, is being produced by the Vitagraph Company under the direction of S. Rankin Drew, Brinsley Shaw, Anders Radolph, Frank Wupperman, Ethel Corcoran, Alfred Rabock and Julia Swayne Gordon.

CONDUCTED BY B. F. BARRETT

Former Editor of Photoplay Scenario Magazine.

NOTE—This department will appear hereafter in each issue of MOTOGRAPHY, and will treat of all subjects of interest to the photoplaywright—whether amateur or professional. You are invited to suggest any subjects you desire to have discussed, or ask questions on any matters relating to the writing of photoplays which have been puzzling you. The department is also open to you at any time for the expression of your own ideas or the submitting of ideas of others which have helped you, and will be interesting to other photoplay writers.

Writing Serial Plays

BY CHARLES W. GODDARD

Note:—Mr. Goddard has probably written more serials than any other man in the business.

THE other day I read an article by a bright young man on how to write a moving picture serial. He knew all about it because he had just finished writing his first one.

This observant young man notices that serials, up to date, have been full of exciting matter, thrills, mystery, suspense, crime, etc. Such stuff he tells us is all wrong.

It is mighty kind of this bright young man to pass out a tip like that. If true it is the greatest labor saving discovery since the invention of the steam engine, and picture writers will now belong to the leisure class. Thinking up thrills and excitement and working out mysteries certainly do cut into the hours of tennis and golf to say nothing of sleep. Without these things anyone can turn out scenarios for about thirty (30) cents a ton, F. O. B.

These theories might be as good as anyone's else. But when he states, as a fact, that the public doesn't want thrills, mystery, suspense, etc., in serials, he's "kidding himself," he is thinking for the public and that can't be done.

If the public had shown a preference for pallid drama it would have had nothing else, for most writers, like other people, are as lazy as they dare to be. The big serial successes are crowded with elements of suspense, thrill and mystery, the moderately successful ones contain these factors in proportion to their popularity while the "flivvers" have been of the pallid sort, discovered and advocated by the talented young man.

Another criticism scornfully thrown at the serials is "improbability;" there are two kinds of "improbability," one for which there is no defense and another which needs none. When a character walks into a trap which ordinary common sense would have kept him out of, it is "improbability" caused by carelessness of writing or directing. There is no good excuse for this fault but it happens as often in pallid plays as in exciting ones.

The other kind of improbability comes from novelty. Anything glaringly new seems improbable to some people. I remember a story written in the early bicycling days of a man who put an engine on a bicycle and coasted uphill. It was thought clever and whimsical but not even possible. In these days of motorcycles it is so probable it is stupid.

What is probability anyway? It is something like something we have heard before. Everyone admits that telephones and wireless were once improbable but so is history. The lives of Lincoln, Caesar, Napolean and Alexander, are so improbable that they would "insult our intelligences" only that we happen to know they are true. Though their lives are historically true, they are not true to ordinary life and that is just what makes them such absorbing reading. This brings up still another foolish criticism sometimes cast at the picture serial—that is not true to ordinary life. Of course it isn't true to ordinary life. Nobody really wants to see a chapter of ordinary life.

Ordinary life of the ordinary person is so dull and insipid that it is more or less of a bore even to persons who live it and are most interested in it. Only one person in a million has enough interesting moments in a life time to make a feature, to say nothing of a series. Those persons are the heroes and villains of real life but their lives are not true to the average life. Yet such are the ones we read of in the papers and their counterparts are the heroes and villains of the screen. They live tense lives, they touch the heights and the depths, the high-lights and black shadows, though they have periods of the humdrum grey life between, we don't want to hear about these pallid intervals in the news so why show them in the film.

The love theme interests everything human but even this must not be humdrum, true-to-ordinary-life romance if it would hold us long. Big events, big people, big passions move us because they arouse in us an echo which tells us we too might feel and do in a big way if we had been from under the same stars and met the same influences.

The pallid play is easy for the writer, easy for the director, easy for the actor, easy for everyone in the world except the theater-goer who unfortunately is the only one who is of the slightest importance.

Motion Pictures Stories Scarce

BY JAMES KIRKWOOD.

Director, American Film Company, Inc.

THERE seems to be a good deal of talk lately concerning the scarcity of motion picture stories and a great deal written about it in the papers. Now, as far as I know, they always have been scarce, and to the best of my belief they always will be scarce. Trained writers are now taking up the work of writing photoplays, but even with more of them doing so, good stories will be scarce. Good stories are scarce in magazines, in books and in plays, so why shouldn't they be in motion pictures, where they must have all the qualities which make them desirable as stories for type publication and the special quality for visualization.

It is said that the flood of books and play adaptions will soon be exhausted, and it cannot be exhausted too soon for me, for I think few of them lend themselves to the screen. When they do, they have to stand a lot of manhandling and twisting about by the scenario editors and directors.

The camera is just as merciless to the inconsistent story as it is to the human face, betraying its weaknesses as quickly.

I believe that the most desirable sort of play today is modern and American, whether a swift-moving drama with strong, human characterizations, or a comedy devoid of extravagance, its incidents growing out of the foibles of human nature rather than produced by one of the characters smiting another with what is commonly called a slapstick.

You will have observed, of course, that the sophisticated play fills a large place on the screen nowadays. The audience is supposed to be, and undoubtedly is, fond of the evening dress, ballrooms, conservatories and so on. I like that sort of thing myself, but don't confine myself to it. Virginia, Broadway, Newport or Colorado are good enough for me, if they are supported by virile American drama, or truly original and humorous American comedy. Photoplay art must be human.

Big Future for Photoplaywright

By Hampton Del Ruth.

Managing Editor and Assistant Manager of Production of the Keystone Film Company.

MR. DEL RUTH is probably the highest priced writer in his profession, and others who have taken up the work of photoplay writing as a means of livelihood may find encouragement in his views on the future of this great profession.

"Let us look to the making of good plays and in our looking let us look to a new source of their making.

"Creation does not stop with the set-down instructions of the photoplay author's scenario; creation is demanded of the director who sets forth to put it on and of the film cutter, who flourishes the death-dealing shears. It must, therefore, be considered vital to success that these qualities be combined.

"It is, therefore, destined that the great film directors of the coming day will be the great photoplaywrights of the present day. This statement is based upon the fact that the average director can never learn to write a truly great creation, but the truly great photoplaywright of today can and will in time master the technique of camera, stage production and film cutting, and these three accomplishments must be represented in the really great producers that the future will demand."

Photoplay Market

The following information received direct from the scenario editors of the film companies will show the kind of material each company desires:

California Motion Picture Corporation, San Rafael, Calif.—We are really not in the market for any photoplays as we are only producing adaptations of books and stage plays by prominent authors, and we have already contracted for the film rights of enough material in this line to keep our producing directors busy for many months to come.

David Horsley Studios, 2009 South Main St., Los Angeles, Calif.—Want one-reel comedies for the Cub Comedies, suited to George Ovey in the character of Jerry; two-reel animal dramas for Centaur Features, using the Bostock animals with parts suited to the co-stars, William Clifford and Margaret Gibson; and two-reel dramas featuring Crane Wilbur.

Essanay Film Manufacturing Company, 1333 Argyle street, Chicago, Ill.—We are not in the market for scenarios of any description. All manuscripts submitted to us are returned immediately upon receipt. We are, however, desirous of obtaining published material such as short stories and novels.

Famous Players Film Company, 124 West Fifty-sixth street, New York.—In the market for five-reel features suitable for their stars, Mary Pickford, Marguerite Clark, Pauline Frederick, Hazel Dawn, etc. A good working synopsis of the themes is sufficient. We give decisions promptly and pay the market prices immediately upon acceptance. Just now we are only in need of ideas which call for modern characters in American locations.

Fine Arts Film Company, 4500 Sunset Boulevard, Hollywood, Calif.—Always in the market for good stories suitable for any of its stars: De Wolfe Hopper, Douglas Fairbanks, Mae Marsh, Bobby Herron, Lillian Gish, Dorothy Gish, Owen Moore, Norma Talmadge, Wilfred Lucas, Tully Marshall, Seena Owen, Fay Tincher, Bessie Love, Olga Grey and Constance Talmadge. Two or three of these players usually appear in the same picture. Most of the feminine stars are ingenues, and stories in which the principal character is a young girl are especially desired. Each story should have an underlying theme of considerable power and stories in narrative form are preferred to complete scenarios. Historical stories are not desired.

Fine Arts Film Company, Santa Monica, Calif.—In addition to regular five-reel releases will make two-reel photoplays for the Triangle program. Light comedy-dramas are preferred.

Juvenile Film Corporation, World's Tower Building, 110 West 40th St., New York City, care of Cosmofotofilm Company.—Want one-reel comedies adapted to production by child actors. Prefer comedies featuring a juvenile actor is imitates Charlie Chaplin. Complete scenarios desired.

Lubin Manufacturing Company, 20th St. & Indiana Ave., Philadelphia, Pa.—In market for strong single-reel dramas.

Metro Pictures Corporation, 1476 Broadway, New York, N. Y.—Pays $100 to $300 a reel for good material. In the market for synopses of dramas suitable for any of the Metro stars except those of the Popular Players Company. Synopses for five-reel dramas are desired. One-reel comedies for Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Drew are also desired.

Planet Film Corporation, World's Tower Bldg., New York.—Will purchase photoplay rights of popular novels and plays.

Rialto Film Company, 220 West 42nd St., New York—Always interested in photoplays dealing with modern life.

Universal Film Manufacturing Company, 1600 Broadway, New York, N. Y.—Helen Starr, scenario editor of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company, announces that she is in need of good scripts. She does not care to receive contributions from amateur photoplaywrights. The Universal Company would like to receive manuscripts from the most experienced and efficient writers for the screen. At the present time the editor is in need of one and two-reel comedies, one, two and five-reel dramas. The scenario department at 1600 Broadway, New York, buys for both the Eastern and Western studios.

World Film Corporation, 130 West Forty-sixth street, New York, N. Y.—At present we are buying only strong five-reel dramas, suitable for our various stars. We want no comedy or comedy drama. Our field, as you may have noticed, is a pretty broad one; outside of comedy, I cannot say that there is any kind of story that we positively bar. We prefer strong, clean stories of modern life, preferably high society life; but we will consider any type of story provided it is good.

Dr. Mary Walker was one of the prominent members of the General Federation of Women's Clubs who visited the Vitagraph studios at Flatbush recently on special invitation of Messrs. A. E. Smith and J. Stuart Blackton. It was Dr. Walker's first introduction to the mysteries of motion picture production and she was as happily interested as a young girl with her first mechanical doll.

First of July Mutuals

WILLIAM RUSSELL AND HELEN HOLMES IN FIVE-ACT FEATURES

TWO of the five-act Mutual Star productions featuring Helen Holmes and William Russell are announced on the Mutual program for July 3. "Medicine Bend," the first of these features starring Helen Holmes, was produced under the direction of J. P. McGowan, who also appears in the role of "Whispering Smith." This is a railroad story filled with thrills and filmed on a lavish scale with the destruction of freight trains, engines and bridges. Miss Holmes is supported by the same company which played with her in "Whispering Smith."

"The Highest Bid," featuring William Russell, is the second production. This was adapted for the screen by J. Edward Hungerford from the story of the same name by Arthur H. Gooden. Jack Prescott is directing the play, assisted by Mr. Russell as co-director. Charlotte Burton and Harry Keenan head the company supporting Mr. Russell.

A three-reel Mutual offering "The Hidden Face" will be released July 6. Iva Shepard and Alexander Gaden play the leads in this mystery drama. The cast also includes Henry W. Pemberton, John Reinhard, Lucille Taft, James Levering, Mabel E. Trinneer, Myles McCarthy, Fritz Orlamond, Charles W. Travis, James Davis and Albert Macklin.

Three two-part offerings are scheduled for release this same week, "Killed by Whom" with Vivian Rich and Alfred Vosburg essaying the chief roles; "The Taming of Wild Bill," a Mustang offering presenting Jack Richardson and Nita Davis; and "The Good for Nothing Brat," a Centaur-Mutual release featuring William Clifford.

"The Chaser Chased," featuring Rube Miller, for release July 4, and "Hired and Fired," with Ben Turpin, to be released July 9, are the Vogue-Mutual releases for this week. "Beauty" offerings include "Billy Van Deusen's Masquerader," featuring Johnny Sheehan, John Steppling and Carol Halloway, to be released July 5, and "The Gink Lands Again," with Orral Humphrey, for release July 9.

"A Merry Mixup," with George Ovey, is the Cub release. It will go to the public July 7.

A number of interesting subjects in connection with the calling to arms of the National Guard and scenes along the Mexican border are included in Mutual Weekly No. 79 for release July 5. "See America First," which goes to the public the same day, takes the spectator on a trip through the historic city of Mobile, Alabama, while various topics of interest are pictured in "Reel Life," the Mutual Film Magazine in pictures, for release July 9.

A number of notable productions are under way in the American-Mutual studios in Santa Barbara. Jack Prescott, with William Russell as co-director, is working on a five-reel feature, "The Torch Bearer," in which Mr. Russell takes the leading part. Charlotte Burton, Harry Keenan, Alan Forrest, Nate Watt, Marie Van Tassell and Margaret Nichols also appear in this play.

Mary Miles Minter's first five-act production under the Mutual brand, "Youth's Endearing Charm," is more than half filmed.

Kolb and Dill have completed their first five-act American-Mutual feature which will be released shortly under the title of "A Million for Mary."

Work has just been started on "The Bargain," another five-reel feature, in which Winnifred Greenwood and Franklin Ritchie are co-stars.

A number of two-act subjects are also in the making, "The Enchantment," an allegorical play featuring Vivian Rich and Alfred Vosburg; "Ruth Ridley's Return," under the direction of Alfred Hollingsworth;

A good old-fashioned scene from real life in the ninth issue of "Reel Life," the Mutual Film Magazine.

"A Million Dollars," of which William Bertram is the author as well as director; "That Girl of Burke's," with Frank Borzage and Anna Little in the leading roles; and "Sandy Reformer," featuring Arthur Acord and Nita Davis.

William Tedmarsh, whose notable portrayal of Satsuma, the Japanese spy in "The Secret of the Submarine," has been another triumph in characterization, is a master of make-up. He possesses the art of sinking his own individuality and being for the time the character he portrays, and as varied as have been the roles he has assumed, in each he is totally different. Mr. Tedmarsh has never appeared on the legitimate stage and therefore no previous experience can account for the wizard's unfailing judgment in penciling the most effective lines here and there. The actor made his screen debut four years ago and immediately compelled recognition of his dramatic talent, and this popularity has been constantly growing.

The first of the series of two-act photodramas featuring Crane Wilbur was released on July 1 under the title of "The King o' Make Believe," the second one, "The Fool's Game," will be given to the public two weeks later.

Although Vivian Rich has featured in about 200 film dramas, "The Gentle Conspiracy," a recent two-reel American-Mutual release, was the first one in which she has appeared in a dual role.

The Vogue-Mutual studio will shortly begin work on the first of a series of two-reel comedies, one of which will hereafter be released each week. These will not interfere, however, with the one-reel comedies now being produced at the Los Angeles studios.

Frohman Company Begins Jaffery

After negotiating for nearly a year, by mail and cable, with William J. Locke, the well known English novelist, the Frohman Amusement Corporation has secured the picture rights to his latest novel, "Jaffery," which has outsold every one of his other books, even "The Beloved Vagabond."

C. Aubrey Smith supported by Eleanor Woodruff in Frohman's "Jaffery."

The rights of this book, and the exceptional scenario which Anthony P. Kelly has produced from it will cost half as much as the completed productions of many good features, but President William L. Sherrill of the Frohman Company believes that the investment will be warranted because of the tremendous popularity of the book, and the beauty with which it can be filmed.

Director George Irving has already begun work with C. Aubrey Smith in the lead, and an experienced cast in support that should in every way get the most from the splendid material they have to work with.

Exhibiting a Big One

The presentation of "Ramona," the eleven-reel cinema play produced by W. H. Clune, is one of the best examples yet furnished by the photoplay industry of exhibiting on a big and spectacular scale.

The film is being shown in Chicago at the Auditorium theater, a house seating 3,600 people. This fact alone means that the presentation must be handled in a big and impressive manner. The management carries out this idea by means of three huge settings, beautifully painted and skilfully lighted. These settings furnish fifty per cent of the interest in the performance, as they are used in connection with the acted scenes interpolated in the play. These stage settings which are most realistic reproductions of the San Gabriel mission, an early Californian ranch house and a mountain scene showing the deep canyon with the snow-capped peaks in the background. As a rule this artificial scenery rather harms than helps the realism of the spectacle in which it appears but so realistic are these settings, even to the live pigeons strutting around on the roof of the ranch house, that they aid greatly in creating the desired atmosphere. These operatic introductions thoroughly imbue the audience with the spirit of the story which follows and put them in the desired receptive frame of mind.

Another innovation is the subtitles, shown on animated backgrounds, which gives a pleasing relief from the stereotyped letters thrown on the screen.

Fifty-two musicians are used in the presentation, forty-five being in the symphony orchestra and seven on the stage during the action scenes.

The first Chicago performance was given to 3,000 people and good houses continue. "Ramona" is now running at the Burland in Upper Manhattan and is also being presented in the same manner in Providence, Rhode Island, Boston, Portland, Maine, and Detroit. The New York and Pittsburgh runs have been completed. Rights for the production for the seventeen western states have been sold to A. T. Sherman, who also handled "The Birth of a Nation" in that territory.

Lloyd Brown, who is said to have run the first exclusively motion picture house in America, is the creator of the big ideas in connection with the making and presentation of "Ramona." He is now working with the Clune company on "The Eyes of the World," from the story by Harold Bell Wright.

Chaplin Case "Off Again, on Again"

Sometime ago considerable litigation was started by Charlie Chaplin when he sought to restrain V. L. S. E. from releasing in four reels the burlesque on "Carmen" in which he was starred. When the injunction was denied the great little comedian appealed the suit for damages. This suit was also decided in favor of the defendants, according to advices received from the V. L. S. E. offices in New York.

Chaplin is now being sued by the Essanay company for violation of his contract made at the time he worked in "Carmen."

Antonio Moreno has begun work on a new five-reel drama for Vitagraph.

Anna Nilsson sings a silent song in "The Weaker Strain," number eight of Pathe's "Who's Guilty?" series.

Looking Into July with V. L. S. E.

EXHIBITORS TO DISCUSS DEPOSIT SYSTEM

THE V. L. S. E. policy of open booking versus the deposit system will form the subject of a vital debate in which all the exhibitors attending the National Convention will take part. A number of prominent eastern theater managers are concentrating their efforts toward the elimination of the deposit system and members of the Associated Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of Brooklyn are going to the convention pledged to do all in their power to end the closed contract system.

Lee Ochs, candidate for the National League presidency, declares he considers the deposit system a downright hardship upon the exhibitor. "I am against, and always shall be against any deposit system whatever," declared Mr. Ochs, "it works a detriment to the business because it is a hardship upon the small man and the small man is a vital factor in the industry. I have strong hopes, however, that the manufacturers will see the error of their judgment and do away with it. The Chicago convention in July should result in some readjustment of this matter."

The Exhibitors' Service Bureau of the Advertising Department of the Big Four furnishes efficient aid to exhibitors in the exploitation of the features they run. This was exemplified at the Columbia Theater of Los Angeles on the occasion of the exhibition of "The Law Decided." On a suggestion from the Service Bureau thousands of citizens were served with subpoenas commanding their presence at the theater. The cleverness of the idea appealed to the public and a large attendance resulted. Another successful "stunt" was a bargain sale by the Sun Drug Company of Phoenix, Arizona, in conjunction with "The Little Shepherd of Bargain Row." The drug company widely advertised the event as a "Little Shepherd" sale and announced that a lady shopper representing "The Little Shepherd" would visit the store and the person discovering her would receive a month's complimentary ticket to the Lion Theater and a bottle of the best perfume in the Sun Drug Store.

In an effort to aid exhibitors in combatting the warm weather and the resultant dropping off of attendance, V. L. S. E. is offering a program of July releases of exceptional merit. "The Conflict," a Vitagraph offering starring Lucille Lee Stewart, heads the features and will go to the public on July 3.

Robert Edeson, Naomi Childers and Bobby Connelly appear in "Fathers of Men," ready July 10, and Edith Storey and Antonio Moreno will be seen in "The Tarantula," released July 17.

"The Daring of Diana," the new vehicle of Anita Stewart, will be released July 24, and "Hesper of the Mountains" presents Lillian Walker and Evart Overton on July 31.

The Lubin contribution to this program, ready for the public on July 31, is "The Light at Dusk," featuring Orrin Johnson.

Selig has produced "The Prince Chap," with Marshal Neilan in the title role, assisted by Mary Charleston; Bessie Eyton and George Fawcett. Re lease date is July 24.

Essanay offers on July 10, "According to the Code," in which Lewis S. Stone, Marguerite Clayton and E. H. Calvert are featured.

George W. P. Hunt, governor of Arizona, has sent a most glowing tribute to the Lubin Company lauding little Marjorie Sterrett in her efforts to start a fund with which to build a battleship and offering a tribute to the V. L. S. E. feature, "The Nation's Peril," which inspired her enthusiasm.

W. C. Brandon, manager of the Big Four offices at Atlanta, Georgia, announces the appointment of F. P. Bryant, formerly with Pathe and Fox, to a position on the sales force of the Atlanta office. Mr. Bryant will travel the territory in North and South Carolina formerly handled by Mr. Simpson, who is being transferred to Mississippi and Alabama with which territory he is more familiar.

C. A. Meade, Dallas manager, announces the appointment of A. W. Plues to a position on his sales force. Mr. Plues will travel Texas territory formerly handled by W. B. Nelson.

In the New York office, three employes who started as office boys have been promoted. S. Charles Einfeld has been given charge of the records of the purchasing department under Mr. Siegel, Milton Cohn has charge of the mailing department, and Munroe Schram has been taken into the sales promotion department.

Molla Bjurstedt, the Norwegian girl who won the National tennis championship, will appear in the Selig Athletic Series released July 5. Miss Bjurstedt will be shown in a display match with Mrs. May Sutton Bundy, runner-up in the recent tournament. On this same film Jimmy Clabby, middleweight, demonstrates his training methods while preparing for a bout and later takes on Joe Welling and Steve Kenney for two rounds each. Joe Conconnon, eastern states billiards champion, bests "Cowboy" Weston in a brilliant match, and there is also a wrestling match to a finish between William Berne, Russian champ, and William Demetral, Greek champion.

Through the courtesy of Joseph S. Partridge, manager of the New York branch of the V. L. S. E., the Essanay-Chaplin Burlesque on "Carmen" was shown the inmates of Sing Sing prison and the reports are they are laughing yet, and the Big Four has the appreciation of every man in Sing Sing for making their lives so much brighter.

Warning Against Firearms

"Didn't know it was loaded," has been the sadly expressed excuse for serious or fatal shooting accidents ever since the invention of the firearm, although, perhaps, it is generally the reason for accidents to children.

This thought has been worked into a two-part scenario by William Parker, of the American Film company staff of writers, and the action of the story is carried by Vivian Rich, Alfred Vosburgh and George Periolat.

The name of this intensely dramatic two-reel "Flying A" drama is "Killed By Whom?" released by the Mutual July 3.

"LA BOHEME" BREAKS RECORDS

Seven Companies Working on Future Features for the World Film Corporation. All Summer Releases Completed

The World Film release, "La Vie De Boheme," featuring Alice Brady, has made several new records for Marcus Loew's New York theater. Contrary to the established policy, the picture was run for two days and on the second showing the house record was broken and for the first time since the New York Theater Roof became a film theater standing room was sold at regular seat prices. Miss Brady appeared personally at each performance and sang the Aria from "La Boheme." This picture will open a new theater at Asbury Park, will initiate the Brady-Made program at the Park theater, Boston, and has been re-booked for another week at one of the Jones, Linick and Schaefer houses at Chicago.

With all productions completed which will be released during the summer, the Paragon and Peerless studios and the productional departments of the World Film Corporation under William A. Brady's direction are busily engaged on the program that will obtain with that company throughout the regular theatrical season.

Seven companies are actively engaged at present and another will start immediately. Frank Crane, supervising the production of "The World Against Him," has been at Saranac Lake directing E. K. Lincoln and June Elvidge. Emile Chautard is in charge of the production of "Nathan Hale," in which Robert Warwick plays the title role, and the company, including Gail Kane and Alec Frances, have been in Boston making pictures on Boston Common before huge crowds. Mr. Chautard has had no trouble in getting mob scenes, in fact he has had to call upon the police department to get the grounds cleared around the camera.

Barry O'Neill is directing an all-star cast headed by Holbrook Blinn, Ethel Clayton and little Madge Evans in "The Scourging Way."

Harley Knoles is in charge of "Miss Petticoats," Alice Brady's next picture.

Molly King will begin work next week on her new picture which has not yet been named but will probably be a story calling for Miss King's appearance as a waif in which role exhibitors seem anxious to have her.

Robert T. Thornby has completed "The Almighty Dollar," with E. K. Lincoln, Frances Nelson and June Elvidge and will immediately begin on another production with an all-star cast.

William A. Brady's policy of having two productions on hand for each company now allows for the working in the studio on one production if inclement weather prevents exterior work on the other. Thus bad weather does not interfere to any great extent with the regular work at the Paragon and Peerless studios.

Chicago Exhibitor Entertains

Alfred Hamburger, one of Chicago's most prominent exhibitors and owner of a string of some fifteen theaters, entertained a select group of film men and women on June 26 at a dinner at the Bismarck Gardens and later at one of his picture houses.

About twenty guests were present. Among the notables at the entertainment were Thomas H. Ince, who is in the Windy City for the presentation of his "Civilization" at Cohan's Grand Opera House; Burr McIntosh, author of "Get Rich Quick Wallingford," and screen actor in the same part; Virginia Norden, Vitagraph star; Edna Mayo, Essanay luminary; Bryant Washburn, Essanay leading man, and his wife, and S. E. Abel, manager of the Chicago V-L-S-E offices. A number of exhibitors and other actors were also present.

A few after dinner talks were made at the Gardens. The feature of these was the reading from "Wallingford" by Burr McIntosh. Following the feast the guests, bedecked with badges, made merry at a performance at Hamburger's Pine Grove Theater on Sheridan road.

Mary Pickford Company Formed

"Mary, Mary, quite contrary, how does your company grow?" has been a question before the motion picture public for some time. Large flocks of rumors have percolated through the atmosphere in regard to new concerns, Pickford contracts with mergers, and so on.

But it's all over now, for a time at least. The Pickford Film Corporation has filed articles of incorporation at Albany, New York. The new company is capitalized at $50,000, and its incorporators are Gladys Mary Moore, Charlotte Smith and Dennis F. O'Brien.

The formation of the new company is in realty a ratification of the verbal agreement made between Miss Pickford and the Famous Players Film Company at the first of the year, which stipulated that the star should receive fifty per cent of the proceeds from her productions. Miss Pickford has just begun a new picture at the Famous Players studio.

Griffith to Chicago in August

David Wark Griffith's new feature, which bears the tentative name, "The Mother and the Law," will be presented in Chicago and New York beginning on August 15, if theaters can be secured for that date.

World Manager Resigns

Harry C. Drum, assistant general manager of the World Film Corporation, handed in his resignation to take effect on July 1st, 1916.

Henry B. Walthall will next be seen in the five-reel Essanay feature, "The Little Musketeer."

Cavalieri and Muratore Act for Pathe

MANY THRILLS IN NEW SERIAL "THE GRIP OF EVIL"

THRILL folows thrill in the new Pathe series "The Grip of Evil," which will be the first release on the $5,000,000 serial program. Not only are absorbing questions advanced in such a manner as to make it a human document but each chapter contains a distinctive thrill. The series will be a Balboa production featuring Jackie Saunders and Roland Bottomley.

In the first episode, "Fate," an explosion occurs which literally blows an automobile to pieces and the heroine narrowly escapes death. In "The Underworld," the second episode, a desperate struggle in the dark provides the thrill. A collision between a train and an automobile occurs in "The Upper Ten," the third episode and in the fourth chapter there is another powerful fight. In the fifth episode, "The Way of a Woman," a reckless girl attempts to drown herself. A girl is saved from the attack of a bull by a hand to hand conflict between her lover and the bull in "The Hypocrites," the sixth episode, while a thrilling fight, a boat wreck and an automobile accident mark the seventh chapter, "The Butterflies."

President Wilson and others among America's great minds have been instrumental in suggesting the story of this serial and what each has to say will be of great value to the exhibitors who show the picture in the town from which he comes or in which he lives.

The last two episodes of "The Iron Claw"; two chapters of "Who's Guilty?"; two "Lonesome Luke" comedies; a Goldberg cartoon; four scenic pictures and four issues of the Pathe news make up the Pathe program for the next two weeks.

"The Cave of Despair," the next to the last chapter of "The Iron Claw," will be released July 3. The final chapter will be entitled "The Triumph of the Laughing Mask."

"The Weaker Strain" is the latest release on the "Who's Guilty?' serial featuring Anna Nilsson and Tom Moore.

"Lukes Washful Waiting," the one-reel Lonesome Luke comedy, will be released on July 3.

"Nutty News" is the Goldberg cartoon showing the war-like notes which pass between the Secretary of State and the King of Bologna; the great fire in Dopem and Chokem's drug store; and "the Egyptian Bumpus bird."

"Across the Malay Archipelago" and "The Kinkajou" make up a scenic and educational film.

Two issues of the Pathe News Nos. 54 and 55, released July 5 and 8, wind up the program for the week.

Lina Cavalieri and her husband, Lucien Muratore, are featured in a five-part Pathe Gold Rooster play, "The Shadow of Her Past," which will be released July 17. This play was produced under the supervision of Mr. Muratore, who took his company to Italy some months ago.

The Pathe Club, with a membership of about 125, has become a very active organization. The membership includes such well known men as Frederic R. Coudert, Paul Fuller, Jr., and H. L. Kingsbury of Coudert Bros.; L. J. Gasnier, president of the Astra Film Corporation; Rube Goldberg, the cartoonist; Dr. Rumley of the Evening Mail; Dr. W. E. Shallenberger, president of the Arrow; Edward Jose, general director of the Feature Film Corporation; E. K. Wheeler, treasurer of the Feature Film Corporation; and others equally well known.

An all-day outing has been planned by the club for July 23 at some point up the Hudson and various games have been arranged and a number of prizes offered.

The two and a half cent window cards which were isued by Pathe for the first six episodes of the "Who's Guilty?" series have proved such a success that J. A. Berst has ordered that they be continued throughout the entire series. It is also announced that Pathe will continue this idea on "The Grip of Evil" series.

Eugene O'Brien, well known as a Broadway leading man, has been engaged by Essanay to head the supporting cast of "The Return of Eve," a new five-act photoplay featuring Edna Mayo.

Two of the sparkling and vivid scenes from Pathe's master plot, "The Grip of Evil."

MARGARET ANGLIN IN FILMS

James Shesgreen Forms Company to Feature Celebrity in Pictures—First Release Will be Made in September

After refusing many offers in this country and Europe Margaret Anglin, the noted actress, has finally consented to appear on the screen.

James Shesgreen, who has been Miss Anglin's manager for the past four years, and James D. Barton, have formed the Margaret Anglin Picture Corporation, which will begin operations immediately. The actress' contract, which calls for her appearance in a series of eight films, will in no way conflict with her arrangement to appear in the spoken drama under the management of the Charles Frohman office.

Miss Anglin will be supported by the best film and dramatic talent available and will appear only in feature adaptations of famous plays. The first release is promised for September.

The officers and incorporators of the Anglin Picture Corporation will be James D. Barton, president; James Shesgreen, first vice-president; Arthur Voegtlin, second vice-president; Irving J. Dittenhoeffer, secretary; and Edward W. Fuller, treasurer.

The general offices of the company will be in the Times Building and the studios will be located in New York and Detroit, Michigan.

Kemble to Promote Spectacles

The Kemble Film Corporation announces that it will promote only gigantic spectacles. William T. Kemble, president of the organization, stated that his concern in entering actively into the distributing of films would limit its efforts to such as would prove worthy of being exploited by masters. "The Zeppelin Raids on London and The Siege of Verdun," the war film on which this company has acquired the stage-rights, is given as an example of the class of productions the Kemble company will handle. This is acknowledged by experts to be the only genuine film ever made of the Zeppelin raids on England. They desire only pictures which cannot be secured in an ordinary manner and which should prove of real financial benefit not only to the purchaser but also to the exhibitor—pictures which are more than box-office attractions—which are events.

Mr. Kemble is the largest and best known showman in Brooklyn, owning and operating the Triangle Theater in that city, for which he is the exclusive distributor of all Triangle Programs.

Snap Shot of Fine Arts

The Fine Arts studio is larger than a stranger can really surmise; it is a community distinct and complete. The five hundred inhabitants of the "village" comprise the employes of the Fine Arts branch of the Triangle, located in Hollywood, California. Each is a unit in the wonderful organization, which is known for its distinctive film productions; each one responds to the spirit of goodfellowship, which is the cornerstone of this large film institution. The plant covers about five acres.

The studio yard inside always presents an active scene. Actors in small groups are rehashing days that have flown by; extra people are scurrying across to the wardrobe room in a commendable endeavor to be transformed into leaders of the smart set—or westerners, or perhaps southerners.

Fine Arts has many interesting and picturesque personalities—Mae Marsh and Robert Harron, impressing Director Lloyd Ingraham with the desirability of a certain scene in their new play—the Gish sisters, rehearsing a scene—Bessie Love, spinning a rope—Norma Talmadge, reading a volume of Ibsen—Tully Marshall, reading the scenario of his next play—Directors Cabanne, Dillon, Withey, Powell, and the Franklins talking about the recent Fairbanks-Dwan banquet, De Wolf Hopper amusing Fay Tincher and the Fine Arts kiddies with a new story; everybody is happy and contented—perhaps that is why Fine Arts plays are of a different sort—human and ring true to life.

Catalogue for Exhibitors

In an effort to further the Better Films movement as an antidote for censorship the National Board of Review has issued a catalogue, "A Garden of American Motion Pictures," which lists all the finest pictures which have been released during the past year and a quarter. This book gives a list of the films, the releasing company, number of reels, character of story and date on which the film was seen by the Board of reviewers.

This catalogue will be a great help to the exhibitor in planning his program and as an assistance to those who desire unusual entertainments which appeal to an entire family.

Copies of this book can be secured from the National Board of Review, 70 Fifth Avenue, New York. The price has been fixed at ten cents to cover the printing and postage.

Eubank Back on the Job

Victor Eubank, publicity director of the Essanay Company of Chicago, who was injured in an automobile accident some weeks ago, is back on the job—on a stretcher. Mr. Eubank suffered a broken leg and other injuries. Pressure of important matters, combined with pent up energy, have brought the publicity head to the office long before the time scheduled by his physicians for release from his bed.

Vitagraph Working New Stars

THREE NEW FEATURES ON THE WAY

HUNTLEY GORDON, the new leading man of the Vitagraph Company, is just the type desired to play opposite Lucille Lee Stewart, and he fills that particular kind of need that makes for the best in photoplay production of the most advanced sort.

Mr. Gordon is the type of actor who appeals to his public because of the human quality of his work. He is young, affable, manly, genial in bearing and unaffected in his contact with others. He is a hard student and enters into a difficult role with understanding and discretion. The physical conformation of the young actor is all that could be desired. He is tall, well set up, graceful in carriage with strong pleasing features and a smile that attracts.

As an actor Mr. Gordon is already known to the moving picture public, having appeared in Pathe, Fox and other releases. His experience has not been limited to screen work, having begun dramatic work on the legitimate stage as a member of a stock company, and later appearing in several features produced by the Brady companies. His last stage appearance was with Ethel Barrymore in "Our Mrs. McChesney." Mr. Gordon has supported Miss Stewart in three feature releases under the direction of Ralph W. Ince—"The Destroyers," "The Conflict," which will soon be released, and a five-reel Blue Ribbon feature written by Josephine Lovett for Miss Stewart.

Sam M. Spedon will look after the affairs of the Vitagraph Company at the National Exposition and Convention of the motion picture industry to be held in Chicago. The Vitagraph Company has contracted for an elaborate booth and Mr. Spedon is planning a special train to run from New York to Chicago on July 8.

Through the General Film program Vitagraph will release a one reel drama and a comedy of the same length the week of July 3. The comedy "When it Rains it Pours," features Mary Anderson. Anne Schaefer, Reggie Morris and Otto Lederer make up the balance of the cast.

Donald Hall and Helen Costello are seen in "Billie's Mother," the drama which was written by William Addison Lathrop. On the same reel is shown "A Tour from Bergen to Bandak."

A Blue Ribbon feature and a Frank Daniels comedy will be released by Vitagraph through the V. L. S. E. the week of July 3. The five-part feature "The Conflict," stars Lucille Lee Stewart. The supporting cast includes Huntley Gordon, Jane Mortimer, William Lytell, Jr., Frank Currier, John Robertson and Richard Turner. Ralph W. Ince produced the picture from the script by Edward J. Montagne.

"Kernel Nutt and the High Shoes" is the title of the Frank Daniels comedy in which the funny-man is seen as the temporary proprietor of a beauty parlor. Alice Washburn and Ethel Corcoran appear with Mr. Daniels, and that means that his support leaves nothing to be desired.

Evart Overton, the Vitagraph star, will soon start work on a feature picture under the direction of Harry Davenport. Mr. Overton received his first glimpse of stage life while on short tours with the college glee club. His real stage career started as a member of the cast of Raymond Hitchcock's musical comedy, "The Merry-Go-Round." He later appeared in musical acts in vaudeville and finally turned to the pictures. Mr. Overton joined the Vitagraph Company in 1915 to play opposite Lillian Walker in a special feature and since that time has appeared with Miss Walker in nearly all her best known successes.

A rouser of an unconventional still picture of Earle Williams, who is now working on "The Scarlet Runner," a forthcoming Vitagraph release, was spoiled by the too rapid exit of his companion. Mr. Williams was all posed beside his car looking pensive and interesting when along came Mrs. Paul, a huge, hardy character actress, who was made up with short, crisp curls, a gingham dress with sleeves rolled up, an apron, and an enormous bunch of purple iris. Mrs. Paul stopped to speak to the actor and Vic Smith seeing a chance for an out-of-the-ordinary still told the cameraman to "shoot." Unfortunately the lady in the case heard the signal and her part of the picture was a mere streak, as she fled out of range of the camera.

TRIANGLE'S NEW PLANT

New Studios at Culver City Will Mean Much to the Motion Picture Industry

By Thomas H. Ince

We have what I believe is the finest plant for the taking of motion pictures that you can find in this or any other country.

We moved because we felt that by the construction of a new and modern plant, built upon intelligent manufacturing lines, some of the enormous overhead expenses of taking motion pictures could be eliminated, with the result that bigger and better pictures would be made. Culver City is the last word in studio facilities. It is good commercial planning that has produced it.

We have practically abandoned the open-air studio as we have come to the conclusion that the best results are to be obtained under glass, and we have equipped all our studios with the best lighting system that we could find anywhere. We have five big glass stages and have the facilities and equipment to add more at short notice.

I think that what we are doing now at the Culver City studios will be sure to have its effect upon the motion picture industry, and I am reasonably certain that Triangle exhibitors and patrons will have no reason to complain when they see the steady gain that is now becoming apparent. There is little doubt that the great things that have been accomplished in the motion picture business have been due to the hard, imaginative work of the men who have performed that work, but we have reached a point of industrial development now that makes it imperative that we should begin applying intelligent commercial methods to our work. No industrial corporation would stand for a minute the things that have been done in the name of motion picture production. We have got to make the most of our resources; we have to eliminate waste, and we have to cut our corners in order to maintain high standards and produce better pictures without sacrificing any of the artistic standards we have established.

Triangle pictures have established themselves, and there is little need for us to do anything now but put the best ideas, the best people and the best work of which we are capable into them. The time has come when big things are expected of the motion picture; when it has become really an integral part of the national life, and as such has come to assume a position of true dignity.

The move to Culver City does not mean that we have abandoned the Inceville studios at all. That plant will be used for the taking of special features, and all the William S. Hart pictures will be made there exclusively. Inceville, with its 18,000 acres of western landscape and hundreds of head of horses and cattle, lends itself better than any other studio in America to the making of western pictures.

Operation of Motor-Generator

A peculiar case involving a motor-generator set used in a motion picture theater has been called to the attention of the Electrical Review and Western Electrician.

This particular set included an alternating-current motor and a direct-current generator, the latter being compounded and having its series and shunt fields differentially connected. In changing from one picture machine to the other, both arcs are on for a short time. This doubles the series-field excitation, which would bring the generator voltage down too low for good operation. To prevent this, a change-over switch is used which cuts a resistance in series with each arc, thus maintaining a high enough voltage across the shunt field to give the proper operating voltage.

It was found that when a cold carbon was started, with only one machine in service, the arc became so dim for about a minute that it almost went out. The resistance of the cold carbon was evidently so low that it allowed a heavier current to flow through the arc, thus strengthening the series field, which caused the voltage of the machine to fall. It was therefore suggested to leave the change-over switch open with the resistance in series until the carbon got hot and it was found that this remedied the trouble. The machine is now used continuously without a flicker.

Melies Manufacturing Company issues the following statement in denial of the published report that the three-reel Knickerbocker Star Features, released every Friday in the General Film Service, will be discontinued:

"The report published last week by a theatrical journal, to the effect that the three-reel Knickerbocker Star Features will be discontinued at the request of the General Film Company, is false and without foundation in fact."

Farnum Sees End of Silent Drama

ZENA KEEFE LATEST WILLIAM FOX LUMINARY

WHAT would you do if you had a genuine banknote, issued by the United States Government, that was stamped $50 on one side and $100 on the other?

Bertram Bracken, who directed "East Lynne" for the Fox Film Co., is one of the few men extant to whom this neat little financial problem has come.

Years ago Mr. Bracken worked in a bank as a paying teller. At the end of the day's business Mr. Bracken made up his accounts but they would not balance.

After checking up the count a half-dozen times and finding that he always got $50 more one way than the other, Mr. Bracken began to think he was ill.

Another teller offered assistance and after calculating for fifteen minutes confessed that the affair was peculiar, to say the least. As Mr. Bracken was gazing absent-mindedly at the notes one of them fluttered to the floor as a breeze came through a nearby window. Then he discovered what had caused the disparity in the count.

The Treasury Department was informed of their "freak" product. Examination disclosed that an entire sheet of bank-notes printed for a western bank had been turned out in hybrid fashion because of a pressman's mistake in mixing two plates.

William Farnum believes that the end of silent drama is not far off!

This apparent heresy on the part of the distinguished Fox actor is, in fact, not heresy at all.

"It is my opinion," says Mr. Farnum, "that actors and actresses will have to learn parts before long for the silent drama as they have always had to for the spoken drama.

"Of course, action will probably always remain the dominant note in the films. It is undoubtedly true that the biggest and steadiest advances will be made in obtaining new and better photographic effects, but, after all, the foundation of every good picture is the scenario. And in the higher grade scenario, there are many scenes in which the only action is the good old-fashioned word of mouth kind—with the appropriate gestures.

"Pantomime is naturally out of the question in such cases. The actor has to say something, or the scene falls flat. Why not make the thing natural by giving him a definite speaking part?

"Spoken parts for screen stars seems inevitable to me, because the moving picture fans are now becoming so adept that they can 'decipher' many of the words which the actors utter."

A tower of Fox stars. From the top down, they are: Baroness Von Dewitz, Virginia Pearson, June Caprice, the little Boston school girl, Anne Luther, Pauline Barry and Harry S. Hilliard.

The first stage of the great movie experiment is over. Initial efforts toward the deliberate creation of a nationally known star are concluded. Even the actors and actresses in all the Fox studios are awaiting impatiently the debut of June Caprice, which will take place on July 10.

Since June Caprice has wafted from New England shores to serve as the subject for this interesting experiment, she has been cultivated like a hothouse flower.

Every convenience and luxury have been hers. She has a wardrobe that would make any actress envious. She has sat for the leading photographers of the country. At present she is installed in a fashionable finishing school for girls and has the tutelage of two private instructors.

To the William Fox photoplay revival of "East Lynne," in which Theda Bara plays the role of the lovely Isabel, belongs the unique distinction of being the first motion picture story submitted to the State of Maryland's newly created Board of Censors.

Miss Mary Murillo's screen adaptation of the tear-inducing drama was up before the board in judicial session and came through the meeting absolutely unscathed. Every foot of the film was left intact. Police reserves were called out in Clarksburg, West Virginia, recently to help the management of the Robinson Grand Theater control the record-breaking crowd which wanted to see Theda Bara in "The Eternal Sapho." The theater was filled to capacity and the S. R. O. sign remained outside from 1 P. M. until midnight.

Fuller Mellish, the eminent English actor now in William Fox pictures, has been rehearsing for a stage play between his periods of work at the Fox studios. He has a leading part in "Friend Martha," a comedy by Edward Peple, which gave its opening performance in Rochester, N. Y., a few weeks ago. Zena Keefe, well known star of a dozen moving pictures, has joined the William Fox companies, and will appear soon in support of June Caprice and Harry Hilliard. Miss Keefe has had several years of experience in pictures although she is now only 19, as she has done stage work since the age of three.

She first appeared in Palmer Cox's "Brownies in Fairyland," and has been connected with the stage in some manner or other ever since that time.

EXHIBITOR ADVERTISING

Clever Stunts Originated by Exhibitors—Lasky's "Selfish Woman" and Pallas' "Davy Crockett" Released on Paramount Program

A Paramount exhibitor, Mr. Uran, of the Grand Theater, Mattoon, Illinois, did some very clever and productive advertising when he was showing the "Seeing with the fingers," from "Better Babies," Paramount Pictographs.

Paramount picture "The Call of the Cumberlands." Three weeks before the film was to be shown in his theater he placed a copy of the book in the public library and ran a slide telling all his patrons to read the best of the new books, "The Call of the Cumberlands," at the public library. H. I. Day, editor of Paramount Progress, declares this to be the cleverest advertising he has seen because it also means "word of mouth" advertising, which is a thousand times more valuable than advertising literature.

George R. Mann, manager of Paramount's Washington Exchange, tells of a clever co-operative newspaper advertising scheme which was tried by a number of Paramount exhibitors.

The advertising was in the form of a heading using the Paramount trade mark as a center piece and "The Trademark That Stands for Quality" as a slogan. A border with Paramount spelled out lengthwise was neatly arranged down each side. Ten theaters using Paramount Pictures were displayed under the heading, thus giving each one of these theaters the advantage of price given a large space contract and the position on the newspaper page that a large and well set up advertisement gets in the make-up.

"The Selfish Woman," a Lasky production featuring Wallace Reid and Cleo Ridgely, will be released on the Paramount program July 10, and the same week the Pallas studios will offer "Davy Crockett," with Dustin Farnum as the star.

A. B. Reed's drawing, "The Wild and Woolly West," in the Paramount-Bray Animated Cartoons, "Beautiful Bavaria" in the Paramount-Burton Holmes Travel-Pictures, and the Paramount Pictographs will be the three short reel subjects rounding out this program.

Hints and "don'ts" for vacationists planning canoe trips are attractively presented in this release of the Pictographs, which includes among other features "Table Manners" in the "Better Babies" series; "System" in a feature showing correct business methods; "Birds;" "Speeding Up the Mail," and "Typhoid vs. Leucocyte," a battle of germs caught by the cameraman.

In many localities where "Better Babies" weeks are anticipated exhibitors are lending their co-operation through the visualized lectures on the subject contained in the Paramount Pictographs. Some managers are inaugurating a week devoted to "Better Babies" and thus linking their theaters with a philanthropic movement. In this campaign Paramount is co-operating with the Woman's Home Companion, the National Federation of Women's Clubs and the Children's Bureau of the Department of Labor in Washington.

Herman Weedon, an animal trainer of international repute, has put "Teddy," the great African lion, through a series of stunts for the cameraman of the Paramount Pictographs.

"Farmer Al Falfa's Watermelon Patch," Paul Terry's Paramount-Bray Animated Cartoon, is recommended as a panacea for the blues. The story centers around the eviction of an obstinate ebony southerner from old Farmer Al Falfa's melon patch, and is full of laughs.

San Francisco Doesn't Want Censors

San Francisco doesn't want any film censors. Petitions are now being liberally signed in the theaters, attacking a censor board in advance, and if the law is passed, an initiative and referendum will be inaugurated by the voters.

"Speeding up the Mail," a camera study of efficiency methods employed in Uncle Sam's postal service, is one of the novelties announced for future release in the Paramount Pictographs.

ANNETTE KELLERMAN LEADS 100 GIRLS IN AQUATIC FEATS

WITH infinite pains and patience Annette Kellerman has drilled 100 of the most expert girl swimmers to be found in the United States in a series of rhythmic movements that make the ballet of the mermaids one of the most wonderful spectacles in "A Daughter of the Gods," the Fox production which is full of unusually beautiful scenes.

From what places were these sea beauties recruited? How were they gathered together, selected and trained, and, most important of all, who trained them?

The assembling of the mermaids constitutes a story of all the great ocean, lake and river-front cities of the United States—of Seattle, Detroit, Cleveland, New York, Boston, San Francisco, Los Angeles, Savannah, New Orleans and Buffalo.

From over 200 towns William Fox selected the lithe, graceful beauties who could swim like fishes, swim with the legs encased in scaly fish-tails, and who possessed the courage to do any and everything the director ordered.

His first step was to advertise in the great cities of the nation for the star swimmers. The additional requirement was that each and every one should be beautiful. The number of responses was enormous. The Fox offices were deluged with letters containing photographs and dimensions. Compared with the existing Bertillon measurements of Venus de Milo many of these modern applicants could give that historic beauty cards and spades and beat her on all measurements, weights, dimensions and specifications.

Annette Kellerman as she appears in "A Daughter of the Gods," the big Fox drama filmed by Brenon in Jamaica.

Diversey and Wilson Avenue beaches, Chicago, produced rival applicants who gave a William Fox representative a demonstration of prowess. The Diversey girl won. One of the champions from the Fairgrounds pool, St. Louis, gave an exhibition that immediately guaranteed her employment. Then came girls from Redondo beach—Buffalo, Rochester and Memphis girls and soon the engagement sheet contained a roster of our representative cities.

This made "A Daughter of the Gods" truly cosmopolitan in its acting membership. The Scandinavian countries were represented, French-parented girls born in America, girls from beside the Danube; two little Italian beauties whose parents came from Palmero and Pola.

For weeks after their arrival in the tropics where an entire island was seized upon for habitation, Annette Kellerman, the greatest artist of her kind in all the world, trained these mermaids-to-be with infinite patience through long hours of fatiguing labor. Drawing a large salary, which William Fox gladly paid for her skill and prestige, Miss Kellermann dared not trust this important work of instruction and training to assistants. For hours the girls would be taught a single swimming stroke in unison. There must be no chaotic movement in the water scenes to distract attention. There had to be perfect synchronization—poetry applied to motion.

In this work the patience and interest of Annette Kellermann counted for everything. Viewing these portions of the picture when they reached New York later on, William Fox cabled Miss Kellermann as follows:

"Your genius has in the mermaid scenes made it possible for our picture to excel the Russian ballet artistes for grace and rhythm. I have just sat and watched the most beautiful work I have ever seen photographed in motion pictures."

Interwoven with these mermaid scenes Miss Kellermann herself performs in "A Daughter of the Gods" aquatic feats which, with all her daring, she had never before attempted in her life. When you have seen this great screen fantasy you are certain to agree that she had violated all film precedents and recorded new history both in personal daring and photographic achievement.

And as for her hundred mermaid assistants, there are one hundred American cities that can do the "pointing with pride stuff" to the feats of their "native daughters."

Pigs, donkeys, chickens, ducks and other creatures of the barnyard play a part in the Ince-Triangle subject in which Bessie Barriscale is now appearing as star under the direction of Charles Miller. The story by C. Gardner Sullivan is a comedy-drama of Irish life, in which Miss Barriscale plays the part of a sweet-faced colleen, whose pranks get her into trouble with the officers and men of an Irish regiment.

Before the recent Los Angeles preparedness parade was over the Universal company was showing films of it in the local theaters.

International Camera Follows Soldiers

PICTORIAL NEWS-GATHERERS IN ALL PARTS OF THE WORLD

TRACY MATHEWSON of the Hearst International News Pictorial camera staff is persistently dogging the American soldiers to give to the public all the particulars of the Mexican situation. At the time of the massacre of the Americans by Villa at Columbus, New Mexico, Mathewson filmed the stirring events and when General Pershing's expedition went into Mexico his camera caught the boys in khaki in the act of crossing the border and when the first camp was made in Mexico he obtained an excellent "shot" of this. The pictures made by the cameraman were censored by the War Department and released by the International Film Service, Inc., only by special permission of the authorities at Washington.

Reel No. 49 of the Hearst-International News Pictorial released June 20, shows the National Guardsmen of all the states preparing for active service, among them the New York state troops commanded by General John F. O'Ryan and the First Illinois cavalry. It also presents a view of the schooner Viriginia which was driven ashore by a gale at Salisbury Beach, Mass., and beaten to pieces by wind and wave; two disastrous fires which visited San Francisco; the rose festival pagent at Portland, Oregon; the Turkish infantry in action together with scenes showing the wounded fighters being cared for by Red Crescent nurses; children of the north side public schools of Chicago in the National League baseball park; demonstrating the results of their physical training; lighting effects obtained by reflections of the setting sun on the gigantic red sandstone cliffs in Southern Utah; and the latest creations of America's most up-to-date modistes.

M. W. Rale, "The Grand Master" in "The Mysteries of Myra," was born in Russia and educated at the University of Kovno. When he landed in America he was without funds and went to work at the first job offered which happened to be in a factory. Possesed of a fine tenor voice he later joined the George Wilson mintsrels and for five years toured with nearly every minstrel organization in the country. He followed this with work in the speaking drama and made the hit of his legitimate career as the Jap valet in "Officer 666."

As Chinaman in "Mr. Wu," he first attracted the attention of the brothers Wharton and was engaged to do the Chinaman act for "The Exploits of Elaine." Later he did a Jap in Mary Pickford's "Madame Butterfly," and then entered upon his engagement as "The Grand Master" in "The Mysteries of Myra," now being released by the International Film Service, Inc.

Allan Murname, chief assistant villain in the International serial, "The Mysteries of Myra," is the son of a prosperous Philadelphia merchant. Left to "follow his natural bent" he turned to the stage and his first engagement was with Annie Russell in "A Royal Family," where his did the juvenile lead. After a number of other stage appearances he appeared in musical comedy and then followed a long series of stock engagements which took him over a greater part of the country. His first appearance on the screen was in Wharton productions. Personally Mr. Murname is most affable and not at all like the vindictive and vengeful "Varney" of "The Mysteries." Mr. Murname claims that picture work requires better and more finished acting than the "legit," because you can fool an audience but you cannot fool the camera.

A Convention Hotel

Exhibitors sailing into Chicago by trainloads and slipping quietly in singly or by twos and threes for the big convention July 10 to 18, are going to wonder upon their arrival where they can secure the kind of hotel accommodation they desire. For the benefit of these visitors the attention of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America is called to the Hotel Kaiserhof, the handsomely towering hostelry on South Clark street.

This hotel, located between Van Buren street and Jackson boulevard, is convenient to any part of the city. It contains 450 rooms and the prices are moderately placed at $1.50 and up. The building is absolutely fireproof. The Bauernstube is one of the most popular restaurants in Chicago and the Ladies' Cafe is one of the most attractive in the loop. The management of the new Kaiserhof extends a particular invitation to visiting exhibitors and film men to make the hotel their personal headquarters during the coming convention.

American Editor Killed

Donald Rayburn, 25, a scenario editor of the American Film Company, was killed on June 20 when an auto in which he was riding crashed against a telephone pole near Los Angeles. George L. Sargent, a director at the American studios, was also severely cut and bruised.

Rayburn and Sargent had motored from Santa Barbara to Los Angeles to see the premiere of "The Fall of a Nation," for which Sargent had directed the big battle scenes. After the exhibition they were returning along the State highway when Sargent turned the wheel of the auto over to Rayburn while reaching in a rear seat for a sandwich. The machine swerved and struck the pole, throwing Rayburn against it and killing him almost instantly.

"Fall of a Nation" Opens Booking Offices

EDWARD V. GIROUX IN CHARGE

THOMAS DIXON, director-general of the National Drama Corporation, is rapidly developing his selling plans for the Dixon-Herbert spectacle, "The Fall of a Nation" now running in New York and Chicago.

Philip Gastrock, the Italian American soldier in "The Fall of a Nation."

Booking offices have been opened at 1480 Broadway and Edward V. Giroux, for many years manager of the Northwestern Theatrical Circuit, has been selected as booking manager.

According to Mr. Dixon's plan only large cities will be reserved for premier productions of this great war drama. In view of the crisis in our international affairs the author desires speedy presentation of the patriotic film everywhere and state right buyers and exhibitors controlling chains of theaters will be welcomed. Victor Herbert's original music can be supplied and the composer is putting the finishing touches to a condensation of the musical score suitable for small orchestras. The pictorial paper is also ready as the H. C. Miner Lithograph Company has prepared a stock of pictorial stands, eight-sheets, three-sheets, ones and halves illustrating the chief patriotic, thrilling and human interest moments in the production. Illustrated heralds, press opinions from the leading cities and unique toy novelties have also been prepared.

The exploitation campaign already exceeds the gross advertising done in the first two months of "The Birth of a Nation." First class productions of the spectacle are now being operated to capacity business at the Liberty Theater, New York, and the Auditorium, Los Angeles, in addition to which the Illinois Theater, Chicago, will open on July 3 and the Cort Theater, San Francisco, on July 17. Several other large cities will likewise be covered by special productions. Mr. Dixon will start immediately on the work of putting the play within the reach of the myriad millions of Americans.

The writers in the publicity department, aiding the state right buyer or exhibitor, include Henry MacMahon and Wallace M. Powers, late of "The Birth of a Nation" and Triangle staffs respectively; Willard Holcomb, former motion picture editor of the Dramatic Mirror; Julius Hopp, an expert in foreign language publicity, and E. D. Price, a veteran Klaw & Erlanger pressman, who is covering Chicago. The services of these writers are at the behest of the exhibitor for forceful advertising copy and novel ideas in news stories.

In "The Fall of a Nation," Thomas Dixon has proved his theory that players should be chosen by their merit instead of their reputation.

Flora MacDonald, who created the part of Angela Benda, the Italian mother, has received great praise because of her splendid acting and yet she was practically unknown before she appeared in this drama, and had no previous dramatic experience.

Lorraine Huling, the heroine, made her debut on the stage three years ago and has seen some picture experience with the Famous Players.

Leila Frost, ingenue of the play, has been on the stage for years without ever having a grown-up part.

Arthur Shirley, the hero, came from Australia, where he had some little experience in acting for the camera.

Accepting the dictum of a musical critic who declared "The Fall of a Nation" could be followed and enjoyed through the music alone which Victor Herbert composed especially to fit the scenario, the Liberty Theater management proposes to invite a number of blind persons to the performance. The space behind the screen will be utilized for an auditorium for these sightless guests and the musical impression will be reinforced verbally by Flora Mac Donald.

New Feature Producing Company

FRANK POWELL PRODUCTIONS BEGINS WORK SOON—HALE TO STAR

OF unusual importance to the motion picture industry is the announcement of the Frank Powell Productions, a New York state corporation, and formed along new lines to produce distinctively different feature pictures of intense dramas and subjects of timely appeal.

Creighton Hale.

Of importance almost equal to the announcement of the organization itself is the acquisition of Creighton Hale, the well-known star of "The Iron Claw," "The Exploits of Elaine," and many other feature successes, who has been placed under contract to star in the features of the new company with an actress of known dramatic ability and reputation.

Linda A. Griffith will be co-starred with Mr. Hale in the first picture of the organization, and judging from her artistic efforts and excellent portrayals with the Biograph Company for the past several years, she is particularly suited for the part cast for her in this picture. This production is under way and will be ready for the disposal of territorial rights some time in the early fall, and while the name of the picture has been decided upon, it will not be announced until later.

Mr. Hale, whose popularity is second to no other actor before the public today, due to his intelligent acting in the many serials and features he has appeared in, is well qualified for his new position and will add greatly to the laurels he has already won as an artist. The first picture will be made in one of the most modernly equipped studios in the East, and while several sites for the location of a studio have been looked at, it has not been definitely settled as to the ultimate location of the permanent studios.

The best talent has been secured for every position, and from the connections which have been made in the way of stars, the strongest of financial backing and the world wide reputation of Mr. Powell as a director and who will personally direct every scene, the company shows every indication that theirs will be an activity that will attract more than ordinary attention.

The pictures will be disposed of on the territorial rights basis, and in view of Mr. Hale's popularity and the pre-eminence of Mr. Powell in the industry, the product of the company should and undoubtedly will find a ready market. Mr. Powell since his retirement from the legitimate stage eight years ago, has devoted his efforts entirely to the art of the motion picture, and today is recognized as one of America's highest salaried and foremost photoplay directors.

Starting his career with the Biograph Company, he produced split reel and one-reel comedies and then two-reel dramas, which were considered exceptional features for that time. After leaving the Biograph Company, Mr. Powell directed features for the Pathé Frères Company both here and abroad, and upon his return to this country became associated with William Fox, with whom he remained for a considerable time, establishing a record of producing 48 reels of feature pictures in 52 weeks. While with the Fox Company he directed the sensational picture, "A Fool There Was," said to be one of the greatest features ever produced and which made him famous on two continents. Among other of his feature successes may be mentioned "The Children of the Ghetto," "The Witch," "Officer 666," "The Fourth Estate," "A Woman's Past," "The Stain," "Princess Romanoff," "From the Valley of the Missing," "The Chain Invisible," "The Corsair," "The Ghost," "The Taint," "The Other Sister," and "Jane Shore." The officers of the new corporation are as follows: Frank Powell, president; Frank G. Doelger, vice-president and treasurer; Joseph S. Buhler, secretary; and William Barry, general manager.

Frank Powell.

Mr. Powell also brings with him his entire working staff, with whom he has been associated for several years. These include the following:

George Barber, assistant director, Alfred P. Hamberg, studio manager, and David Calcigani, one of the best photographic experts in this country and Europe, who will be assisted at the camera by Arthur Boeger and Caesre Ponci.

The offices of the new company are located in the Times building, New York City, and will be in charge of William Barry, one of the best known and most popular men in the industry, and well remembered as the creator of the famous Nicholas Power projection machine advertising. Mr. Barry has also been a prominent figure in the social activities of the film business, having held office in the Screen Club, of which he is one of the old members.

Experience through many years has given him a wide knowledge of the motion picture industry. This, with his natural executive ability, promises healthful color for the future management of Frank Powell Productions, Inc.

"The Secret of the Night"

Essanay Three-Reel Drama Released July 15. Reviewed by Genevieve Harris

THIS play, whose story combines hypnotism and the loss of memory plot, is not of startling originality. However, the mystery and the complication of events are sufficiently well presented to hold the interest of an audience. A clever cast interprets the roles and the settings and photography are good.

John Martin, a detective, is called from home on a case

one stormy night. He does not return to his wife and little daughter. During the storm he had been struck by lightning and when he recovered from the shock he was unable to recall his past life. He goes to another city and again engages in detective work.

When Grace Martin, the daughter, has grown up, she is engaged to marry Carrol Johnson. One day in the park, her horse becomes unmanageable and she is saved from injury by a man who, we learn later, is a hypnotist, a foreign spy and a criminal. The man at once obtains a strong influence over the girl, so strong that in a short time she agrees to an elopement. But in the meantime, the detective, Thomas Harding, who is really John Martin, is tracing the criminal and he arrives at the home just in time to save his daughter. In a struggle with the hypnotist, the detective falls, striking his head, and the blow restores his lost memory. There is a happy family reconciliation and the girl recovers from her infatuation for the criminal and returns to her former lover.

Sydney Ainsworth plays the detective. Lillian Drew is his wife; Gertrude Glover is the daughter; John Lorenz, her fiance. The acting, settings and photography of the offering are good.

"Far from the Madding Crowd"

Florence Turner Appears in Mutual Masterpicture. Reviewed by Thomas C. Kennedy

THE first Florence Turner picture released on the Mutual feature program tells a love story laid in rural England. "Far from the Madding Crowd" is based on a popular English novel by Thomas Hardy and in making it into a picture more stress was laid upon characterization and pictorial beauty than on what dramatic effect the story may contain.

Screen patrons in this country know that Miss Turner may be counted on to give an interesting performance in most any role she attempts and her characterization of the country girl in "Far from the Madding Crowd" is no disappointment. Her acting takes its place with the charming scenic effects obtained and shares the feature honors of an entertaining picture.

The story tells of a poor girl who inherits her uncle's farm. Thereupon she is immediately wooed by an army officer and so flattered by his attentions that she rejects her second suitor, the Farmer Boldwood, and marries the officer in haste. This action she has cause to repent. Her husband, she learns, has outraged a young girl and her denouncement sends him off to seek safety in seclusion.

Bathsheba then promises to marry Farmer Boldwood at the expiration of a certain number of years in the event of Troy's not returning. He does return, and for money. Boldwood is enraged and he shoots and kills the worthless Troy. All this time Gabriel, who has been in love with Bathsheba since their early youth, stands hopefully aside. Gabriel's loyalty to Bathsheba and his determined fight in the face of adversity is finally rewarded. At the close of the picture he and the charming young woman are married and they settle down to a prosperous life on their enlarged farm.

The action plays in rural Wales and the grandeur of the settings afford the spectator keen pleasure. Henry Edwards, Malcolm Cherry, Campbell Gullan, Marian Grey and Dorothy Rowan appear in the cast.

"Susie Snowflake"

Famous Players-Paramount Comedy With Ann Pennington. Reviewed by Thomas C. Kennedy

"SUSIE SNOWFLAKE" is a notable Famous Players offering. It is also unique; and all because it introduces to screen patrons one of the most engaging, wholly charming little actresses the films ever claimed. The petite musical comedy star who is at present figuring largely in the current Ziegfeld Follies on Broadway, does herself full justice in this picture and we are frank to admit that no screen character ever seemed so delightful or bewitching as did "Susie Snowflake."

With suitable vehicles Ann Pennington will become a film star whose brilliance will not dull in the slightest by comparison with any other actress in the whole world of motion pictures. In "Susie Snowflake" she is seen as a little actress who returns to the former home of her mother, a small country town. The play is not exceptional in itself. But then plays laid in the small town, that is the small town of these United States, require nothing startlingly dramatic or novel to be made into pictures of distinct merit if they are well cast and skilfully directed. Shannon Fife, whose experience in writing screen plays is evidenced in this play, deserves credit for writing a story so well suited to the star.

James Kirkwood gave the play an atmospheric setting and in addition many life-like touches which help things materially. The picture tells the story of an orphaned girl who is brought up on the stage. Her guardian, an old theatrical man, thinks it best for Susie to live with her aunts, who have never seen her. The aunts are typically small-town so Susie quite shocks them with her abandon and vivacity even though she is one of the most wholesome little ladies who ever lived on earth. The whole town is shocked when she does her musical comedy dance in a show girl costume but before long Susie marches right into the hearts of all the people in Crescent. She makes a discovery which places her aunts in a financially comfortable position and marries the town doctor.

The star is excellently supported by Leo Delaney, William Courtleigh, Jr., Marcia Harria, Billie Wilson and William J. Butler. The photography is up to the Famous Players' best standard. Ned Van Buren was the cameraman in charge. "Susie Snowflake" will doubtless create a demand among picture goers for any future offerings with Ann Pennington in the star role. It is a picture that will appeal strongly to the vast majority.

"The Phantom"

Frank Keenan in Triangle-Ince Crook Story. Reviewed by Thomas C. Kennedy

"THE PHANTOM" presents Frank Keenan in an excellent characterization of a society crook. The play by J. G. Hawks gives him an attractive part and as all who have seen Mr. Keenan's former screen performances know he is an actor requiring nothing more than that to carry the spectator's interest from the beginning to the end of five reels.

"The Phantom," however, is not dependent upon the work of the cast to make it a particularly good Triangle offering. The story is good and the direction of Charles Giblyn realizes all that is best in the play. The element of mystery has here been deftly handled and "The Phantom" at no time permits the spectator's interest to lag.

A crook named Farrell is known by the police as "the Phantom." At the beginning of the picture he is warned by a detective to leave town immediately. Farrell has other plans and he has no intention of complying with Blaisdell's request.

A certain James Bereton is the owner of a valuable necklace which Farrell is interested in and on the occasion of a reception at the Bereton home he is welcomed as a guest and generally believed to be a detective. During the course of the evening the host removes the famous jewels from the safe and displays them to the guests. At this moment the lights are extinguished and when they are again turned on the necklace has disappeared.

The mystery of the thing is not explained until Farrell openly accuses Dr. Ratcliffe, who was brought to the affair by Bereton's son. When the detectives arrive Farrell and his assistant make good their escape from a house which should be thankful for his visit, for the younger Bereton has been freed from the obligations which bound him to the crooked Ratcliffe. Farrell walks away content with having met such a delightful person as Avice Bereton, and, because of her, not in the least sorry for having left without the prize he set out after.

Enid Markey is Avice Bereton and she appeals in the role. Robert McKim, P. D. Tabler, Charles K. French and J. Barney Sherry complete the cast, each member of which is entitled to praise.

"The Shop Girl"

Blue Ribbon Feature Released by V. L. S. E. June 26. Reviewed by Thomas C. Kennedy

ASSIGNING the responsibility of production to George Baker and the enactment of the leading role to Edith Storey was one way for Vitagraph to bring the C. N. and A. M. Williamson novel "The Shop Girl" to the screen in a manner worthy of the picturegoer's regard and complete satisfaction. The acting, production and photography make "The Shop Girl" a picture that can be recommended.

The story is in the main quite conventional, its characters are strictly characters of the theater. They are characters whose deeds stamp them as pawns in a game of melodrama. But the story is so well told that one could hardly call the play trite. Furthermore, it is a play whose situations and development assure its popularity with the average audiences.

According to our count Edith Storey makes her fourth appearance on the V. L. S. E. Program in "The Shop Girl" and for the fourth time she contributes to this Program a characterization that is pleasing in the extreme. Her part permits her to win the spectator's sympathy for the working girl who encounters the temptations the story writers tell us girls in such positions usually encounter and there are any number of opportunities for the expression of the sterner emotions.

"The Shop Girl" is a romance telling of a girl who earns her own living and desires only the wholesome pleasures of this life. She becomes acquainted with a rich youth while on shipboard. The attraction is mutual and Peter's sister regards her brother's growing friendship with the cloak model with alarm and she takes steps to put a stop to it. Ena tells the model that her brother is engaged and warns her that Peter is only trifling with her.

He cannot understand why Winifred avoids him thereafter, and try as he will to please his family's wishes in the matter he cannot forget the girl. When Winifred arrives in New York she is discharged by Madame Nadine, the modiste, because she reproaches a good buyer who insults her. Then after a long search she secures a position in Rools department store. Ena learns this and brings about her discharge. This gives the superintendent his opportunity to force his attentions on the pretty shop girl. She is lured to his apartment, where Peter, who has searched thoroughly, finds her and she is happy to accept his proposal of marriage.

Antonio Moreno as Peter has a part that shares equally with Miss Storey's in prominence and importance. Like Miss Storey he may be counted upon to give a fine account of himself and his acting in "The Shop Girl" is up to expectations. Thomas Mills, Lillian Burns, Harold Foshay, John Costello, Josephine Earle, Eddie Dunn and Claire McCormack comprise a well chosen and adequate supporting cast.

"According to the Code"

Essanay Five-Act Drama Released Through V. L. S. E. Reviewed by Genevieve Harris

THE excellent acting of Lewis Stone as an old Confederate soldier is beyond doubt the most appealing feature of this offering. He creates a character which will remain in one's memory. Because of the sympathy he wins, audiences will follow the story to the end, in spite of its confusion and a number of annoying improbabilities.

The story, although it begins and ends at the present day, goes back to Civil War times for its important events. The method of telling is a peculiar one, for the flash-back pictures seem for a time to be detached incidents. They are not presented in order, and following the story has something of the fascination of putting together a puzzle picture. In the end, one gets the general outline of the plot, though a number of details are left hazy.

Basil Breckenridge, an old soldier, is forced to pawn the sword awarded him for bravery. From the inscription, we learn that his real name is Knighton. That day he is attacked by some ruffianly boys and, angered, he turns against one of them. Unfortunately, the boy is the son of a political boss, who has the old man brought to trial. The young district attorney, Andrews, who takes the case, is unusually severe. The mother and father of the young attorney beg him to save the old man, but, wishing to please the boss, he refuses. The flash-back scenes show the reason for the parents' concern.

In the war, Captain Knighton saves a wounded northern soldier, Andrews, and takes him to his own home. Later Knighton himself is reported killed, and the northerner marries Knighton's young wife and takes her and her little son to his home in the north.

Knighton, when he returns and learns the story, challenges Andrews to a duel.– Andrews is wounded but recovers. Knighton, believing he has killed him, leaves the country. Now, Kinghton's own son, who for some reason bears the name of Andrews, is the district attorney. And the mother and Andrews in the court room, recognize the defendant. He recognizes them, but does not reveal his own name, although he might save himself by so doing. Then, before the trial is over, he dies.

The supporting cast includes E. H. Calvert, Sydney Ainsworth, Marguerite Clayton and Florence Oberle. Miss Clayton plays the role of the young bride, Miss Oberle of the same woman when sixty-five years old, a rather unusual case of dividing a role. It works out better than one would expect, but it seems that Miss Clayton missed a test of her acting ability and skill in makeup is not playing the entire role.

"At Medicine Bend"

Five Reel Signal-Mutual Masterpicture. Released July 3. Reviewed by Genevieve Harris

THIS drama, featuring Helen Holmes and J. P. McGowan, is a completion of the picturization of "Whispering Smith," the novel by Frank H. Spearman, and is a sequel to the "masterpicture," "Whispering Smith," released June 5th. The most interesting part of the story is contained in this second drama, and those who saw the first picture will certainly wish to see this, in which the destinies of the characters are definitely decided.

While the opening events will not, of course, be as clear to those who did not see the first chapter, still the thread of the story is easily taken up, and the spectator is soon interested in the struggle which forms the theme. And while many of the situations are typical of western dramas, very well presented, the play is unusual in that the chief interest is in the characters, due largely to the excellent acting of the featured players. McGowan continues his presentation of "Whispering Smith" in the effective manner of the first release, while Helen Holmes, who is given more of an opportunity in this second chapter, shows a very genuine skill in depicting emotion.

In the first chapter, "Whispering Smith," a detective, had been sent to check the looting of freight cars. He finds that suspicion points strongly to Murray Sinclair, the husband of his former sweetheart, Marion. For her sake, he tries to reform the man. In this installment, Sinclair plans to leave the country after one more looting excursion. Marion refuses to accompany him, even when he threatens her life. The cars are looted and Smith leads a band of officers against the bandits. The issue between Smith and Sinclair, however, is a personal one, and Smith knows that one of them must die. The scenes of the tracking and capture of the outlaws are very exciting. In the end Sinclair is killed after he has severely wounded Smith. Smith recovers and later marries Marion.

There are a number of spectacular railroad wreck scenes in the drama. The direction and photography of the story are of high standard, and the play is one which will prove very interesting to almost any audience. The cast of characters is the same as in the preceding chapter and includes the players in the "Girl and the Game" series, Paul C. Hurst, Thomas G. Lingham, Leo D. Maloney, William Brunton, F. N. Van Norman, N. Z. Woods and Chance E. Ward.

"The Secret of the Submarine"

Chapter Eight of the American Serial. Released July 10. Reviewed by Genevieve Harris

THE hunt for the two precious books, one of which contains the secret of the submarine invention in code, the other the key to the code, goes merrily on. Russia, Japan and America continue a neck-to-neck race. Morton and Olga, for Russia, Satsuma's presence as waiter surprises Cleo and Hope.

Mahlin and Satsuma, for Japan, and Cleo and Hope, for America, continue down the list of purchasers of the auctioned volumes.

After the three factions had striven to get possession of the book bought by the lighthouse keeper, only to discover that it, like the previous ones, was valueless, they set out for the home of Dr. Owen, next on the list. Their starting point in this installment is the island. Satsuma and Mahlin reach the main land first, and Cleo, Hope, Morton and Olga arrive later, in time to catch a train to the city. Satsuma and Mahlin arrange to wreck the train in a tunnel.

While the plot of the story, which was cleverly complicated in the opening chapters, seems to be suffering a bit from a lack of variety, the "thrills" in the picture make up for this. There are several in this chapter, but the wreck scene is perhaps the most vividly presented. Very realistic and well photographed, the scenes will move the most hardened fan, which is their purpose.

Then, for good measure, there is an earthquake to finish this installment. Cleo and Hope, as usual favored in the race, obtain a promise from Dr. Owen to give them the books he bought. Mahlin and Olga try to steal the books before they can be delivered. They are unsuccessful, and therefore go to the cafe which is to be the meeting place of Dr. Owen, Cleo and Hope. Satsuma gets a position as waiter. There is a struggle to get possesion of the precious volume, a struggle which ends when the building is wrecked by the earthquake.

Thomas Chatterton and Juanita Hanson are the featured players in this "Flying A" serial, and George Sargent is the director.

"The Iron Claw"

Chapter the Seventeenth of the Pathe Serial. Reviewed by Thomas C. Kennedy

THE air of mystery which Davy has created about himself by telling Margery first that he is the Laughing Mask and later denying it, as well as a number of other things, brings Davy's relations with the girl and her father to the breaking point. In the seventeenth episode Mr. Golden advises his secretary that, owing to his many strange actions of late, he thinks it best for them to part company and Davy takes his leave after making Margery a present of a trick dog. The dog is important, for he or she is the means of informing the former secretary of impending danger to Margery.

Davy, of course, rushes to the rescue and into favor with the Goldens once more.

The rescue brings "The Vanishing Faker" to a thrilling close. Owing to the sudden appearances and disappearances of the Laughing Mask and the clever manner in which the villainous plot to destroy Margery and her guests at the lawn party is worked up, this chapter of "The Iron Claw" is fully as interesting as one who has followed the serial from the beginning has the right to expect. The uncertainty as to the identity of the mysterious wrong-righter becomes more deeply veiled in the cloud of mystery and Legar's menacing presence is, apparently, an inexhaustible font from which springs material for the making of suspense.

One of the detectives who now visit the Golden summer home with great frequency teaches Margery the heliograph code, using a small mirror for the purpose. Fortunately she becomes greatly interested in her new accomplishment and carries a mirror about with her, for when the Iron Claw and his associates attack Margery and the Laughing Mask, both of whom are hiding behind a large rock, she flashes a plea for help and the detectives came to the aid of the two just as her protector's ammunition gives out. Still later Juggs, employed as a waiter at the Golden lawn party, places dynamite at the base of a tree near the tent where luncheon is to be served. This plot comes to the knowledge of Davy when his dog returns with a note written to the Iron Claw, and Davy's stirring motorcycle ride follows.

"The Highest Bid"

Five-Reel American Mutual Masterpicture Released July 6. Reviewed by Genevieve Harris

WHILE the story is not unusual, the method of telling is most enjoyable, in this feature picture starring William Russell. The play fulfills its first mission, that of entertaining. Handicapped by an extremely conventional beginning, the story gets over this ground quickly, and when it takes us into the mountains, where its events are pictured in surroundings remarkable for their beauty, we are not likely to be too critical of the narrative.

The various roles are entrusted to a capable cast. Russell is well suited to play the young broker, turned miner, and Charlotte Burton, opposite, is entirely pleasing. William S. Hooser contributes a clever character sketch as the old miner, while Marie Van Tassell, as the girl's fortune seeking mother, and Harry Keenan, as the wealthy rival suitor, make the most of their conventional roles.

When Oliver Strong (William Russell) loses his fortune, Elise Burleigh (Charlotte Burton), at her mother's bidding breaks their engagement. Strong goes west, where he becomes interested in mining. He attaches importance to the story of an old miner, laughed at by his companions, who tells of a rich vein of gold concealed in the mountains. Together they seek it.

In the meantime, Elise, engaged to Strong's rival, Addison Grey, visits the latter's home in the mountains, near Strong's camp. Strong is at last successful in finding the vein of gold, which will make him rich. Soon after this, he meets Elise in the mountains. Without telling her of his good fortune, he again asks her to marry him, but she is unwilling to share his poverty; so they part.

Strong again proposes to Elise.

A forest fire is the means of reuniting the lovers. These fire scenes are most realistic and spectacular and lend enough exictement and suspense to the drama. Strong aids the foresters in their fight against the flames, but Grey, whose own dwelling is protected, refuses his help. Disgusted by this cowardice, Elise mounts her horse and rides towards Strong's cabin. Grey follows her. They become separated from their horses and are entrapped by flames. Strong arrives with his horse, but when he offers it to Grey and Elise, the girl refuses to leave Strong. Grey escapes on horseback, and before the other two are injured, the rain checks the flames, and saves their lives.

The photography is up to the usual American standard of excellence. The play as a whole is one which most audiences will like.

"The World's Great Snare"

Pauline Frederick in Famous Players-Paramount Drama. Reviewed by Thomas C. Kennedy

PAULINE FREDERICK in the leading role of "The World's Great Snare" has a highly emotional character to interpret and she gives way to more freedom of expression in acting the dramatic scenes than is usual with her.

Pauline Frederick plays with abandon in "The World's Great Snare."

This results in a performance that will be regarded as one of her most powerful screen contributions by many and the others will think it distinctly good but not as good as some of her work in former offerings. One scene in particular she does splendidly. This is where Myra, who is separated from the one she really loves, fights against a despair which prompts her to find solace in drink. Here Miss Frederick displays a little more repression than in any of her other scenes.

"The World's Great Snare" is an adaptation of E. Phillips Oppenheim's novel. It tells the story of a dance hall favorite whose deep grounded love for a young Englishman marks the turning point in a life of many love adventures. What dramatic moments the play presents are dependent more upon the manner of their enactment than their strength of material and construction.

In the opening scene we learn that Bryan, a young man living in one of the poorer sections of London, is the legitimate son of a nobleman. The papers establishing his claim to the rich estate are in the hands of a former butler of his father who has fled to America. Bryan travels to San Francisco.

The butler is living with the dance hall favorite but she determines to leave him when he strikes her for going through his private papers, which include the documents Bryan is searching for. The butler leaves some of these papers as security for a loan from a gambler who is in love with Myra.

Myra returns to the dance hall and there makes the acquaintance of Bryan. After a time Bryan leaves Myra to work a mine in partnership with a friend. She follows him to the camp and there learns the reason for his visit to America. She secures the papers for him after a struggle with herself for she knows it will be impossible for her to return to England with him. But at the last moment Bryan returns to Myra and the picture closes upon their happy reunion.

The production is all that could be desired, and the supporting cast is exceptionally strong. Irving Cummings is Bryan, Ferdinand Tidmarsh the butler, and Riley Hatch plays the gambler who is in love with Myra effectively. The cast also includes Frank Evans and Buckley Starkey.

"Gloria's Romance"

"The Mesh of Mystery," Chapter Eight of the Kleine Serial. Reviewed by Genevieve Harris

THE story goes more and more thrilling, and things are quite puzzling, at least to Gloria (Billie Burke). When she calls help, after she saw Freneau murdered at the monument, her father and the nurse convince her that she has been dreaming. They think that she is delirous and call Dr. Royce, who is not at his home. For Dr. Royce, who had left the house to prevent if possible, the meeting between Lois and Freneau, had arrived at the monument just after the murder. He had taken the package containing Lois' letters from the dead man's pocket and had gone back home.

When he finds the message from the Stafford home, he goes at once to Gloria, and he, too, tells her that she has been dreaming. He looks through the binoculars and to his astonishment finds that the body has been removed. But Royce and Lois know that Gloria was not dreaming.

Daddy plays invalid, against his will.

The next day Gloria receives a telegram and a letter supposedly from Freneau, for Mulry, not knowing of his partner's death, carries out instructions. This banishes the last of her doubts, although she is puzzled that she cannot reach Freneau at the hotels from which his letters come. Then comes the day on which Gloria reads in the morning paper of the discovery of Freneau's body. She vows to find and have the murder punished.

The installment is a clever blending of tragedy and comedy, and there are a number of light scenes. The plot is interestingly presented, for the spectator knows the real facts but is eager to learn how the characters will learn the truth. The actions of Dr. Royce are a little puzzling and we shall not be surprised if he becomes involved in suspicion.

"The Bondman"

Six Reel William Fox Drama Featuring William Farnum. Reviewed by Genevieve Harris

HALL CAINE'S fantastic story of the north forms the basis of this six-reel picture in which William Farnum plays a dual role. The atmosphere of northern countries, Iceland and the Isle of Man, is excellently suggested. The wildness of the scenery, the foreign and interesting customs and costumes of the people, alone would make the picture entertaining. The characters, too, are in keping with the settings, especially the two which Farnum plays. The story, generally well known, is interesting and unusual. In fact, the entire production may be classed as unusual and for this reason it will be pleasing to most audiences.

Farnum in the first part of the play appears as Stephen Orry, an athletic vagabond. The first scene shows a fair in an Iceland village, and here a professional wrestler sets out to have fun with the tramp. The fun becomes serious, and in the end the wrestler is killed. Because of his athletic prowess, Orry attracts the attention of the daughter of the governor of the province, Rachel, played by Doris Wooldridge. When her father learns of her interest, he drives her from home, and she marries Orry. But in vain she tries to make a man of the tramp, who finally runs away to sea.

Left alone, Rachel supports herself and her little son, Jason, while Orry, arriving at the Isle of Man, begins a new life, and marries Liza Killey, more worthless than he is. A son is born to them, Sunlocks. This child seems to awake whatever goodness Orry possesses, and his disgust at Liza's treatment of the boy arouses his repentance at his desertion of Rachel. The scene in which he takes Sunlocks away, intending to drown him rather than allow him to grow up under Liza's care, is most pathetic. He is unable to carry out his intention and instead takes the child to the governor of the Isle, who had once befriended him.

The two half-brothers grow up. Jason (played by Farnum), when Rachel dies, sets out to kill his father because of the suffering his mother has borne, while Sunlocks, hearing the story from his father, sets out to find Rachel and his half-brother to remedy if possible the harm done them. Sunlocks therefore goes to Iceland, leaving behind him a sweetheart, Greeba (Dorothy Bernard), while Jason comes to the Isle of Man. Here Jason saves from drowning the man he vowed to kill, and when Orry dies a natural death, he turns his desire for revenge toward Sunlocks.

But, as he has saved Orry, so later at every point he saves Sunlocks when he goes back to Iceland and finds Sunlocks a political prisoner. He does not know the identity of the young man at first, but in the end, after he has learned who his brother is, he foregoes the revenge and dies in Sunlock's stead.

The dramatic value of the important scenes has been taken advantage of very well throughout. Farnum is excellent, especially as Jason, while the supporting cast is a worthy one. L. O. Hart, Charles Graham, Charles Brooke, Julia Hurley, Carey Lee and Harry Spingler are among the players.

"The American Beauty"

Pallas-Paramount Offering. Reviewed by Thomas C. Kennedy

ARTISTS, an art collector and most important of all an artist's model are the characters "The American Beauty" concerns itself with. The model is the central character and she is the artist's inspiration for a great work. Myrtle Stedman in the role of the model is the featured player of this Pallas offering directed by Wm. D. Taylor. Miss Stedman's part is not a notable one for the reason that Ruth is the kind of a model screen patrons have seen so much of and she is harassed by the same type of villain most models of the pictures have had conflict with. But the featured player's performance is rendered in her best style.

She acts her scenes and invests the beautiful American girl with personality as effectively as she usually does. Elliott Dexter is the artist and Howard Davies the ignoble art collector, so Miss Stedman has good support. The other members of the cast which includes Adelaide Woods, Jack Livingston and Edward Ayers, handle their parts capably.

A well-done homely scene from "The American Beauty."

The picture opens with some beautiful views of a barren shore from which a fishing ship puts out. The fishermen discover an up-turned life boat from one of the passenger steamers. A baby, wrapped in a woman's coat is found secured in the boat and this child the fisherman carries back to his childless wife. The Cleaves are unable to locate the parents so the child is reared as their own. The baby's parents were rescued but their search for the little one is unavailing.

Ruth grows to young womanhood in ignorance of the fact that she is not the daughter of Mrs. Cleave. She attracts the attention of the American artist she cleans and scrubs for and he engages her to pose for a painting of an American girl he wishes to enter in contest with some artists of other countries, each insisting the women of their own land are the most beautiful. This painting wins the prize and also some trouble for Ruth, who is sought out by the art collector and almost outraged by him when the American saves her. Restored to her own wealthy parents through her likeness on the canvas, she is in the end in a position to marry Keith.

The fire on shipboard is a splendidly presented incident. In producing these scenes Mr. Taylor did more than well. The studio interiors are good, as might be expected. They are handsome and they have atmosphere. Some of the latter element was gained through the manner in which some of the models pose.

"Flirting with Fate"

Douglas Fairbanks Stars Again In Triangle-Fine Arts Comedy. Reviewed by Thomas C. Kennedy

PUT to the extremity of wearing false beards and dodging practically every other person he meets on the streets because of a change for the better in his once distressful affairs of the heart and bank account, Douglas Fairbanks as Augie, the love struck artist, puts a quantity of vim and zest into a picture telling a story similar to many screen stories told before. But the main situation of the play, that of the man who hires an assassin to put him out of the way only to change his mind and live in horror until the danger passes, is the only thing which resembles in any way previous screen comedies.

Robert M. Baker, who wrote the scenario, did a good thing when he used the idea if for no other reason than that Fairbanks was so well able to make it funny. "Flirting with Fate" is a thoroughly enjoyable picture. It is nearly all Douglas Fairbanks but when one considers that he is an actor possessing so much color and dash it is readily understood that this is nothing against "Flirting with Fate," far from that; it is something in its favor.

The hired assassin is one of the most deftly handled characters in the picture. He appears at just the right moment to make things interesting and amusing. It is doubtful if any other photoplay ever got so much real good effect out of a straight comedy character. Augy first meets the terrible man when he goes into a saloon to get a quarter for his change so he can turn on the gas and end all his trouble. He only meets Automatic Joe once again and that is at the end of the picture. But in the meantime Augy's imagination leads him a merry dance.

August Ainsworth is an artist, "one who can draw anything except a salary." He falls ever so deeply in love with a girl whose mother is watching for a rich husband for her pretty daughter. When things look utterly hopeless August engages the services of Automatic Joe. Only a few minutes later things go the other way. An aunt leaves him a million dollars, his friend sends the money he promised and Augy receives an invitation to call from Gladys, so no wonder he is on the sharp lookout for Joe. The latter "gets religion" in the meantime. Therefore Augy and Gladys marry and prepare to live happily ever after.

The Crucial Test

A Five-Reel World Film Brady-Made Release. Reviewed by Hugh Hoffman

SUPERBLY staged and finely balanced, this production is worthy of the highest admiration. It is a Russian story dealing with the never ending conflict between the revolutionists and the ruling classes. The true Russian atmosphere has been so perfectly caught, not only in the stage settings but in the characters themselves, that the picture is more than usually convincing.

Russian atmosphere is a very subtle matter, particularly in the selection of types, and when it is well done there is nothing that makes a better play than a good Russian story. The plot of this picture, while not particularly new, is handled in such a skillful way in all is various aspects that it makes the most interesting kind of an entertainment. Added to this there is the beautiful Kitty Gordon, whose acting is majestic and whose many gowns are at once the delight and despair of the feminine part of any audience.

If there is to be an era of better things for the Russian people, it is pictures like this one that will help to bring about the change. This story shows keenly and vividly the conditions under which Russian people live, and how almost any woman, even a woman of the aristocracy, is practically at the mercy of an unscrupulous nobleman should she chance to attract his attention. The utter hopelessness of anyone who is under suspicion in such a country as that is brought home with telling force, and this picture may be added to the list of body blows that will eventually dissipate the Russian oligarchy.

The story deals with a Russian countess who quite by accident comes under the notice of a certain Grand Duke, whose private pleasure is mostly obtained with women. His attentions to her arouse the resentment of another court charmer who has previously jilted the Duke. Seeing a worthy successor, however, she takes a renewed interest in the Duke, more for spite than anything else.

The Countess has a younger brother who at a revolutionary meeting draws a lot whereby he must kill the Duke. He attempts to kill the Duke at a large soiree where his sister, the Countess, is the honored guest. The attempt fails and the young man and his sister are both exiled to Siberia. They escape from the caravan and manage to get to Paris.

In Paris the Countess marries a young American artist. Soon after, the Duke learning of her escape, appears in Paris. He uses his influence to spoil the chances of the young husband in the art exhibitions. This breaks the young man's nerves and health. His wife appeals to the court charmer who has taken up the Duke again, and is with him in Paris. Her appeal is scorned by this woman, and the wife finally appeals to the Duke himself.

The Duke of course is willing to bargain for his influence. He tells her that he can make the young man famous in the art world, and will do so if she will pay the price with her body. As a sacrifice she agrees to do this. In a short time the young artist is famous through the Duke's influence with the exhibition committee, and through favorable hangings of the Salon. On a certain night the Countess calls at the Duke's apartment to keep her part of the bargain. Her brother has heard that the Duke is in Paris and he selects the same night to fulfill his duty to the revolutionists by killing the Duke. From behind a curtain in the Duke's apartment he hears his own sister trying to beg off from her bargain with the Duke. When it comes to a struggle, the young man quickly puts an end to the villainous nobleman.

Miss Gordon is every inch a Countess in playing her part. She has a most impressive presence, one that would put her at ease even among the highest of nobility. The acting throughout is entirely skillful. The photography is perfection and detail is remarkably true to nature. Altogether it is a well constructed and satisfactory feature.

Figman and Robertson with Metro

Rolma Film Corporation to Make Weekly Comedy for Metro with Max Figman and Lolita Robertson

Max Figman, one of the foremost comedians of the stage or screen, and his beautiful wife, Lolita Robertson, who has proved an excellent foil for him in so many notable screen productions, have been engaged by the Rolma Film Corporation, Inc., to make a weekly one-reel comedy feature which will be released on the Metro program. Mr. Figman and Miss Robertson have already begun work on the first comedy of this series, called "Love Me, Love My Dog." Mr. Figman enjoyed a successful career upon the speaking stage before he went into motion picture. He was playing in the all-star cast of "Fine Feathers" when Jesse L. Lasky induced him to sign a contract for the starring role in "The Man on the Box," which marked his debut in the silent drama. He has appeared in many big features since that time and added to his fame on the screen by his masterly performance in Pathe's series of George Randolph Chester's stories of "Get Rich Quick Wallingford." While playing with Mrs. Fiske, Mr. Figman ran the gaunts of men's character, from the leading role in "Divorcons" to "Thorvald" in "A Doll's House," and "Assessor Brack" in "Hedda Gabler."

Miss Robertson played with Henry Miller in "The Great Divide," with Henry Woodruff in "Brown of Harvard," and had the leading feminine role in Margaret Mayo's "Commencement Days," produced by Max Figman and John Cort. She also played with Mr. Figman in "The Substitute," and then became Mrs. Figman. She has made a decided success since she went into motion pictures, and has a big following all over the country.

Marooned all night on one of the smaller islands in the Thousand Islands, near the lonesome Canadian mainland, while a terrific storm raged, was the harrowing experience of nine members of the Metro-Yorke company of players, headed by Harold Lockwood and May Allison, according to word just received from them at the Metro offices.

Mme. Petrova, the gifted emotional star of the Popular Plays and Players appearing in Metro wonderplays, will be seen in several distinct characters in a forthcoming production as yet unnamed. In a brief allegory Mme. Petrova is seen as Eve in the Garden of Eden. Later she appears in a gypsy camp, where several thrilling scenes are enacted. Afterwards she is seen in the role of a Quakeress. The scenes for this part of the production were photographed in a small settlement in Pennsylvania. The production is a distinct novelty and a departure from the type of stories usually shown upon the screen and presenting Mme. Petrova.

The Metro Pictures Corporation has opened an exchange in Cincinnati, Ohio, where R. A. Morrison will be in charge. The new offices are located at No. 532 Walnut street, in the center of the film activity of the Queen City. All the business handled in that district heretofore by J. S. Skirboll, general manager of the Pittsburgh offices, has been turned over to the Cincinnati exchange.

Whartons Films Three

Dr. Harry J. Haiselden, chief of the staff of the German-American Hospital, Chicago, who came into the limelight about a year ago by allowing an incurable baby to die, will soon be seen on the screen, via Wharton making.

"The Black Stork" is a sensational feature now being filmed at the Wharton studios in Ithaca. The film advocates the upbuilding of a better race by the scientific government and regulation of marriage and endorses the theory that nature should be allowed to reclaim defectives in cases where an operation would only condemn the subject to a living death.

This is the first feature filmed by the Whartons in addition to "The Mysteries of Myra," which they are releasing through the International Film Service, Inc.

Unity Issues Notable Productions

"Diana" the daring classical photo-drama produced by the Unity Sales Corporation has proved such a success at the Strand Theater, New York, that Andrew J. Cobe, vice president and general manager of the concern has decided to produce a cycle of the classic myths including such famed legends as "Thesus," "The Golden Fleece," etc. At present the plans are to produce these works with beautifully colored effects and large companies of well known stars, including the shining lights of the Metropolitan Opera House ballet, Paul Swan and Baroness Von Dewitz, who have created a sensation in "Diana" will probably be featured as the stars of each photo drama of the classic cycle. In connection with the Unity's production of Nat C. Goodwin's best known photo-drama, "The Marriage Bond," the firm is issuing a series of snappy stories by the celebrated comedian which deals with his marital adventure. These will be issued in the form of a "herald" to each theater playing "The Marriage Bond."

Tom Terriss, author and star of the Unity Sales Corporation's latest big feature, "My Country First," a patriotic drama on preparedness, romance and sensation, has secured an option on the services of Walker Whiteside, the celebrated dramatic artist, and an option on the plays in which Mr. Whiteside has appeared. These photo-dramas include "The Beloved Traitor." Among the other productions to be released soon by the Unity Sales Corporation are "The Lottery Man," "The Bishop's Secret," laid in China and America, and the "Tweedledum" series of comedies, featuring Perez, a European comedian.

Efficiency in Film Advertising

How the Advertising Agency Works in Connection with Picture Publicity Burnet-Kuhn of Chicago Pioneers in Field

PERHAPS in no single phase of the motion picture industry has greater advancement been made within the past few months than in the advertising of the big productions.

Once the film manufacturer thought that if he spent a thousand dollars on a production and had five state rights buyers he could rely upon to purchase his product when it was completed, his success was assured. But now the time has arrived when tens of thousands of dollars are spent on a production and the manufacturer not only offers it to exhibitors through a half hundred or more exchanges, but in advance of its release inaugurates an advertising campaign that alone runs into many thousands of dollars and includes the use of space in periodicals of national circulation, daily newspapers in every big city in the country, and colored inserts and full page display ads in all of the trade journals.

With this advance in advertising, the producer has found himself hopelessly handicapped when he tries to look after the exploitation of his picture as well as the manufacture of it, for an intensive campaign of advertising involves immediately so many details, that the busy producer is glad to unload the responsibility of creating a demand for the picture on the part of exhibitors, on an advertising agency.

The advertising agency, having specialized to a high degree on its profession, knows what will and what will not attract the attention of the public, and so is prepared to go scientifically about the exploitation of a production, the designing of a campaign of publicity that is sure to produce certain results. In fact, the agencies have found the motion picture field so fruitful, and the demand for their services so tremendous that certain of them have gone even further with their specialization and undertaking the writing of motion picture advertising almost exclusively.

Such a firm is the Burnet-Kuhn Advertising Company, of Chicago, headed by J. Sidney Burnet, a man long respected and admired in the advertising field on account of his sales ability and sterling character; and Paul R. Kuhn, who has perhaps written more motion picture advertising than any other single man in America. Mr. Burnet has devoted his time and talents to the development of advertising accounts and the creation of selling plans, while Mr. Kuhn is known to practically every big man in the film industry through his writing of such advertising campaigns as those which exploited "The Million Dollar Mystery," "The Diamond from the Sky," the Chicago Tribune's German War Films, "The Girl and the Game," "The Mutual Masterpieces," and more recently, the "Gloria's Romance" campaign. He is a man who has demonstrated times without number that he can write "pulling copy," advertisements that actually make people want to see the thing advertised—the sort of matter that, when published, actually brings dimes and quarters into the box office of the theaters showing the attraction advertised.

After a personal investigation and analysis of the motion picture industry, Mr. Kuhn came to the conclusion that the film production that was extensively advertised and exploited in a big national campaign would quickly come to be regarded as something out of the ordinary, above the common level, and so able to command showings at better theaters, longer runs and bigger profits, even though the film itself might cost more to make. And time has proved that he was right, for every exhibitor knows that the widely advertised production earns him more money, when he shows it, than does the film he books in the regular routine of business which is totally unknown to the people which compose his audience, until they see it on the screen.

It is self evident, however, that a busy film manufacturer, with all his time occupied in the superintendence of big productions he has under way, hasn't the time necessary to carry on a big national campaign of advertising. Such campaigns naturally require an organization of advertising specialists, thoroughly familiar with the operation of newspapers, trade journals, magazines and other media. The film magnate doesn't attempt to act out his own productions, but engages players of note to do that part of the work for him. The big manufacturer doesn't attempt to superintend the details of production himself, but employs a professional director of note who has had experience in staging big spectacles, who has specialized in artistic lighting and other technical details. Quite naturally, therefore, when it comes time to advertise the offering it has taken months to prepare, the film manufacturer doesn't himself sit down and write the ad copy, but employs an advertising agency, which has specialized on the preparation of just such national campaigns as the producer knows he wants to put to work for his picture.

"And when this advertising agency is employed," explained Mr. Kuhn, "it promptly goes to work to prepare copy to create a desire on the part of the public for that particular production. The exhibitor is glad to book this picture, for he knows the public has already been informed of its merits and is anxious to see it. He, in his turn, has then but to advertise that he is going to show it on certain days, and the public immediately flocks to his theater, and so better business results for not only the manufacturer and exchange man, but also for the exhibitor running the advertised film.

"Of course," continued Mr. Kuhn, "the exhibitor has already been solicited through advertising, for an advertising agency is quick to recognize the value of the trade journals as an advertising media. The preparation of a campaign in the trade papers requires not only great skill in being able to analyze the exhibitors' needs, but also a thorough organization, equipped with proper facilities for the preparation of artistic designs and trade-winning copy. The trade paper field is one which the motion picture manufacturer is sometimes inclined to look at too lightly. It supplies a vital need in bringing quickly to the attention of exhibitors throughout the country any proposition to be exploited. The film man wants quick results, an instant response to his advertisement. The right sort of copy in a trade journal of wide circulation among exhibitors will bring the responses the manufacturer is seeking in a shorter time than any other method. The responses to the ad if not orders in themselves, are at least leads that the manufacturer's salesman can follow up and in the majority of cases make orders. And it has all been done quickly for the use of colored inserts, big display ads and a generous co-operation in the way of publicity matter in the text pages, will bring the film production to the attention of every exhibitor of importance in the country almost over night."

That the advertising agency's service is really a tremendous one, quickly becomes apparent when it is known that the Burnet-Kuhn Advertising Company, for instance, in so gigantic a campaign as the one just prepared for "Gloria's Romance," the George Kleine motion picture novel, featuring Billie Burke, not only designed and placed all newspaper advertising, which included space in papers in hundreds of cities all over the United States, but also designed and placed trade journal advertising that was notable for its artistic excellence and selling force; supplied exhibitors with quantities of publicity matter for use in their programs, house organs, and local newspapers; matrices and electrotypes of the stars and scenes from the production; and in addition to all of this prepared and distributed circulars, banners, heralds, slides, lobby photographic displays and window cards. Big outdoor billboard space was utilized in many cities and advertising matter was placed judiciously in papers and magazines of national circulation.

MOTOGRAPHY can heartily endorse the statement credited not long ago to a certain well known film magnate who expressed the belief that the advertising which a film receives constitutes fully thirty-three and one-third per cent of its success. And it is true that the advertising agency is a big and steadily growing factor in the motion picture field—one upon which will depend more and more the success of the productions of the future.

Ince Addresses Photodramatists

Ralph Ince, head of the Vitagraph Bayshore studio, was the guest of honor at the last meeting of The Photodramatists, held June 20.

The president, Howard Irving Young, having departed with his regiment to Mexico, the chair was occupied by Arthur Leeds.

After a brief but highly instructive paper on "Adaptations," by Edward Montague of Vitagraph, the guest of honor, Ralph Ince, was introduced. Mr. Ince, whose progressive ideas have placed him among the few really big directors, spoke warmly for the story being recognized as the basis of the successful photoplay.

The famous comedienne, Flora Finch, was another honored and warmly welcomed guest of the club. Miss Finch made a spirited plea for better comedy. By urgent request Miss Finch was persuaded to give her inimitable rendition of Lewis Carroll's immortal "Jabberwocky," thus gving the needed "comedy-relief" to the proceedings.

Lou-Tellegen Appears for Lasky

Announcement has been made by the Jesse L. Lasky Feature Play Company that Lou-Tellegen, who recently went to the Lasky studios at Hollywood, with his wife, Geraldine Farrar, will again appear as a star in a photoplay production, "The Victory of Conscience."

This production will be released on the Paramount Program in August and marks the third appearance of Lou-Tellegen before the camera, his other two photoplays, both made by the Lasky company, are "The Explorer" and "The Unknown."

There is something singularly interesting in the fact that both Miss Farrar and Mr. Lou-Tellegen are back again this summer at the Lasky studios, as it was there a year ago while appearing before the motion picture camera for the first time that they met. This friendship resulted in their marriage last winter in New York.

Lou-Tellegen, formerly Sarah Bernhardt's leading man and now Geraldine Farrar's, who is to appear with Lasky again.

Lou-Tellegen has been for several years one of the most interesting actors on the American stage. His first appearance in this country was as leading man in support of Madame Sarah Bernhardt.

Equitable on Open Booking Plan

Since the discontinuance of active production, the Equitable Motion Pictures Corporation, releasing through the branches and exchanges of the World Film, has placed all the features of that concern on an opening booking plan which, according to General Sales Manager Felix F. Feist of World-Equitable, has met with a response not even anticipated by the most optimistic of the sales force.

The entire output of the formerly prolific Equitable, is now, and has been for the past two months, available to exhibitors on the open booking plan. The productions included in this policy includes Clara Kimball Young and Wilton Lackaye in "Trilby," Helen Ware in "The Price," Katherine Osterman in "Divorced," Thomas A. Wise in "Blue Grass," Muriel Ostriche in "A Daughter of the Sea" and "A Circus Romance," William Courtenay in "Sealed Lips," Frank Sheridan and Arthur Ashley in "The Struggle," Bruce McRae and Gerda Holmes in "The Chain Invisible," and Katharine Kaelred in "Idols." In addition to these are twenty others which were made from August, 1915, until May of this year and all of which are working throughout the country, which, from the accruing number of bookings, appeal highly to the exhibitor.

Ivan Completes All-Star Feature

"The Faded Flower" is the first release of the Ivan Film Productions, Inc., on their new policy of making "better than program" features with an all-star cast. The cast includes Marguerite Snow, heroine of "The Million Dollar Mystery"; Alma Hanlon, starred by Pathe and Fox; Rose Coglan, for fifty years on the stage; Arthur Donaldson, starred by the Fox Company, and the original "Prince of Pilsen"; and Edward Mackey, a noted legitimate star.

"The Faded Flower" is from the pen of Ivan Abramson, and will be released through the Ivan exchanges as the regular monthly release for July 10.

Musty Suffers Again

George Kleine released June 21 a new series of "The Mishaps of Musty Suffer" comedies with Harry Watson, Jr., in the title role. The new series is ten in number and comprises some weird adventures on the part of "Musty." The general line of production responsible for the extraordinary success of the first ten has been faithfully followed with such logical improvement as would result from a greater familiarity with the work and the laughter-making possibilities of Harry Watson.

Thanhouser Promoter

W. Ray Johnston, formerly secretary to the late Charles J. Hite and for the last six months financial manager at the Jacksonville studio of the Thanhouser Film Corporation, has received a well-earned promotion by Mr. Thanhouser, having on his return to New Rochelle June 1 been elected to the office of active asst. secretary and treasurer.

ATLANTIC COAST NOTES

J. W. Binder, former executive secretary of the Motion Picture Board of Trade, has packed his steamer trunk and sailed for Europe.

Marguerite Clark plays the role of an Irish girl in her next picture, "Little Lady Eileen."

Ann Pennington, who will make her debut on the screen in a musical comedy photoplay for Famous Players, gives an imitation of Mary Pickford in the Ziegfeld "Follies," on the speaking stage.

Pauline Frederick prefers sympathetic roles and for that reason will play the less important part of the self-sacrificing wife in the Famous Players adaptation of Clyde Fitch's play, "The Woman in the Case," instead of the title role, a villainess.

George Magie has opened an office in New York.

John F. Skerrett, general manager of the Nicholas Power Company, has gone into the mountains for a vacation.

Views of the Turkish armies in action, their leaders and German officers who helped train them, will soon be shown in the Hearst International News Pictorial.

Albert Capellani, who recently completed "La Vie de Boheme," is now supervising the production of "The Dark Silence," in which Clara Kimball Young makes her next appearance on the screen for the World.

Carlyle Blackwell and Muriel Ostriche have completed their picture, "Molly o' Pigtail Alley," and are now working in their own individual starring vehicle.

Marguerite Clark will return to the stage next season to appear in a new production under the management of Charles Dillingham. Miss Clark's last stage appearance was in Winthrop Ames's production of "Prunella" at the Little theater three seasons ago. Since that engagement she has been appearing in motion pictures with the Famous Players Film Company.

Coolidge W. Streeter, formerly of the New York Herald, is now on the editorial staff of the Paramount Pictures Corporation in the Pictograph department.

The director and members of the "Gloria's Romance" company spent a whole morning at the Grand Central station in New York City to secure the scene shown in chapter seven of the Rupert Hughes novel.

John Cunningham Flinn, press agent for the Jesse Lasky Company, will spend his vacation in California as the guest of his employers.

Edna Hunter has signed with the Vitagraph Company.

David Powell, who plays "Frenau" in "Gloria's Romance," learned to dance especially for the ball room scenes in the serial.

William Alexander, who recently returned from a two years' tour of South America in the interest of the William Fox Film Company, has sailed for London to open offices on the continent for that concern.

Alice Joyce recently brought her little daughter, Alice, II, to the Vitagraph studios, much to the delight of the other players.

Mitchell Lewis, who plays an Indian role in Viola Dana's first Metro production, "The Flower of No Man's Land," was in the cast of "The Million Dollar Mystery," "Zudora," the film production of "The Girl I Left Behind Me." "Stop Thief," and "The Come Back." He has had a long career on the speaking stage, also.

Kindergarten tots in the Montessori schools of New York City and Lawrence, Long Island, are starred in "Better Babies" features of the Paramount Pictographs. One of the latest releases shows how to teach the child to dress and undress.

The Pictograph feature, "Training a Lion," shows how a lion, fresh from the jungle, is converted into a docile creature.

The Douglas Fairbanks picture which is being completed in the East, under the direction of Alan Dwan, is being held up owing to the difficulty of getting the necessary cowboys for the remaining scenes in the East.

Valeska Suratt completed her work in the new William Fox film in two weeks. Roland West directed.

Glenn White plays the leading male role in the new Dorothy Bernard picture. He will also be seen with Virginia Pearson in the picture, "A Tortured Heart."

Correct and incorrect methods of falling are to be shown on the screen in Paramount Pictographs. All ages and conditions of "slippers" are shown from the portly man who takes an unexpected toboggan on a banana peel to the child who takes a harmless tumble in the nursery and the bruise-proof drunkard. This feature is entitled "How to Fall."

When Isabel Rea, with the Fox players, wanted an old-fashioned make-up, she brought out a group of photographs of her grandmother and copied her costume.

Robert Clugston is at present wearing a patch behind his left ear, the result of a scene in the new Valeska Suratt picture in which the heroine was scheduled to throw a whiskey decanter at Clugston. She did.

In the cafe scene of "The Man from Bitter Roots," the William Farnum picture which William Fox will release within a week, sixty extra persons were employed. The scene was taken at the lunch hour, so that the appetites displayed by the "extras" would be more realistic.

CHICAGO GOSSIP

Henry B. Walthall's two brothers, Wallace and John, of Alabama, will be his guests in Chicago throughout the filming of "The Sting of Victory," his newest Essanay feature.

Vernon Howe Bailey's Sketches of Washington, D. C., and of Petrograd, are soon to be released by Essanay.

Many of the scenes in "The Return of Eve," the five-act play starring Edna Mayo, were taken in the Dells of the Wisconsin river. This play deals with an experiment of scientists who place two infants in a wilderness and permit them to grow up naturally. When they are nineteen years old, the boy and girl are taken to civilization. But they are disgusted with the deceit of society and return to the simple life.

Mutual Film Corporation: The directors' meeting was still in session at the time of writing this paragraph, so action regarding the preferred and common dividends cannot be reported. It was current gossip, both in New York and Chicago during the past week, that either the World Film Corporation or the Triangle Film Corporation, or perhaps both, would sometime in the future perfect plans under which some of their product would be released through the Mutual.

States Film Corporation: Common stock has been traded in with a fair amount of activity during the last three or four weeks, at between 45 and 50. It has now eased off somewhat and the best bid on the market is at 35.

Lone Star Corporation: Common stock remained fairly steady during the last week and there were very few trades made.

General Film Corporation: It has been absolutely impossible to secure a bid on the preferred stock since the application for receivership was made.

Thanhouser Film Corporation: Since the announcement of the withdrawal of Thanhouser from the Mutual organization, there have been no quotations on the stock in Chicago.

ports Henry B. Walthall in his next play, "The Sting of Victory."

Marguerite Clayton recently made a hat for a charity bazaar held by a women's society in an Iowa city.

PACIFIC COAST NOTES

J. Warren Kerrigan and his company, including Lois Wilson, his leading lady, Maude George and Harry Carter, directed by Jack Conway, have completed "The Beckoning Trail," a five-reel feature, and it is expected they next will commence work on another feature, entitled "A Social Bucaneer." The cast will include Miss Wilson, Miss George and Carter, and a number of others from the Universal stock company.

Lule Warrenton will commence at once a series of fairy film stories for children, all of the principal roles to be played by the youngsters of Universal City. The stories are being written by Allen Watt, Mrs. Warrenton's assistant, and each one of the series will be taken from the rhymes of the different nations.

Pat Rooney, under the direction of Roy Clements, is working in his new comedy, "Some Medicine Man," written by Eugene B. Lewis, scenario editor at Universal City, and prepared by Fred Myton for screen production. In this comedy, Rooney arrives at a western town and gets into mix-ups with the Indians. Opposite Rooney appears Peggy Coudray, as an Indian princess, Ed Sedgwick, the heavyweight comedian, Jean Hersholt and Clyde Benson.

The William Russell company of American players are in Los Angeles working on the fifth of a series of five-reelers featuring Mr. Russell. Arthur E. Gooden is the author of the play, named "The Torch Bearer."

Gilbert E. Murdock, noted explorer and writer, is putting into screen dramas, written on order, some of the human-interest data gathered by him on his various around-the-world trips.

Vivian Reed, Selig star actress, is enjoying a visit from her mother, who arrived in Los Angeles a few days ago from El Paso, Texas.

William Robert Daly, Selig drector, writes stories and poems for magazines.

Harry Lonsdale, on the speaking stage, scored a triumph as "Beau Brummel."

Rupert Julian hereafter will devote his talent to directing and will not appear before the camera. He has finished "L'Abbe Constantin" for the Universal company, and his next production will be "The Clique of Gold," in whch Elsie Jane Wilson will be featured, supported by Francelia Billington and Douglas Gerrard.

Lillian Hayward will play a vampire role in "The Germ of Mystery," being produced by William Robert Daly.

Corinne Grffith, of the Western Vitagraph company, has retired from pictures temporarily and is devoting herself to her mother, who is in poor health.

Director Henry McRae has commenced the picturization of "Onda of the Orient," which will be made in three reels. Ths is the story McRae had originally planned to make on a tour to the Orient, but he has decided now to make the picture at Universal City. The story will have a strictly Oriental atmosphere, and special costumes and scenery have been made for the production. The leading role will be played by Marie Walcamp with L. C. Shumway opposite.

STUNTS IN "SECRET OF SUB."

Juanita Hansen, who has the role of Cleo Burke in "The Secret of the Submarine," performs a stunt in the tenth chapter of the big serial which required both nerve and strength. While Thomas Chatterton was struggling in quicksands at the bottom of a steep cliff, Miss Hansen lowered herself by a grapevine in order to rescue him.

Juanita Hansen, daring American beauty.

There was no chance to use a "double" either, as the camera was set close to the little lady and every foot of the dangerous descent was recorded on the film.

Although Miss Hansen was slightly bruised by the sharp rocks over which she slipped, the most disagreeable part of the adventure was due to poison oak growing on the brink of the cliff. This made itself evident the next day, much to Miss Hansen's discomfiture.

However, this grapevine descent was not the only dangerous stunt "enjoyed" by Miss Hansen in the making of this chapter, for she and Mr. Chatterton had to wallow around in quick sand for several days, something that is not exactly a joke, even though assistance is near at hand.

Carter De Haven and his director, Wallace Beery, have commenced work at Universal City on the sixth episode of "Timothy Dobbs," a series of comedies being written for the comedian by Bess Meredyth. In each chapter, De Haven is continually attempting to break into the movies and a number of very laughable situations ensue.

Agnes Vernon has returned to the Universal studios after two weeks of well-earned vacation, most of which was spent in the mountains of Southern California.

A duplication of one of Monte Carlo's noted gambling parlors is among the scenes in Crane Wilbur's latest drama, "A Woman's Reputation" now being filmed at the David Horsley studios. The "set" was made after the plan of technical director Frank Crompton, assisted by scenic artist Wiggins, both of whom have visited Monte Carlo.

Director Clifford Elfelt with his company has gone to the mountains of Southern California in the vicinity of Mount Baldy, where he plans to film four or five one-reel mountain stories. In each of these Vola Smith will be featured.

Dorothy Phillips, who has been in the New York studios of the Universal Company, is now leading lady under Joseph De Grasse's direction at Universal City. Her first production in the west is "By Fate's Decree, written by Stuart Paton. Lon Chaney plays opposite.

William Clifford, Frederick Montague and Dave Allen will be on the program of entertainment at a big affair to be staged by the Order of Masons of South Pasadena on the evening of June 30th. Mr. Clifford will give Shakespearean readings; Montague, recitations, and Allen will amuse at the piano as he did over the big circuit when he was a vaudeville partner of the popular "Violinsky."

Mae Gaston has the role of a frivolous young wife of an elderly millionaire, whom she does not love, in the support of Crane Wilbur in the Centaur feature, "A Woman's Reputation."

Rollin Sturgeon's company is just back from a boat trip to San Diego, on which they finished up almost all the remaining scenes of his feature production. Some two hundred people made the trip.

Laura Marie Trainor, of Missoula, Montana, left that city on the second of June on horseback bound for the Lasky studios, Hollywood. Miss Trainor has been selected by the Chamber of Commerce of Missoula to describe the beauties and virtues of that city en route. Throughout the trip she will appear at Paramount theaters.

Having qualified as a nurse-maid, Marie Doro, the Lasky star, is now studying the art of making artificial flowers for her forthcoming production, "The Kid," which is now being rehearsed under the direction of William C. De Mille.

Work on the construction of still another building at Thomas H. Ince's Culver City plant was begun this week. This is to be the carpenter shop, which at present is located in temporary quarters on the open air stage, and will measure 60 by 150 feet.

PACIFIC COAST NEWS

A typical Irish fair forms the setting for some of the scenes in the new Mae Marsh-Robert Harron play, "The Marriage of Molly-O," which Paul Powell is directing from a story by Granville Warwick. The supporting cast of players includes Edwin Harley, Kate Bruce, James O'Shea and Walter Long.

Through the kindness of Lillian Gish, the inhabitants of the Los Angeles County Hospital were recently given a special showing of "The Birth of a Nation," in which Miss Gish played "Elsie Stoneman." Since they could not attend a theater, a projection machine was installed in the hospital.

Howard Hickman, who plays the leading role of "Count Ferdinand" in "Civilization," began his stage career at the old Grand Opera House in San Francisco in Sarah Bernhardt's company, appearing with her in "L'Aiglon" and "Cyrano de Bergerac." Later he played Shakespearean roles with Joseph Haworth, and afterwards appeared in musical comedy with Eva Tanguay.

Before departing for New York, Douglas Fairbanks distributed one hundred dollars in prize money among the children of the Fine Arts school, in accordance with a promise made the kiddies when he arrived at the coast studios.

In "That Gal of Burkes," Anna Little played the role of a tomboy. She is now acting a dramatic role in "Neldale's Men Folks," written and directed by Frank Borzage.

Production of "Somewhere in France," Richard Harding Davis' last story, has been begun at Culver City. Charles Giblyn is directing. Louise Glaum is the star, supported by Howard Hickman, Robert McKim, George Fisher and Jerome Storm.

C. Gardner Sullivan has begun the construction of the next vehicle in which Bessie Barriscale will appear. She has the role of a young Irish lass of hoydenish personality.

Ollie Kirkby is still suffering from the effects of an accident which befell her in the last episode of the Kalem "Social Pirates" series, when she sprained her knee, tearing the ligaments badly. She is still walking with crutches.

George L. Sargent, the American director, recently had a long-distance telephone talk with his mother in New York. The twenty-one dollars which it cost him were, he says, well spent.

John Sheehan, in his present comedy, "That Sharp Note," has the role of a young politician who takes one of many notes across the seas and meets with many amusing adventures. This is probably the last photoplay in which Sheehan will appear with the American Company.

Richard Stanton is completing his first production for the western Fox studios. George Walsh is the star of the play.

The Signal Company, led by Helen Holmes and J. P. McGowan, have returned from the Hawaiian islands, where they took scenes for "The Diamond Runners." After finishing a few night scenes for this feature, they began work on their next five-reeler, "Judith of the Cumberlands."

Director Jacques Jaccard has resumed the production of one-reel film plays of the "Little Stories of Real Life" series, four of which he has already made for the Universal Company. The present one, "Loss or Gain," features G. Raymond Nye and Roberta Wilson, supported by Jessie Arnold.

The members of the Jay Hunt company have returned to Universal City after spending three weeks in the forests of Humboldt County in Northern California, where three lumber camp stories were filmed.

Enid Markey wears some striking new gowns in "The Phantom," the Triangle-Kay-Bee play written by J. G. Hawks.

Charming pose of Nell Shipman, Vitagraph light.

She has the role of a millionaire's daughter. One of her most attractive outfits is a riding habit which she wears during the scenes at a polo match.

John Oaker, identified with the David Horsley studios for the past year as juvenile leading man in support of Crane Wilbur, Margaret Gibson and William Clifford, has abandoned the silent drama to return to the legitimate stage.

Director Lynn Reynolds has taken his company of forty players from Universal City to Bear Valley, where he will film approximately three-fourths of the feature, "The Girl of Lost Lake," written by himself, and featuring Myrtle Gonzalez, with Val Paul and Fred Church in the supporting cast.

Olga Printzlau, scenario writer at Universal City, recently received an amethyst bracelet from a woman in Kentucky who had greatly appreciated the one-reel play, "Motherhood," which Miss Printzlau wrote two years ago.

Louise Owen is playing the leading role in a three-reel picture with a Far East setting which William Wolbert is directing for the Vitagraph Company. Corinne Griffith, Jack Mower and Webster Campbell also have important roles.

Valentine Grant is visiting in Seattle, her "home town."

Director T. N. Heffron of the Selig Company has begun work on "The Old Man Who Tried to Grow Young," a play said to be different. Al W. Wilson and Vivian Reed are in the cast.

Lillian Hayward has a vampire role in "The Germ of Mystery," which William Robert Daly is directing for the Selig Company .

William S. Hart is to play the role of a soldier of fortune in a military drama written by Monte M. Katterjohn. Scenes are being taken near the Mexican boundary line.

William H. Thompson is starred in "The Eye of the Night," a new Ince-Triangle drama by C. Gardner Sullivan.

Lule Warrenton, the well known Universal character woman, has been given a company of her own which she will direct in one reel and split reel films de- Harold Lockwood. and .May .Allison signed entirely for children. Allen Watt is her assistant. Her company includes Ernestine Jones, Clara Horton, Nora Depsey and Benjamin Suslow. "Calling Linda" will be the first production.

Jack Livingston, the Morosco photoplayer, after finishing a picture with Myrtle Stedman and another with Vivian Martin, is taking a short vacation.

The result of a straw vote among the 432 eligible employes of the Ince-Triangle forces showed Theodore Roosevelt the presidential choice of 387 voters, Charles E. Hughes of 39 and Henry Ford of 6.

William Desmond, who appeared as the "meenister" in support of Billie Burke in "Peggy," plays a young missionary worker in the desert-island story by Monte M. Katterjohn and Lanier Bartlett, in which he is co-star with Dorothy Dalton under Walter Edwards' direction. This is a Triangle-Kay-Bee production.

Wallace MacDonald will play opposite Mary Miles Minter in his first mutual picture, "Youth's Endearing Charm."

Allen Curtis, during the three years which he has been with the Universal Company, has directed one hundred and seventy-five one-reel comedies, or about one a week.

Mme. Rappold, the grand opera singer, spent an afternoon visiting Universal City recently.

Myrtle Gonzalez was among the prize winners at the fashion show given in connection with the automobile races at Ascot Park, Los Angeles, for the benefit of the Actors' Fund of America.

C. W. Midgley, owner of the Franklin Theater, Oakland, and James Beatty, owner of the Liberty Theater, San Jose, were recent visitors at Universal City.

Beverly Griffith and Gilbert Warrenton, correspondent and cameraman respectively of the Universal Animated Weekly, have returned to Universal City after eleven weeks spent at the scenes of the border troubles with Mexicans and with both American and Mexican armies and expeditions.

Claire McDowell, well known as a film actress especially for her work as a member of the Biograph Company, has joined the Universal Film Manufacturing Company at the Pacific Coast studios, and for the present will appear in general stock.

Complete Record of Current Films

Believing the classification of film pictures by the nature of their subjects to be of greater importance to the exhibitor than classification by makes, MOTOGRAPHY has adopted this style in listing current films. Exhibitors are urged to make use of this convenient tabulation in making up their programs. Films will be listed as long in advance of their release dates as possible. Film manufacturers are requested to send us their bulletins as early as possible. Reasonable care is used, and the publishers cannot be responsible for errors.

Brief Stories of the Week's Film Releases

General Program

The Blue or the Grey—Biograph Reissue—July 3—Featuring Robert Harron, Irene Howley and W. Chrystie Miller. It was Christmas Eve in the South, but the spirit of peace and love did not pervade the Northern girl's heart. The gallantry of the young Southern swains, however, was more than manifest, when a drunken band of Unionists entered the house—among them her sweetheart. From him was protection needed most. His rival, a Confederate soldier, showed her character is far above political principle, and true love came into its own.

Otto the Traffic Cop—Lubin—July 3.—Featuring Davy Don as the traffic cop, who saves a wealthy old maid from accident by a passing auto, only to discover that her wealth was in her mind, and she had lost that. Patsy De Forest, George Egan and Eleanor Blanchard complete the cast.

The Return—(Three Reels)—Selig—July 3—. Featuring Kathlyn Williams and Guy Oliver. A review appears elsewhere in this issue.

His Trust and His Trust Fulfilled—(Two Reels)—Biograph—July 4.—Featuring an all-star cast. The master leaving home at the opening of the war tells his body-servant to take good care of his wife and child. The master is killed and the old negro after their home is burned offers them shelter in his cabin. The mother dies and George takes the child to the lawyer, with whom he arranges a home for her. The child, now grown to girlhood, desires to go to the seminary to procure an advanced education and George gives the last of his savings for this purpose. At the end of the first term there is nothing left of George's savings and the lawyer tells the girl she cannot return to school. One day entering the lawyer's office he finds a cousin from Europe inquiring as to the condition and whereabouts of Miss Pranier, and seeing a fat wallet in the Englishman's pocket he takes it, but his better nature asserts itself and he tries to put it back, but is caught and the lawyer, knowing the negro's worth, realizes what prompted his action and sends him off. Later old George at a distance views the wedding of the cousin and the girl and going to his cabin he takes down his master's saber and fondles it, happy in the realization that he has fulfilled his trust.

The Fable of the Fearsome Feud Between the First Families—Essanay—July 4.—One of the many Diversions of the Finger-Bowl Set was Amateur Theatricals. Every Season the Club gave a Show at which the Net Proceeds, sometimes 18 Bucks, went to Charity. "Romeo and Juliet" was the coming Dramatic Treat. For the Part of Juliet there were two Candidates—Mrs. Skilligan and Mrs. Winkle. The club elected Mrs. Winkle by a Majority of one and some were mean Enough to say she voted for herself. Mrs. Skilligan and her Dinner Party came in late and upset chairs in a Genteel Manner. Mrs. Winkle lasted, but she was too pink for Words. She took 8 Curtain Calls, or two more than Melba's Record. Next thing Anyone Knew there were no Skilligans at the Winkle affairs and no Winkles at the Skilligan Functions. They Vied with each other in Expensive Entertainment. Then two men met in Bankruptcy Court. "It's a Dead Heat," said Skilligan to Winkle.

Moral—The Men are always the first to Quit.

Canimated Nooz Pictorial No. 12—Essanay—July 5.—Canimated Nooz Pictures Prof. Killjoy, who has just made the remarkable discovery that in 1297, 411 years from now, the beer supply will give out and advises conservative use of same. Doc Linn A. Ment, who conducts the health hint department, shows how ordinary gymnastics in fastening a collar button may be made into healthful morning exercise. The exercise, according to the Doc, develops the cerebellum medualla oblangatta. Dreamy Dud has another thrilling experience during his sleeping moments. Canimated Nooz is a split reel release, sharing the 100 feet with Western American Scenic.

Housekeeping—Vim—July 5.—Featuring Harry Meyers and Rosemary Theby. The young married couple have a few pieces of home-made furniture in their flat. The bride's uncle sends her all his old heirlooms, which fill the flat to overflowing, and when Hubby returns home he thinks he is in the wrong flat until the janitor reassures him. Hubby determines to sell the heirlooms and buy some real furniture, but no sooner is the flat furnished with modern pieces than Uncle comes to visit the couple. They dare not face him, and escape to the roof. The scuttle is closed, and they are left in a rainstorm without shelter.

Coming Mutual dramas. From the top, "The Taming of Wild Bill," "Killed by Whom?" and "The Good-For-Nothing Brat."

The Stolen Master—(Three Reels)—Lubin—July 6.—A band of foreign crooks, engaged in selling copies of stolen masters, induce a struggling artist to join their band, after forcing him to become a victim of absinthe. The band is rounded up, and the artist saved from ruin by his former sweetheart. Samuel Curtis, Evelyn Page, Alan Forrest, Adda Gleason, George Routh, Bird Hopkins compose the cast.

A Day at School—Vim—July 6.—Featuring Babe Hardy and Billy Ruge. Ray, Plump's sweetheart, is sent away to school by her father because he disapproves of his prospective son-in-law. Through her maid Plump learns of Ray's whereabouts and journeys forth to rescue his lady-love. He manages to enter her room, but is seen by the janitor, who makes things hot for him. Plump, not to be outwitted, dresses up as a girl and is admitted as a pupil and plans an elopement. The janitor, however, spies them and gives the alarm and their escape is cut off. Fortunately for the two an enterprising burglar chooses this moment for an entrance and he, alarmed by the commotion, hides in the closet. Plump takes refuge in the closet with the burglar and forces the crook out. In trying to make his getaway the burglar fells Ray's father. This leaves open the way to escape and the lovers, jumping into father's auto, wave a kiss at dad, now mistaken for the burglar to be almost annihilated by the excited girls.

Furnished Rooms—Vim—July 7.—Featuring Robt. Burns and Walter Stull. Jabbs, a stranded actor, when he receives from a theatrical agent a part in a drama, rents a room where he thinks he can study in peace. To his consternation, however, Pokes, a one-man orchestra, who occupies the opposite room, selects the same time to practice some new music. Jabbs takes his belongings and leaves the place and rents a room in the home of Professor Wisem, who is working on a rain-making bomb. In the professor's home Jabbs thinks he has found the quietude he needs, but to his dismay he finds that Pokes, having been thrown out of his former room, has rented the same room of which Jabbs has already taken possession. In the fight which follows for possession of the room Jabbs and Pokes are badly mussed up and in the end they agree to be friends and share the room together.

The Crooked Road—(Three Reels)—Knickerbocker—July 7.—Featuring Henry King. Dave Fenton, the leader of a gang, does a slight service for Nellie, an invalid, who sells papers to add to the fund she and her mother are saving for the day when they can go to the country, and from this springs an intimate friendship. Slinky Joe, one of Dave's gangsters, hears Nell and her mother counting their money and tells Dave and the gang and they plan a raid, but when Dave discovers to whom the money belongs he fights his companions and drives them from the place. Nell makes him see to what end his present mode of life is leading him and he determines to shake the gang and find honest work. Blanche, who loves Dave, when she learns that she has lost Dave through Nell, plans to get even and steals the girl's savings, but later on she relents and sends the money to Nell, who finds happiness with Dave.

Power—(Three Reels)—Essanay—July 8.—Featuring Nell Craig. Pat O'Riley, rough and ready politician, discovers himself possessing the balance of power that controls the state convention. John Stark, the big boss, is desperate. If he is to deliver the power rights of Twin Falls to the interests he must control the state. A compromise is effected with O'Riley whereby the latter names the governor and Stark the rest of the ticket. O'Riley picks Evan Dexter as a young lawyer who will be easy to handle. With her brother as governor Lucille Dexter meets O'Riley. She interests him and under her influence he gives up gang politics. The water power bill passes the legislature and is up to the governor. O'Riley won't let him sign. Stark promises Dexter the senatorship; O'Riley promises him the penitentiary. Lucille discovers what her influence has been with O'Riley, and how he has saved her brother, and her respect for him becomes love.

A Terrible Tragedy—Lubin—July 8.—Emile Scribbler, a reporter, is assigned to the job of reporting the hiding place of some Nihilists. He runs down Zola, the chief's daughter, with his automobile and learns the whereabouts of the rendezvous. He is made a prisoner and is about to be put to death when Zola, who has fallen in love with him, comes to his rescue. He is recaptured, however, and placed in a huge box. Professor Foddletop, a collector of mummies, who lives above Emile, is preparing to ship Queen of Sheba to a museum and while he goes for a dray the box disappears, having been taken by the Nihilists, thinking it the one containing Emile

When the professor returns and finds his mummy gone he rushes down to Emile and finds the box in which Emile is nailed fast. After releasing the reporter they both start out after the Nihilists and after a rough and tumble fight with the Nihilists the professor finally secures his mummy.

The Rival Queens—Lubin—July 8.—Featuring John Edwards, Mattie Edwards and Jos. Bright. Boma and Orga are sons of the King. The King dies and the brothers are summoned to his side. While Boma wails beside his father, Orga, the younger brother, with Mayma, his mate, usurps the throne. Boma makes an appeal but Mayma flirts with the witch doctor, and the decision goes to Orga. Boma is driven from the village with Kata, his consort. Orga does not make a popular ruler, but Mayma kids the people and they stand for her. After a storm, Boma and Kata discover a trunk washed ashore, the property of a soubrette. They take it to their hut and Kata finds that the costumes fit her. They start for the village and on the way fall in with a body of Zulus, who have been banished. They think Kata is a goddess until Boma explains. With their support, Boma and Kata take the throne and Orga and his spouse are led off to execution.

Some Duel—Selig—July 8.—Featuring Tom Mix and Victoria Forde. Grace, daughter of Jim Jordan, a ranch owner, has just returned from school, and Tom, leader of the Lazy S cowboy outfit, and Centipede Pete, leader of a rival cowboy outfit, fall in love with the girl. They both attire themselves in their best bib and tucker and head for Grace's home. Enroute they stop to settle a strenuous argument. Pete, subdued by Tom, challenges him to fight a duel. Grace plots with Tom to fool and frighten Pete, which they do by trick marksmanship. On the day of the duel blank cartridges are placed in the guns unknown to the principals and when the undertaker arrives it is too much for Pete, who takes to his heels. Grace then tells Tom how brave he was to stick to his ground, and he appreciates that he has won her love.

Mutual Pictures

Killed by Whom—(Two Reels)—American—July 3.—Featuring Vivian Rich, Alfred Vosburgh and George Periolat. Herbert Murdock, son of Jason Murdock, millionaire factory owner, marries below his social scale and is disowned by his father. Herbert obtains work in his father's factory under an assumed name, but when his father discovers this he is discharged. Destitute and desperate, Herbert resolves to make a final appeal to his father, but finds his father obdurate and they quarrel. When the stenographer returns from lunch she finds Jason Murdock lying across his desk dead. Herbert is accused of the crime. The janitor of the building, however, states that he talked with Herbert's father after he left the office. Later a woman enters the courtroom dragging a small boy by the arm and he and his chum were playing Indian on the roof opposite Murdock's office and of firing a revolver which he didn't know was loaded. The boys had seen Murdock crumple up, but were afraid to tell. This exonerates Herbert and there is an affectionate scene between him and his wife.

The Chaser Chased—Vogue—July 4.—Featuring Rube Miller. Rube and his wife go to the beach for a dip in the briny. There Rube sees a couple of girls who catch his eye and although they are escorted he sneaks away from Alice and talks to them. He gets into trouble with their gentlemen friends and is forced to leave the girls. He meets Madge, whose sweetheart is hunting for his hat, and when he returns Madge is taken away with him. On account of Rube's habit of flirting he gets in trouble with everyone. Finally there is a chase ending with the whole crowd chasing Rube down the beach.

Billy Van Deusen — Masquerader — Beauty — July 5.—Featuring John Steppling, John Sheehan, Dick Rosson, and Carol Halloway. Billy Van Deusen receives an invitation to a masque ball and decides to impersonate a famous tramp. While Billy is making up, Lefty Larry and Kokeye Louis, two crooks of the old school, are snooping around the Van Deusen house and as they enter they discover Billy leaving with a sack. They relieve Billy of the swag and then they put him into a cab and tell the cab driver to take him to a fictitious address. The driver stops to get a drink and while he is doing so two of Billy's friends in search of excitement decide it would be a great lark to go for a drive. They drive into the country and the next morning when Billy awakens he finds himself in the country and wondering where he is and what has happened.

A Merry Mix-Up—Cub—July 7.—Featuring George Ovey. A newlywed desires to make his rich uncle acquainted with his bride, but fears to announce that he is already married. To this end he hires Jerry to pose as his wife's husband. Jerry makes trouble all around, needless to say, and the uncle finally discovers his nephew's ruse.

The Taming of Wild Bill—(Two Reels)—Mustang—July 7.—Featuring Jack Richardson and Rita Davis. Bill, an ordinary happy-go-lucky cowboy when sober, is the wildest kind of a being when under the influence of liquor. There comes to White River an itinerant dispenser of the Gospel, Bronson, and his daughter, Rita. She starts out to distribute circulars announcing the first of a series of meetings and encounters Bill, who is having a wild time in the saloon. That night when Bill hears the music of the services he concludes to break the meeting up, but Rita sees him and pleads with him to go away and he consents. He returns to the saloon and lines up all its inmates and forces them to attend the services of Bronson. As he sits listening to Bronson Bill thinks of the days when his mother used to read to him, and how she told him that if he would only heed the advice of the Bible he would never come to harm. Ere leaving the meeting that night Bill has taken the pledge, and to Rita he states that he intends to live up to his promise and that if she would only allow him to write her, that perhaps some day he may have something very personal to ask her.

The Good for Nothin' Brat—Centaur—July 8.—Featuring Margaret Gibson and William Clifford. Some village scandalmongers mistake the friendship of Manning, the schoolteacher for Daisy, an orphan, for something more intimate. To protect the girl, Manning tells the villagers that he intends to make her his wife. Then the story of Daisy's origin and life is told to Manning, who, seeking her later, finds only traces of her in the lake.

The Gink Lands Again—Beauty—July 9.—Featuring Orral Humphrey. The Gink from Kankakee overhears the conversation of Slick Slandy and his gang to hold up the Wayville bank. The bank is presidented by Marcia Grasse, a widow, and on account of her position she is muchly sought after, especially by Slick Sandy, who is playing the game to a fare-you-well. Sandy takes Marcia for a ride, while the rest of his gang proceed to rob her home and bank. The Ging makes his way into her home and when he sees that the butler is one of the crooks he immediately gets him out of the way. When Marcia and Slick return from their ride they are surprised to find a new butler and Slick scenting that something is wrong, places some household silver in the Gink's pocket and then accuses him of stealing, but the silver is found in Slick's pocket and Marcia orders him from the house. The Gink then tells Marcia of the plot to rob her bank and leaves.

Hired and Fired—Vogue—July 9.—Featuring Paddy McQuire. Bill and Bloggie are ejected from their dingy room by the janitor and being out of work they start out to look for a job. They secure employment at the Vogue studio, and the first thing they do is to steal the property man's lunch and the theft is blamed on the tragedian. The director finally calls Bloggie to play his part, but he makes a mess of the affair and after many trials he is discharged and for revenge he turns the fire hose loose in the studio with disastrous effects upon everybody. The police are called and after many side-splitting antics they are captured and after receiving a dose of their own medicine they resolve never again to enter a studio.

Secret of the Submarine No. 8—(Two Reels)—American—June 26.—Featuring Juanita Hansen and Tom Chatterton. A review appears elsewhere in this issue.

Universal Program

They Wouldn't Take Him Seriously—(Two Reels)—Gold Seal—July 4.—Featuring Herbert Rawlinson and Agnes Vernon. Because Jimmie has proposed to so many girls he finally gets the reputation of not being in earnest. So when he does propose to a girl whom he madly loves she does not take him seriously, thus causing heartaches on both sides. But Jimmie's persistence proves his earnestness and the two at last come to an understanding.

The Clever Mrs. Carter—Imp—July 4.—With Edith Roberts and Harry Benham. Mrs. Carter, noting that her husband is becoming infatuated with a dancer, concocts a scheme whereby she will cure him for good. This she does in a manner which affects his jealousy and shows him pointedly that other men regard her charms as much more genuine than the dancer's. Mr. Carter is finally forced to acknowledge this is true.

The Head of the Family—Rex—July 4.—Ben Wilson featured. Hugh Van Schuyler, a man of wealth and position, realizes that his wife cares little for him and consequently little for her home life. He forces her to go into the wilds with him, and before long his masterful ways have completely won her over. Instead of wishing to return to the sham of society she is willing to settle down in the forest shack for good.

A Gambler's Gambol—L-Ko—July 5.—With Fatty Voss and Harry Coleman. Hubby, an indefatigable gambler, is interrupted in his sport by his wife, who appropriates the kitty. Hubby is then given his dose of discipline, which is so strong that he decides to end it all by drowning. But an alligator in the lake makes him change his mind. He and his pals decide to get the money from the wife by force, with the result that they land in jail.

Behind the Veil—(Two Reels)—Victor—July 5.—Featuring Mary Fuller. This picture was adapted by Catherine Carr from the story by Elizabeth R. Carpenter. It deals with the deception practiced by one twin sister upon the lover of the other. The man thinks he has married Harriet, but instead it is Diana that is his wife. The latter is finally punished for her insatiable flirting habits and with her death the barrier is lifted which has kept the lovers apart.

The Wishing Lamp—Big U—July 6.—Featuring Gordon Griffith. This is a juvenile drama in which two boys, one poor and the other rich, both wishing to be the opposite, have their wishes fulfilled and are no more satisfied than at first.

The Man Across the Street—(Two Reels)—Imp—July 6.—Featuring King Baggott and Edna Hunter. Story written by Robert Thomas Hardy and scenario and production by Henry Otto. John Warren has good reason to be suspicious of his wife. He learns that her lover is Dr. Carl and decides to make them both pay. He visits his wife at night in the disguise of Dr. Carl and learns her feelings. After tearing off the disguise he kills her. Dr. Carl is convicted of the murder and the husband, seated in the courtroom, gloats over his revenge.

The Janitor—Powers—July 6.—With Wallace Beery. This comedy sets forth the unfortunate escapades of a hotel janitor aspiring to win the love of a stenographer. Not only does he lose out with the girl, but his misery is made more pointed by a which mocks him with things that might have been.

The River Goddess—Imp—July 7.—Featuring Matt Moore and Jane Gail. A young man who has had his hopes shattered by his sweetheart's eloping with a chauffeur, decides to seek surcease from his sorrow in the river. But he meets another man who has been fooled in a like manner by the same girl. They both come to a sane conclusion regarding this girl, after being arrested as chauffeur suspects, and thus the River Goddess loses her prey.

Double-Crossing the Dean—(Two Reels)—Nestor—July 7.—With Stella Adams, Eddie Lyons and Lee Moran. The dean of Fudgeley Hall is an inveterate hater of men and will not allow romance to develop anywhere on the premises. Therefore it is up to the youths in the drug store across the way to probe for and find the dean's weakest spot. The latter they find and thus the downfall of the dean and her being forced to allow romantic freedom on the campus.

Any Youth—Victor—July 7.—With Allen Holubar and Dorothy Phillips. This story is an allegorical fantasy dealing with the eternal conflict between the better and baser self of the average human being. The better self prevails and a happy marriage ensues, whereas had it been the other way, ruin and woe would have been the result.

The Committee on Credentials—(Three Reels)—Bison—July 8.—With Harry Carey and Olive Fuller Golden. This story tells of how a gambler squanders his fortune and leaves his wife and child in want. Bob, the owner of the gambling house, sympathetic with the wife's trouble, pays her back all the money that her husband has lost in his establishment. This leads the gambler to think his wife has been playing on the side with Bob, whom he tries to kill. By mistake, however, another man gets the bullet intended for Bob and the gambler, being pursued, falls over a cliff to his death, while there are signs of Bob's taking care of his wife and child.

An All Around Cure—Joker—July 8.—Featuring Gale Henry and William Franey. Conditions lead Mrs. Fussy, Mr. Nagg and Mrs. Nagg all to believe that their "better halves" are dead. A new love affair readily springs up among the supposedly bereaved ones. But at a ball masque ludicrous things transpire ending with a reunion among the repentant husbands and wives.

Sports of the Rajahs—(Part 1 of "Imperial India")—Powers—July 8.—This, the first installment of the famous Dorsey travel pictures, shows scenes in little known parts of India. Beautiful buildings in Delhi and other cities are shown, including the highest tower in India and the "Friday Mosque," the largest in the country. Extraordinary contests between animals at the court of one of the Rajahs are also presented

A Dead Yesterday—(Two Reels)—Imp—July 9.—Featuring Hobart Henley and Cleo Madison. Tom Wren, by force of circumstances, finds himself the husband of two wives. The first wife, Agnes, in favor of the second, who has a child, renounces her claims and becomes an outcast. The child's mother dies and Tom tries in vain to locate Agnes. Finally the two first lovers are brought together and Agnes, who has always loved Tom, is reinstated in the happiness which fate has for so long deprived her.

Getting the Goods on Gertie—L-Ko—July 9.—Reggie Morris and Gertie Selby featured. In order to get the goods on his wife, jealous Reggie hires a detective. The latter proves to be no more than a porch climber, for in the still of the night he and his assistant begin to appropriate the silverware. But the assistant muddles things and the law is finally triumphant.

The Bondman—(Six Reels)—William Fox—June 26.—Featuring William Farnum. A review appears elsewhere in this issue.

Ambition—(Five Reels)—William Fox—July 3.—Featuring Bertha Kalich. Robert Powers, the assistant district attorney, is so bent on becoming the head of his office that he is willing to sacrifice his wife, Marion, if he can get Boss Moore to give him the nomination for district attorney. When Moore refuses to name him, Powers, ambition-crazed, sends Marion to the Boss to attempt to win his love. The wife pleads earnestly with the political ruler for her husband. To further his ends, Powers invites Moore to spend a week-end at his home. There Marion tells the Boss that she has come to love him. Although she reveals her affection for Moore to Powers, the assistant district attorney thinks only and always of his candidacy for the nomination. When Marion and the Boss upbraid him severely for his despicable conduct he shrugs his shoulders contemptuously. Finally Marion leaves Powers—with nothing but a hopeless ambition for solace. Kenneth Hunter and William H. Tooker support Madame Kalich.

International Film

The Mysteries of Myra—(Two Reels)—International.—Levitation is the title of the tenth episode in this serial featuring Jean Sothern and Howard Estabrook. Dr. Alden invents an "astral alarm," a device by which he can tell when an astral body enters Myra's room. The Grand Master instructs his followers in the art of levitation. Astral bodies it seems have the power to levitate a material body and cause it to float in the air. Varney is accompanied to the Maynard home at night by two of his members. He hypnotizes them and their spirit bodies go forth into the room of the sleeping Myra. The alarm awakens the doctor and he hurries to the girl's home. To his surprise he sees Myra float out of the window and descend lightly to the ground. Varney picks her up from the ground and places her in charge of a cloaked man. He then proceeds to release his associates from the hypnotic spell. The cloaked man is Alden and Varney makes his escape in the auto.

Hearst-International News Pictorial No. 49—June 20.—Millions of roses are used to decorate floats that appear in the annual Rose Festival at Portland, Oregon; Turkish infantry go into action against foe; in Southern Utah 50,000 acres of magnificent redstone cliffs tower miles above the sea level; two disastrous fires visit San Francisco, one sweeping the State pier, and destroying thousands of bales of cotton, and the other destroying an enormous warehouse with a loss of $150,000; latest fashions; children of North Side public schools take possession of National League Baseball Park to demonstrate to their parents and a large gathering of others, the results of their physical training, Chicago, Ill.; schooner Virginia, caught in a gale on the Atlantic, is tossed ashore near Salisbury Beach, Mass., to be whipped to pieces by wind and wave; the entire National Guard of every state in the U. S. is called into readiness for duty along the Mexican border.

Hearst-International News Pictorial No. 50—June 23.—Yacht Mah-Pe wins the Lipton Cup race on San Francisco Bay with the Presto finishing close behind; Yale and Harvard coaches send their eight-oar crews through hard workouts in preparation for the annual New London regatta, New London, Conn.; latest fashions; huge war balloon sails above Cambridge, Mass., and the Hearst-International News Pictorial cameraman obtains some remarkable pictures of Boston and Cambridge from the basket of the gas bag; United States troops continue to operate below the border in spite of Mexican demand that they withdraw; enormous crowds flock to see the departure of state militiamen for Camp Beekman, where they will await orders to proceed to the Mexican border, New York, N. Y.

Kleine

Gloria's Romance No. 8—(Two Reels)—George Kleine—July 10.—The Mesh of Mystery. Featuring Billie Burke. A review appears elsewhere in this issue.

Metro

The Flower of No Man's Land—(Five Reels)—Metro—June 26.—Featuring Viola Dana. This story deals with the shattered romance of a young orphan girl of the American desert who comes to civilization as the wife of an opera idol. After finding her husband is already married the girl returns a wreck to her Indian guardian in the West. The Indian wreaks vengeance later on the man who has trifled with the girl he has cared for since early childhood. Reviewed elsewhere in this issue.

The Spreewald Near Berlin—Paramount-Burton Holmes—July 2.—This travel-picture takes the spectator for a boat ride along the "liquid boulevards" of this quaint country whose people are Slavic and not Teutonic, though the German Empire has absorbed Lusatia. The reel presents many beautiful and many interesting scenes.

Pictographs—Paramount—July 2.—On Duty With the Police Dogs is the leading article in this issue. Interesting exhibitions are given by these highly trained animals. Can You Remember is a memory test contributed by Professor Munsterberg. The Better Babies department and some views of India complete this release.

Bobby Bumps, Fly Swatter—(Split Reel)—Paramount—July 2.—An Earl Hurd animated cartoon from the Bray Studios. In this adventure Bobby's pa is troubled by the flies, of the common or house variety. These vivacious insects find great pleasure in skating on pa's polished head while he tries to sleep. He calls upon Bobby to keep them away and as the youth would rather play ball he passes the job on to the dog, but it does not work and in the end he assumes full responsibility. While there is little novelty to this cartoon it is rather amusing. On the same reel with:

Dinnertime in Zooland—An interesting picture. The views of the various animals were taken by Dr. Raymond L. Ditmars.

The Iron Claw—(Two Reels)—Pathe—June 26.—In this episode, which is the eighteenth, the detectives inform Golden that they are certain Davy is the Laughing Mask. Because of a rumor which excites her jealousy, Margery plans to cause the capture of the mysterious person and learn his identity. She leaves a note, supposedly written by the Iron Claw, where the Mask can find it. The note states that Margery will be captured. The note falls into the hands of the Claw and he makes an attempt to bring the plan stated therein to a conclusion. The Mask appears upon the scene in time to rescue Margery.

Red Feather

The Way of the World—(Five Reels)—Red Feather—July 3.—Featuring Dorothy Davenport and Hobart Bosworth. It tells the story of one Beatrice, the wife of the Governor, who by her innocent flirtation with another man causes public scandal and nearly results in her husband losing his second term in office. Gretchen Lederer and Adele Farrington support the above stars. This story was adapted from Clyde Fitch's play and Lloyd B. Carleton directed the picture.

World

What Happened at 22—(Five Reels)—Frohman—June 26.—Featuring Frances Nelson. The story is about a country girl who comes to the city to get work and drifts into a crooked employment agency. The boss crook falls in love with her and hopes to marry her and work her into his game. Failing in this he gets her a position as companion to a wealthy lady and has himself made valet to her brother, a famous criminologist and lawyer. The crook's object in the house is to tamper with a will, and he thinks that the girl might be of some assistance to him. The criminologist quickly recognizes him as a crook and sends for the police. Before the police arrive he is assaulted by the valet, who blames it onto the son of the criminologist. The police arrive and by some clever cross-questioning, including quick-witted deductions by the girl, succeed in making the crook convict himself. Arthur Ashley, Gladden James and Frank Burbeck complete the cast.

DOUGLAS FAIRBANKS
in "Flirting With Fate"

Again TRIANGLE exhibitors are offered the opportunity of presenting to their patrons that irresistible star, Douglas Fairbanks. For the week of July 9th one of the releases will be "Flirting with Fate," with Douglas Fairbanks as the star. Here he again repeats the success he attained in his previous TRIANGLE PLAYS — "The Habit of Happiness," "His Picture in the Papers," and "Reggie Mixes In."

When this picture was shown at the Rialto Theatre in New York recently New York critics declared it to be one of the best in which Fairbanks had ever appeared.

The popularity of Fairbanks is unquestioned. Many exhibitors have proved that the prominent display of Fairbanks' name will do more to increase box office receipts than almost any other thing.

That irresistible "pep" and personality of the star, so long famous on Broadway is intensified on the screen. So vivid are his pictures that you feel you are right on the screen with Fairbanks during every moment of quick action.

Pictures in which Douglas Fairbanks appears are released only by the Triangle Film Corporation. If you are an exhibitor and have not received information regarding the cost of their presentation at your theatre why not write today for information. There will be no obligation on your part and it is just possible that you may find a way to secure increased profits.

Other TRIANGLE PLAYS to be released at an early date will be
July 16th, Dorothy Gish in "The Little School Ma'am"
July 23rd, Bessie Love and DeWolf Hopper in "Stranded."

Exhibitors Arrive at Chicago

START OFF BIG CONVENTION WITH MANUFACTURERS AND EXCHANGE MEN

STATE delegations selected to represent their respective branches at the Sixth Annual Convention of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America began arriving in Chicago on July 8. From the advance guard there is no doubt but that the convention now being held is the best attended and most important of the combined industry.

Not only are exhibitors, as a whole, interested but the leaders of the manufacturing end of the business are vying with each other to pay homage to the men who rent their films.

John R. Freuler, of Mutual, was early on the ground and purposes to remain until the firing of the recall gun.

Harry C. Aitken, president of Triangle, journeyed to Chicago for the purpose of meeting first hand the showmen from all parts of the country.

Messrs. Freuler and Aitken are but the advance guard of the representatives of the manufacturers. Before the convention ends every manufacturer and distributor of importance will have paid his tribute to the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America and to the Illinois branch of the League, in particular.

The majority of the manufacturers and exhibitors have sent some of their most trusted employes to Chicago to remain during the convention and show and to look after and entertain the visiting showmen. Among these representatives already in Chicago are, Leander Richardson, representing Thomas H. Ince; Stevenson of Paramount; Skirball of Metro; Werkmeiter of Pathe; Spedon of Vitagraph; Jenn of Kleine, and many others.

Not only have the manufacturers sent their business representatives but they have spent thousands of dollars transporting their film stars to Chicago. All of the best known stars in the employ of representative companies are in Chicago to attend the show for the purpose of meeting not only the exhibitors but the motion picture show patrons.

The World Film Corporation has prepared a rather elaborate program for Alice Brady, one of its stars, which provides that she will deliver lectures between 2 and 4 o'clock every afternoon during the show, explaining all the details of studio work.

Harry Watson and his company of comedians have contracted to make all of Chicago laugh on July 17 and 18 by giving performances not only at the Coliseum, where the show is under way, but in the streets of Chicago, providing the police will not molest the crowds which are sure to congregate.

There are many other attractions, not the least of which is the annual banquet of the League, which is scheduled to be held at Hotel Sherman beginning at 11 o'clock on the night of July 17, the next to last night of the show. The banquet was postponed until one of the last things on the program in order to keep the interest of the visiting showmen keen for the things that are to come. Practically every delegate and every alternate has decided to remain until the last gun is fired, which will be on Tuesday, July 18, and which will be known as "Universal Day" at the big show.

That the show is a huge success is demonstrated by the number of exhibits. Every concern of the allied motion picture interests is represented. Many of the smaller concerns waited until the eleventh hour before contracting for space but then they came with a rush. Louis Frank, in charge of the allotment of space, was worked beyond capacity. Many of the firms which had contracted for small space during the first days of the show, realizing the extent of the movement, attempted to increase their floor footage to find that they were too late. They had to be satisfied with their first purchase.

Several state delegations have arrived, among them being the New York delegation, which consists of thirty delegates and thirty alternates besides a large number of members of the League. They came by special train which was in charge of Sam Spedon of the Vitagraph Company. And they came with the express purpose of making Lee A. Ochs, of New York City, the next president of the National organization. They are strong for Ochs and will fight to the last ditch for him when the election of officers is reached on the roll-call.

The New York exhibitors are at the Hotel Sherman, where one hundred rooms were reserved for them. The make-up of the delegation is:

Lee A. Ochs, president; Thos. Howard, secretary; Samuel H. Trigger, national vice-president.

New York Local—Benj. Lyons, secretary; Louis F. Blumenthal, treasurer; I. Hartshall, S. Rothapfel, Chas. Steiner, A. Weiss, M. Needle, Otto Lederer, F. A. Gorman, Henry Haring, Lester Cohen, Aaron Corn.

Yonkers—Arthur Weiss.

Schenectady—L. A. Buettner.

Utica—W. H. Linton.

Syracuse—G. M. Gibbons.

Brooklyn Local—C. W. Mooney, John Manheimer, president; Wm. Brandt, secretary; Ben Title, second vice-president; L. L. Levine, first vice-president.

Bronx Local—H. Coleman, D. Picker, H. Cole.

Rochester—A. N. Wolff, president.

Albany—S. Suckno.

Rome—E. M. Day.

The Indiana delegation, about two hundred strong, bringing with them the boom of Frank J. Rembusch, of Shelbyville, Indiana, for the presidency, followed the New York delegation by a few hours. They are just as strong for Rembusch as the New York delegation is for Ochs.

Upon the arrival of the delegation from the Hoosier state convention politics became very warm. The two factions met and started to talk trade. Several of the New York delegates suggested that they would support the movement to make Chicago the permanent national headquarters of the League provided the Indiana delegation was willing to withdraw its support from Rembusch and cast the Indiana vote as a unit for Ochs.

The suggested slate of the New York delegation was:

Lee A. Ochs, New York, as president.

William J. Sweeney, Chicago, executive secretary in charge of headquarters.

Permanent headquarters to be at Chicago with the annual convention and show to be held there every year.

The compromise suggestion of the Indiana delegation was:

Frank J. Rembusch, Shelbyville, Indiana, as president.

William J. Sweeney, Chicago, executive secretary.

Chicago permanent League, convention and show headquarters.

The Indiana delegation was willing to trade the balance of the ticket and support any suggestions of the delegation from the East provided they named representative men for the offices to be filled.

Whether Mr. Rembusch or Mr. Ochs is named to lead the destinies of the League for the next twelve months it is acknowledged that the League affairs will be in splendid hands.

No opposition to the election of William J. Sweeney, of Chicago, as executive secretary has developed.

The Milwaukee branch of the League arrived via the automobile route. The branch itself sends fifteen members for whom they paid all the expenses and many of the members went to Chicago as individuals. They are for Rembusch for president and are assisting the Indiana delegation in its fight.

The Illinois delegation is represented by seventeen delegates and alternates. All of them are more interested in making Chicago the permanent headquarters of the League and the permanent convention and show city than they are in the factional fight for the presidency. But the Illinois vote probably will be cast as a unit for Rembusch, of Indiana.

The make-up of the Illinois delegation follows:

Delegates.	Alternates.
Wm. J. Sweeney	Aaron J. Jones, Chicago.
Robt. R. Levy	Nathan Ascher, Chicago.
Geo. Henry	Jos. Trinz, Chicago.
Fred Schaefer	Aug. Zilligan, Chicago.
Sidney Smith	A. Balaban, Chicago.
Louis H. Frank	Fred Hartman, Chicago.
C. C. Whelan	M. S. Johnson, Chicago.
H. Lieberthal	Chas. J. Schaefer, Chicago.
Geo. M. Laing	John H. Frundt, Chicago.
M. A. Choynski	F. H. Franke, Chicago.
Harry Hyman	Louis Marks, Chicago.
Alfred Hamburger	Louis Schindler, Chicago.
G. M. Luttrell	Chas. J. Law, Pana, Ill.
Dee Robinson	H. T. Loper, Springfield, Ill.
W. W. Watts	Isadore Bernstein, Springfield, Ill.
E. A. Kunz	Harold Johnson, Jacksonville, Ill.
Will Bradley	F. M. Bond, Pontiac, Ill.

An effort was made to have the name of S. P. Roderick, the Chicago attorney, placed on the list of the Illinois delegation but as Mr. Roderick was not an exhibitor the constitution forbade it. Mr. Roderick, however, will address the convention and tell the visiting delegation how he won the legal battle through which the Chicago city authorities were prevented from closing all motion picture houses situated within 200 feet of a church. Had Attorney Roderick not won his legal fight 106 motion picture houses in Chicago would have been forced to close their doors.

The complete program of the convention and show follows:

Famous Players and Lasky Combine

ADOLPH ZUKOR PRESIDENT OF $12,500,000 CORPORATION

Adolph Zukor, President.

Jesse Lasky, Vice-President.

Samuel Goldfish, Secretary.

OFFICERS OF THE NEW FAMOUS PLAYERS-LASKY MERGER.

THE numerous rumors, assertions and denials regarding the future activities of the Famous Players Film Company and the Jesse L. Lasky Feature Play Company have been definitely settled with the announcement of the formation of the Famous Players - Lasky Corporation, a consolidation of two pioneers in the presentation of celebrated stars and plays on the motion picture screen. The company is capitalized at $12,500,000 and its output will be released on the Paramount program.

The officers of the new corporation are Adolph Zukor, president; Jesse L. Lasky, vice-president; Samuel Goldfish, chairman of the board of directors; Arthur S. Friend, treasurer, and Elek J. Ludvigh, secretary. The directors are, in addition to the officers named, Messrs. Cecil B. DeMille, William C. Demorest, Daniel Frohman, Albert A. Kaufman, Frederick G. Lee and Emil E. Shauer.

All the directors are well known in the film industry and have been identified with either of the two companies with the exception of Messrs. Lee and Demorest. Mr. Lee is president of the Broadway Trust Company and Mr. Demorest is president of the Realty Trust Company. The officers of the corporation emphasize the fact, however, that despite these affiliations, none of the capital stock will be offered to the public.

A statement issued by the officers says: "The essential purpose of the consolidation is to meet present conditions in the industry and anticipate the demand for better and more artistic productions. The consolidation will make it possible to utilize to the best advantage the producing facilities and equipment of the Famous Players Studios in New York and the Lasky studios in Hollywood, California, and therefor offers a vastly increased efficiency over the former conditions.

"The Famous Players Film Company has released forty-eight productions a year and the Lasky thirty-six, making a total of eighty-four feature photoplays a year for the new corporation in addition to the special productions.

"This consolidation brings under the one banner of the new corporation the greatest aggregation of stage and screen stars that has ever been assembled in one producing organization, among the most celebrated of whom are Mary Pickford, Geraldine Farrar, Marguerite Clark, Marie Doro, Pauline Frederick, Blanche Sweet, Hazel Dawn, Lou-Tellegen, Fannie Ward, John Barrymore, Mae Murray, Victor Moore, Donald Brian, Ann Pennington and others.

"Both the eastern and western studios of the newly formed corporation will be immediately enlarged to enable them to cope with the extended producing activities which are planned by the concern and to facilitate the handling of the more elaborate photoplays which are contemplated in addition to the regular releases.

"The Famous Players Film Company was formed in April, 1912, and was the first producing organization in the world to be devoted to the presentation of a yearly program consisting of stage stars in adaptations of successful stage plays and great novels. At that time the motion picture industry had only reached a state of development which comprised the presentation of one, two and three reel productions and the occasional filming of a multiple reel feature.

"The Jesse L. Lasky Feature Play Company was organized in November, 1913, and has dedicated to the same principles as those which governed the Famous Players—the starring of stage celebrities in big productions. Under the Lasky management there have been many notable stars introduced to the photoplay screen, the most celebrated of whom is America's greatest prima donna, Geraldine Farrar."

Lou-Tellegan, Sarah Bernhardt's former leading man, husband of Geraldine Farrar, is also a Lasky player, working at the California studios at present in special dramas.

Two of the new concern's prominent directors: Cecil B. De Mille, on the left, and Daniel Frohman.

Misleading Publicity and Suitable Programs

BY FRANK J. REMBUSCH

A Prominent Indiana Exhibitor.

LAST week a joint conference was held at the Chamber of Commerce in Indianapolis, including the Federation of Women's Clubs and Indianapolis exhibitors and exchange men. The meeting was called by the ladies of Indianapolis to push the belief that Indianapolis exhibitors, one day and night each week, should show pictures that are especially suitable for children, or rather, suitable for the whole family, and to be known as the Family program.

Frank J. Rembusch, prominent Indiana exhibitor and candidate for the office of president of the M. P. E. L. of America, with his family in front of his home at Shelbyville, Indiana.

The spirit and motive of the meeting was most friendly and co-operative and conducted in a delightfully congenial manner. It was very helpful to all concerned. We in Indiana have always found it best when any misrepresentation or misapprehension came up to call a conference with those who are concerned and may have the moral welfare of the community at heart. We have by sympathetic consideration been able to get the good will of these good people. We have no form of censorship in Indiana whatsoever. We try to enlighten our good people on the various phases of the motion picture industry until they see the ill effects of legalized censorship, and in the last hearing before the legislature on a censorship bill they assisted us in overcoming the measure.

However, when the question was put by the women, "Can you furnish us every Friday a suitable, particularly suitable program for the family and children?" we were somewhat staggered. (By "we" I mean both the exchange men and the exhibitors.)

Look at the Situation and Reflect

Here were over fifty women, representing almost as many clubs and societies, whose membership extends all over the state. They came to us with good will in every motive. They even offered to work and see that we will get a large attendance at our theaters on these days requested so that we would be justified in the movement. They do not ask for educational, religious or strictly moral subjects, but for "an hour of refined recreation and good wholesome fun." We should have been able "right off the bat" to answer with a long list of suitable films but we were not and we had to "stall around" and explain that we were going to look it up and report later. I was really ashamed and then I asked myself, "What is the matter?" and this answer came to mind:

Wrong Publicity

Mr. Manufacturer and Mr. Exhibitor, what opportunities open up with this subject! Increased patronage and good will all in one package. An opportunity to combat censorship with the strongest of all weapons, namely, a favorable public opinion. Do, or don't you see the point?

MOTOGRAPHY has kindly allowed me recently to say in my own words something about what rotten bookkeepers we are and I wish I were able to say something as effective about the punk publicity put out by the manufacturer and copied by the exhibitor. Allow me to be concrete.

One of the women mentioned to Mr. Bietman, president of the Indianapolis local, that she was a regular patron of his theater but did not go one night last week because he was showing a picture entitled "The Black Crook." Now it so happens that this picture is a beautiful fairy tale especially suitable for children, but the lady remembered a notorious vulgar play by the same name, that showed some fifteen years ago. Besides, the posters and heralds with the words "Spectacular Extravaganza" in bold type would lead one to believe there was some connection between this film and the lady minstrel show of a score of years past. What were the results? Those who went to see the picture for sordid motives were disappointed, while those who would have enjoyed the picture stayed away because the publicity man was asleep on the job.

Truthful Advertising a Crying Need

Truth in Advertising is a crying need in our business. Pick up a trade journal or go through your mail and what do you find? Very seldom anything said as to the kind of an audience the picture would be suitable for. Many times I have read the advance dope on a film and was afraid from the verbiage and description that this film would bump the line and be offensive to those who desire a particular program. But after I saw the picture I found it to be a picture especially suitable for those who want to go to the theater only "when they are sure" the program is without offensive taste. Had I known beforehand I would have made my appeal for patronage directly on the kind of a picture and the quality of the picture and from the moral and uplift standpoint of the picture. Those people who "want to be sure" would have come. As a result they would have been pleased to receive my invitation; they would have been further pleased with the presentation; and I would have been delighted with the compensation.

These women mentioned that many moving picture theaters were closed down and in the hands of the receiver and remarked that perhaps the public was not going to see pictures as they had in the past because the pictures didn't suit the public as well as they did formerly, and I believe that the women are right. If we are to keep up interest we must cater in a special manner to various tastes. Under the guise of social service there are too many pictures that bump the line. As Mr. Zaring, secretary of our Local, aptly remarked, "Last week I had a vampire every night and we are being vampired, vampired and vampired until we are sick of vampire pictures."

Suitable Programs

I have no fault to find with the programs. I could go into ecstacy over the wonderful programs that are being produced—the beautiful settings, the depth of thought in these exquisite productions of today carry me into words of eloquent approval and so does a musical composition from the best in musical literature but I think the masses like music of melody and rhythm; music with a swing and a rag; and so I think also that most people like pictures with joy, hope and variety, and the kind where you go home happy—where everybody got married and lived in joy forever afterwards. I hold that pictures are moral and that they have increased every year in moral tone and aesthetic quality. But I believe we are overreaching in the motion picture art to some extent; that the art of producicng and presentation is catering only to those who appreciate and care for only the highest form of art, thought and expression. We should be able to know what kind of audience the picture will suit and when our publicity men have a picture that is especially suitable for church-going people let them say so, and we will have a big night of church people in our theater. When a picture has a lot of love and romance, say so, and the romantic will come to our romantic appeal. If the picture is a vampire picture or a picture with a deep meaning, if we know it beforehand we can say so to our patrons and they will respect us more accordingly.

A few years ago the merchants of Indianapolis were advertising big sales every day. It was "Big Sale" and "Big Sale" until finally the public found that "Big Sale" meant nothing. The merchants were finally compelled to take the matter up in organization. They agreed as a whole not to advertise anything but the plain truth, the whole truth and nothing but the truth. Now when there is a sale it always amounts to something because this organization has educated Indianapolis to know that when their initials are on the corner of an advertisement that the sale is a real, guaranteed, absolute sale.

Don't Give an Overdose of Show

This business is no different from any other business if we will only just apply a little business sense. Yesterday I talked to a young lady and she asked why the most beautiful house in Indianapolis had gone into the hands of a receiver last week. This house was filled with perfumery, and flowers, ornamentation and presentation. A symphony orchestra of 25 people synchronized with the picture. Without answering I asked her, "Did you patronize the show?" She replied, "Well, I tell you, Mr. Rembusch, I did go to the show once in a while but I couldn't go often because it took all evening and I never could get home before eleven o'clock. It was so long that it tired me out." Even though I have a show two doors from this house as a competitor I say truly I am sorry that they didn't make good. "My little show is rambling right along." They were there about 7 months, I have been there about 7 years. The lady further remarked, "Many times in the past I would go across the street during the noon hour to the Orpheum and pay a dime and see one or two reels but I had to give that up. You see I get in and only see about two reels of a five reel subject and have to leave before I find out what it was all about so as a consequence I don't go at all."

We are losing that class of people who in former years came for fifteen or thirty minutes recreation because we haven't any fifteen or thirty minute program that is suitable and when we lose customers of any kind it hurts and it is hurting now.

You Are Needed at the Chicago Convention

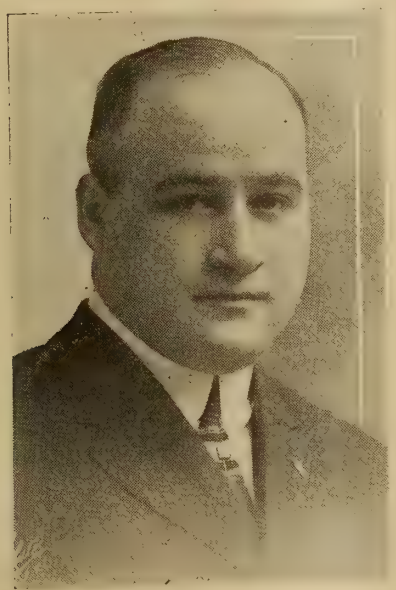
Mr. Exhibitor, the Chicago convention is before you. It is a business meeting of the motion picture industry. Now, in every other line of business—whether they are bankers, butchers, bakers, candlestick makers or undertakers—they get together and talk these things over heart to heart. You have an opportunity to do this in Chicago. If you leave only a few of us go the way we have been in past years there won't be anything done, but if you will come to Chicago in numbers and in earnest the results will be worth more to you than many weeks of worrying at home. Our troubles are not local troubles. They are national troubles. We must get a national vision, a national focus on the situation. Whether you are a member of the League or not, be there and stay there every day. I know that Chicago is trying to make this the most complete, the most helpful, the most earnest business meeting of the entire industry that has ever taken place and you owe it to them and to yourself and to the whole industry to be there. Get that suit case ready now, right now.

Exhibitors to Hold Outing

Exhibitors in the Northeastern Ohio Motion Picture Exhibitors' League are going to take a day off during the month of July, leave work and worry behind and be boys again. George W. Heinbuch of the Superior Theater, is chairman of a committee which is arranging for a jolly outing in the country. Other members of the committee are S. F. Deutsch and S. H. Barck. The operators' union is to be invited to take part in the affair when it comes off.

Theater Has Usher Drill Corps

The drill corps of the Rialto theater, New York, consisting of 16 of the ushers of that theater, who have been trained in military evolutions, has notified Managing Director S. L. Rothapfel of its intention to enlist as a unit in event of actual hostilities in Mexico. They were assured that their salaries would be paid by the corporation during their absence.



Manager Quimby of the Pathe Seattle office gave a private showing of "The Ascent of Mt. Rainer," a Pathe scenic, before the Chamber of Commerce and Rotary Club of Tacoma, recently, and these town bodies were so much interested in the picture that they sent circular letters to all the Chambers of Commerce and Rotary Clubs throughout the United States, calling their attention to the scenic.

The Rothacker Film Manufacturing Company of Chicago is now reeling in pictures of the Roundup being held in Kildeer, North Dakota. The concern also has a crew among the Black Feet Indians making a three-reeler featuring Custer's last stand. This crew will then proceed to capture the scenery of Rocky Mountain National Park. A third Rothacker crew is making special films to illustrate road making for a Delaware firm.

Film Organization Needs Exhibitors

DISCUSSION AT LEE A. OCHS DINNER—CONVENTION BOOMED

A SPLENDID testimonial dinner was tendered Lee A. Ochs, president of the New York Motion Picture Exhibitor's League, by his friends at Brighton Beach, New York, on June 28. There were at least 200 exhibitors, exchange men, manufacturers and press representatives present.

Lee A. Ochs

The new "Splash Me 1916 Review" gave a special performance. The dancing, singing and other features, including the big feast, were thoroughly enjoyed. J. Robert Rubin, counsel of the New York Local, acted as toastmaster. He said: "Nothing better expresses the regard in which Mr. Ochs is held by his friends, than this testimonial—the fact of your presence in such large numbers. I may say of Mr. Ochs, that when you placed him in a position of responsibility, he did something. The exhibitors have been at last recognized as an exceedingly important part of the film industry. And every branch of the industry is represented here tonight, which is a most gratifying thing." At the conclusion of his introductory speech, Mr. Rubin presented the guest of honor with a handsome diamond ring as a token of the esteem of his friends.

Mr. Ochs in responding said:

I need not tell you how proud I am. This is an occasion that comes but once in a lifetime. I have tried, during my connections with the League to take care not only of the exhibitors' interest, but to gain the confidence of the manufacturers, distributors and men in the other lines of the industry. We have fought a great fight for recognition, and won. I am amply repaid for all that I have done by the result. This is the psychological moment for us to all become united for the general harmony and welfare of the motion picture business. The exhibitor will be stronger than ever after the Chicago convention, and it's up to us to lay down policies there that will advance the industry in general. I want to urge each and every member to attend the greatest convention in Chicago next week. Knowing the hospitality of western exhibitors, I can vouch that they will welcome you with open arms. I may say again that I am overwhelmed by this token of your friendship and the honor you have done me by this splendid gathering.

At the end of his remarks, Mr. Ochs presented a gift provided by the committee to Louis Blumenthal, treasurer of the League. Mr. Blumenthal acknowledged the same and expressed the hope that henceforth all branches of the business would work together for the common good.

Sam Trigger was presented with a handsome fountain pen. Ben Title was the recipient of a remembrance of his many friends and responded with verse of his own composition in honor of Lee Oches.

Mr. Rubin then introduced as a representative of the exchange men, that "imperial and irresistible" gentleman, W. W. Irwin of the V-L-S-E. Mr. Irwin said:

There are some men who by their integrity naturally become leaders. Such is the case with the guest of the evening, Lee A. Ochs. He is a man who thinks what he says and says what he thinks. There has been a barrier between exhibitors and producers. That barrier is ceasing to exist. We are all here to pay tribute to a man who is a leader and good leadership means organization. It is delightful to know that the members of the industry have come to realize that we must work in behalf of the business as a whole—that what affects one affects all.

The committee recently appointed at Delmonico's to create a body to supplant the Board of Trade is hard at work and has today completed what it believes to be a plan for complete co-operation. This plan merits your study and your suggestions. Your study will aid us in perfecting the plan for organization. But we must have the co-operation of every one of you. It is necessary for the exhibitors to study this plan from their own standpoint. Unless it or some similar plan is endorsed by the exhibitors it is hardly probable it can be put into successful operation. You should study it before the convention in Chicago and go there with the conviction that it offers the proper solution of all difficulties—a means by which we can meet our common enemies.

Every branch should develop a leader and it is a source of gratification when a body like this pays tribute to such a leader. Exhibitors and producers are probably of equal importance but they should be considered as a unit. The exhibitors' organizations have a great responsibility; they owe a duty not only to the individual exhibitor but to the whole industry and to the public, and they must see to it that the latter is not hampered in its opportunities to enjoy and profit by this great form of entertainment—the motion picture.

William A. Brady of the World Film Corporation said:

Despite my brief connection with the industry I have a few ideas along perhaps new lines. Now as to the organization, I have been 25 years in a similar business—the legitimate drama. It was the lack of organization that has caused so much outrageous abuse of that business, and in advising you to get together I have only to point to the history of the legitimate theatrical business. Unless you do get together and form an organization to include every branch of the industry you will, sooner or later, find yourselves the victims of a crowd of grafters and thieves. Now, another word; beware of cliques. At the Delmonico meeting I saw evidences of that very thing—the sort of cliques that injured the theatrical business. If you find cliques, selfishness, jealousy—sit down on them at once. I noticed a disposition to overlook exhibitors at the meeting and I believe it was I who arose and said that the exhibitor had as much right to be represented as any other branch of the industry.

Again, the program is the life and sinew of your business. It is not right that any adventurer should organize some special sort of release to wreck your program. If this is started, there are none of the program makers who are not wise enough to form as many special companies as he wishes and you'll find, if this comes to pass that you will by facing the same danger the theatrical man faced. If you encourage this sort of thing, you will find that by the first of January the product will cost you 400 per cent more than it does now. You must suppress certain schemes now being formed to "bunk" the exhibitor. If you are going to incorporate a lot of actors to force the cost of releases out of sight, instead of 52 pictures a year there will be twelve and the cost will be four times as great. I have sounded a dangerous note and now, like a good vaudeville performer, who always knows when to duck, I am now going to stop talking.

W. Stephen Bush was called upon and spoke of his friendship for Mr. Ochs and that gentleman's splendid qualifications.

"In this industry," said Mr. Bush, "when you find organization, you find power. The exhibitor stands on the firing line of the motion picture industry."

Mr. Bush presented to Mr. Hartstall, vice president of the New York organization, a handsome gold watch in recognition of his hard work in getting up this entertainment.

Arthur James of Metro, was introduced and said:

In the past few months have risen a large number of Columbuses who have discovered the exhibitor. It is not my desire to place a wreath of poison ivy on the tomb of the Board of Trade, but I believe it fell only through its failure to promptly recognize the exhibitor. It was better, under the circumstances, that it should fall quickly. Mr. Ochs led his fight on behalf of the exhibitors openly and squarely. It was a hard battle, as I know, because I helped Mr. Ochs in the publicity campaign and in the exposition work.

Leadership has been spoken of. That and organization are the two important things. Mr. Och's leadership has been unique because it has not been bossism. He has always consulted with his committee before taking any important step. He is very likely to be the next national president of the Exhibitors. He ought to be. It is a hard job but an important one. The exhibitors need Mr. Ochs far more than he needs them. I now propose three cheers for Mr. Ochs.

These were given with a will.

William A. Johnston, in a few words, gracefully wished Mr. Ochs luck.

The speeches having been made, the assemblage settled down to enjoy additional amusement features and disbanded in the early morning hours. In every way the affair was a distinct success and Mr. Ochs and those who gathered to do him honor expressed their delight in the outcome of the event.

Among those who participated in the dinner were the following:

Lee A. Ochs, I. N. Hartstall, L. J. Selznick, J. Sampliner, J. Coleman, M. H. Hoffman, Joe Brandt, Mr. Bamberger, W. W. Irwin, Sam Spedon, Morris Needle, Charles Haring, Al. Jutkowitz, F. State Rights for Patriotic Film

The mobilization of the entire National Guard of the United States, and the transporting of so many units of it to the Mexican border for active service, has created such tremendous interest in the question of national preparedness that the Patriot Film Corporation has abandoned its original intention of exploiting "How Britain Prepared" as a road show for only the larger theaters and is now prepared to sell the exhibition rights to the various territories, so that the utmost advantage may be taken of existing conditions.

A great many requests for bookings have already been received from all parts of the country.

At a recent private showing of the pictures before the National Press Club of Washington, at which ex-Governor Hughes, the presidential nominee of the Republican party, Secretary of War Baker, Assistant Secretary of the Navy Roosevelt, Admiral Chester, and a host of other notables were present, the highest praise was bestowed upon the production. It seemed to be the unanimous opinion of those present at the showing that the picture was not only thrilling and absorbing, but that it provided a splendid entertainment.

Al. Lichtman, general manager of the Patriot Film Corporation, speaking recently of his determination to exploit "How Britain Prepared" on the state rights basis, said: "From all indication I believe that we will dispose of the rights to the entire United States in a very short time. There is a genuine demand from all over the country for just this kind of a production, and I am sure that the state rights buyers who obtain the rights to our pictures in his territory will have secured a very valuable asset."

"The Prince Chap" will be released as a Selig Red Seal Play through V. L. S. E. on July 24. "The Prince Chap" is a film dramatization of Edward Peple's book of the same name. Special scenes for "The Prince Chap" have been taken in New York City and Los Angeles, California.

Managing Director S. L. Rothapfel of the Rialto Theater, New York, is in the west on a business trip to look over his interests there.

In Behalf of the Younger Generation

Juvenile Crime Laid to Cinema

Not alone in America is the question of the motion picture theater and the child being agitated but war-trodden England is also taking up the subject from a little different angle. It is claimed that the cinema is largely responsible for the increase in juvenile crime. As a result the home secretary has issued a circular to all the clerks of justices throughout the country calling their attention to the allegation.

After declaring that lack of parental control is one of the causes of the trouble, the home secretary proceeds: "Many chief constables of large towns and other persons interested in the welfare of the young have represented that children are led to commit offenses by witnessing cinematograph films depicting crimes, use of firearms, etc., and that children often steal money in order to obtain admission to cinemas. The whole question of the censorship of films is under consideration by the secretary of state."

In the meantime the home secretary suggests that the licensing authorities should pay special attention to the nature of the films shown at children's performances and should attach conditions to licenses for picture theaters as to the hours during which children should be admitted.

Children's Matinees Successful

The United Exchange in Memphis, Tenn., is playing up its pictures suitable for "kid" matinees, and is adding a number of houses to its string of customers for such films.

The following exhibitors have set aside a special children's day and on that day are using strictly pictures which appeal to the youngsters: Grain & Troy, Comus Theater, Tupelo, Miss.; M. E. Rollins, Majestic, Grenada, Miss.; Majestic Amusement Co., Memphis, Tenn.; Dixie Theater, Ripley, Tenn.; Princess Theater, Mayfield, Ky.; Wigwam Theater, Muskogee, Okla.; Busby Theater, McAlester, Okla.; Pastime Theater, Carton Hill, La.; Dixie Theater, Paris, Tenn.

Cain and Troy have just instituted the children's matinee in the Comus Theater, Tupelo, Miss., and this is what the manager said after trying the experiment: "We found that the special matinees are a great deal more successful than we anticipated, and it seems that we are destined to make a big thing out of it, with such pictures as 'Sleeping Beauty,' and 'Golden Locks,' and the 'Three Bears' shown upon the screen." Manager A. Bert Estes of the Busby Theater, at McAlester, Okla., is also giving special attention to all children attending Friday matinees and not only assuring the exhibition of the best pictures appealing to children obtainable, but also assuring the parents of the safety of the children attending the matinees.

Attendance of Children Regulated

A question which is always under discussion is that of regulating the attendance of children at moving picture theaters. Different city ordinances are constantly being passed or vetoed to govern this question of the age of children allowed in the theaters, the barring of children entirely, etc. Every city and every state seems to hold a different opinion on this subject.

Pontiac, Mich., comes to the fore on this controversy with an ordinance just passed in that city which provides that children under the age of thirteen will not be allowed to attend any moving picture entertainments, except those given in the schools, unless they are accompanied by parent, guardian or some adult person of the age of at least twenty-one years.

In Worcester, Mass., Assistant City Solicitor John Mawbey has received so many complaints to the effect that children are playing truant from school to attend the motion picture theaters that he has issued a warning to theater owners stating that unless this practice is stopped he will begin to prosecute the managers who allow it. There is a statute in Worcester which states that children under fourteen years of age shall not be admitted to motion pictures houses unless they are accompanied by parents or guardians or present a written permission to attend shows while schools are in session and the statute further provides that proprietors of these houses shall be punished by fines not exceeding $100 for each violation.

Exchange Builds Children's Program

By William Noble

The Universal office at Kansas City, Missouri, has put a new idea into practice which is destined to turn Saturday mornings of picture theaters to profitable account.

The new wrinkle is called the Universal Saturday morning juvenile program, and will consist of one animated cartoon or novelty, one child comedy or drama, one travel or nature film, one industrial or welfare film or combination of these, calculated to make five reels of extraordinary interest. The programs may be run separately or in the series of twelve or more performances. The new program is expected to take well and become very popular with the children.

Films for the Little Ones

Lule Warrenton, the well-known character actress at Universal City, and for years recognized as one of the greatest Shakespearean actresses and a teacher of oratory, has been given a company of her own and will direct a one-reel and split-reel films designed entirely for children.

She already has commenced work, with Allan Watt as her assistant, and her company includes Ernestine Jones, Clara Horton, Nora Depsey and Benjamin Suslow, all clever performers, and a number of others in minor parts.

The first production is entitled "Calling Linda," the title role being played by Ernestine Jones, who is a little colored child.

Suggestions for Saturday Matinees

The following list of films which have recently been censored by the National Board of Review and recommended as suitable to be shown to the younger members of the family may be a help to the exhibitor in selecting his program for the special Saturday performance.

Chicago Children Players' Film

"Modern Mother Goose" is the title of a five-reel feature which will be the first production of the Chicago Children Players, released by the Fort Dearborn Photoplays Syndicate. All the well-known characters of Mother Goose will be seen in this film and the children enacting the parts will range from three to sixteen years. In all one hundred and fifty children will take part. The Elizabethan room of the Congress hotel has been used for the throne room and the tower at Stagg field for the giant's tower. The next production will be "Red Riding Hood." These films are being produced in the interest of better films for children.

Chicago Exhibitors Form Corporation

Aaron J. Jones, a prominent exhibitor of Chicago, has announced the formation of the Central Film Corporation which is to handle the Clara Kimball Young features in Illinois, Indiana, western Kentucky and southern Wisconsin. This new corporation, of which the directors are Jones, Linick and Schaefer and Nathan Ascher, all large exhibitors, will have its offices occupying the entire fourth floor of the Orpheum Theater building, Chicago.

Harry Weiss will be the manager of the new exchange. The Clara Kimball Young features will be released once a month and will be in five and six reels. Upward of $600,000 is involved in the formation of the new exchange.

"WHO'S GUILTY?" CONTEST

Pathe Serial a Money-Maker—Exhibitors Devise Clever Contests and Novel Advertising Schemes.

The policy of the Pathe Exchange to do everything in its power to increase the business of exhibitors on its pictures has borne much profit in connection with the "Who's Guilty?" serial. J. A. Berst, vice-president and general manager of the Pathe, has received an avalanche of letters telling of the money-making qualities of the serial, not only because of the merit of the pictures, but also because they lend themselves to unusual advertising and contests of many kinds.

One of the first theaters to start a contest on "Who's Guilty?" was the Strand, Milwaukee. In addition to crowded houses the result has been a large amount of publicity in the Milwaukee papers, of which the following is a fair example:

Mrs William Kaun, 469 Marshall street, wins the fifth contest in the "Who's Guilty?" series at the Strand Theater. She has decided that the mother is responsible for the tragedy in "Sowing the Wind" chapter, which appeared in story form in The Evening Wisconsin last week. The prize is two Strand tickets good for six months. There is another prize for this week's story which appears in The Evening Wisconsin and is shown in picture form at the Strand.

Other theaters have adopted novel schemes, in some instances subpoenas were sent out to prospective patrons. Again, cards with a large question mark accompanied by the words, "Who's Guilty?" were hung on door knobs, while the local newspapers carried large advertisements as part of the scheme, so that the man who found one of these cards hanging at his door later saw a large advertisement in the newspaper which further stimulalted his interest.

To aid the theater manager in these campaigns, Pathe prepared some novel paper on this subject and a large number of exhibitors are taking advantage of the offer of twenty-four sheets free provided the theater man will agree to post a certain fair quantity.

Gypsy Abbott with Mutual

Gypsy Abbott, a screen comedienne of wide experience, and Elsie Greason, who for the past eighteen months has been affiliated with Sileg productions, are the latest recruits to join forces with the Vogue-Mutual studios.

Miss Abbott is not a newcomer to Mutual followers by any means, having appeared in several of feature releases screened at the Horsley-Mutual studios. Previous to becoming a member of the Vogue-Mutual studios, Miss Abbott had been connected with the Balboa studios, where she played opposite Carlyle Blackwell in various feature productions.

Miss Abbott has been assigned as leading comedienne with Rube Miller and is now at work on her first Vogue-Mutual release, "Some Liars." Ben Turpin and Lillian Hamilton are also in the supporting cast.

The American Film Company is gradually accumulating a large zoo.

Extracts Profit From Tombstones

AMONG exhibitors in New York and Brooklyn, Samuel Schwartz is known as a showman who can instill life in and extract profit from theaters that have become veritable tombstones. It is difficult to believe that his formula is the simple one of playing to his patrons, for that is the keystone of the show business and is common knowledge, but to this practice alone does Mr. Schwartz credit his success.

Samuel Schwartz, pioneer Brooklyn exhibitor.

There are other factors, however, which have played prominent parts in the building up of the theaters which have come under the control of Schwartz and Muller. Most important of these is the faculty of seeing into the future and the ability to lose money cheerfully until the sunshine beyond the horizon has moved into the box office. In the early part of his picture experience Mr. Schwartz lost heavily and steadily, but stuck in the game.

One house he took over was doing from $5 to $7 worth of business every day in the week. It took months and months of steady plugging and plenty of expense to build up a regular patronage and good name for this theater, but both were spent on it, and at the end of two years Mr. Schwartz was $12,000 ahead on his enterprise.

At the time that Schwartz and Muller leased the West End Theater, a one thousand seat house in Brooklyn, it was barely paying expenses. During their first year they made a profit of $5,000 on it.

For the past eight months Samuel Schwartz and Oscar Muller have been the owners of the Oxford Theater at State street and Flatbush avenue in Brooklyn. It was on the market for three years before they bought it, but now it is not for sale at any price. It seats eight hundred people in its orchestra and balcony, has Powers 6A projection, a gold fibre screen, a splendid orchestra and an American Fotoplayer. In its architecture and furnishings it has everything that means beauty and comfort.

The Oxford charges ten and fifteen cents for admission, and runs Paramount, Metro, V-L-S-E, World Film and Triangle pictures. The latter are used twice a week, and are supplied by the Big T Film Company of Brooklyn. An attractive house program lists the coming productions, and gives a short synopsis of their themes. Mr. Schwartz believes that the natural evolution of the motion picture business will set eight or ten reels as the length of an evening performance, with twenty-five cents as the minimum admission price.

On the roll of the Brooklyn Exhibitors' League Mr. Schwartz is shown as a charter member. This speaks for his belief in organization. He has been an exhibitor for ten years, his beginning marking him as the first motion picture theater owner in Harlem, an extensive community in New York City, where he operated a "picture show" at One Hundred and Sixteenth street and Lenox avenue. He likes the business and enjoys the adversities and fight as much as the reward. His competitors' activities bear no interest to him. His first thought always is for his patrons. He arranges his entertainment according to their taste—not his own. And therefore he is a good showman.

The Name's the Thing

"Every exhibitor," says Eugene H. Roth, one of San Francisco's most prominent exhibitors, "will agree with me when I say that the title should be one of the most important things to be considered by the producer. It plays a most important part in deciding a person whether to go in or stay out of a theater. For Triangle, I can say nothing but words of praise for its titles. I have found them big magnets and I feel certain that the titles have had a lot to do with the box office receipts. For example take "Hell's Hinges.' There was a title that I dare say had as much to do with the success of the picture in my houses as did Hart's popularity. Why? Because it possessed that subtle something which compels the passer-by to go in, if only out of curiosity, and the regular patron to pass the word around among his friends."

Mr. Roth controls the Portola and Market Street theaters in San Francisco. He recently made a visit to the new Thomas H. Ince plant at Culver City, California.

Seattle Exhibitors Parade

By A. R. M. Sutton.

When Seattle and her neighboring towns marched, over 50,000 strong, in the preparedness parade on June 10th, the motion picture interests were not backward in showing on which side of the fence they stood, as may be seen in the accompanying picture.

Leading the column is the tall door man of the

The theatrical interests, headed by a door man and girl ushers, in the Seattle preparedness parade.

Coliseum. He is followed by the girl ushers of that theater in their military costumes, which worked into the scheme of the parade most effectively. Following these marched the girl ushers from the other theaters operated by The Greater Theaters Company, i. e., the Liberty, the Alhambra and the Mission.

The men employes of that company came next. C. S. Jensen, of Jensen and Von Herberg, managers for the company, is to be seen at the extreme right of the front line. Other theaters represented were the Palace Hippodrome, a combination vaudeville and motion picture house, and Pantages, which also shows vaudeville and motion pictures. At the end of the column walked a line of managers from several other motion picture houses.

It is this sort of aliveness that keeps the theatrical interests favorably before the eyes of the public.

Personality Brings Success

By W. R. and F. L. Walker,
Managers, Isis Theater, Anderson, Indiana.

Our policy has always been that what is worth doing at all is worth doing well. Some things we have never done that others have. Maybe we are wrong and they are right. We never give away prizes, never give souvenirs, never conduct contests, never have anything that smacks of gambling, never run any suggestive films, strenuously keeping away from white slave and others of like nature—and yet we often hang up the S. R. O. sign.

Some of the rules which we have always followed and which have established our reputation, are:

1. We insist on a good, clean program, and will shut our doors rather than run any other kind.

2. We are always on the job, either my father or I are always on the door with some word of greeting to each and all our patrons, both as they enter and as they pass out. We believe many a customer leaving a show and not particularly liking the program has been turned from such thoughts by a cheery "good night."

3. We always insist on decorum and good behavior and never fear or hesitate to call (kindly, of course), anyone disturbing others in the audience, and always tell our patrons when asked if we have a good program, the exact truth as to the show for the evening.

4. We have always paid our bills promptly, taking the discount when any was coming.

5. We keep a clean and sanitary place, well ventilated, warm and pleasant in winter and as cool as plenty of fans and good ventilation can make it in summer.

Personality, we believe, is possibly the largest contributor to our success.

We first engaged in the moving picture business in 1905, installing the first picture theater in Owensboro, Kentucky, at a total cost of $362. A twentieth century graphophone for music, both inside and out, using a double pipe arrangement, was installed, a Lubin moving picture machine costing $75.00 and cane bottom chairs at $4.50 per dozen. The program consisted of one reel for three days and two reels running for the week.

We also started the first picture house in Henderson, Kentucky, and altogether have started and sold twelve theaters. We were in Peru, Indiana, for better than six years, and sold out there in June, 1914, meaning to retire from business, but after one year of comparative idleness we concluded to get back into the game once more.

After traveling more than 2,600 miles, looking over a big part of Ohio, Indiana, Illinois and Michigan, and investigating some thirty prospects, we settled in Anderson, bought the oldest show house here, called the Nickelodeon, spent some $6,000 in remodeling it, and now no one would recognize the old Nickelodeon in the new Isis.

The theater was losing money when we bought it, but it is not losing any money now, as we have been operating it very successfuly since August 26, 1915.

Current Rialto Theater Offerings

The Rialto Theater's entertainment for the week of July 2 included William S. Hart in "The Captive God," Fay Tincher in a Keystone comedy, "Love's Getaway," an educational showing the scenic glories of Larch Mountain, Oregon and the City of Baalbek, and the Rialto Topics showing scenes along the Mexican frontier. Mme. Regina Vicarino, of the Boston Opera Company, especially re-engaged for another week, sang the "Prima Veris Valse," by Strauss; Frederick Gunther sang the Aria from "The Fortune Teller," by Herbert; and John Campbell sang "Ridi Pagliacci" by Leoncavallo.

Chicago Logical Producing Center

PRESIDENT FREULER ALSO TELLS OF MUTUAL COMPANY'S ANCESTRY

The very latest capture of Gertrude McCoy, Gaumont-Mutual light.

THE first move toward making Chicago the national distributing center for the film industry has been made by the Mutual Film Corporation in its decision to establish its office in the Windy City. In speaking of this change of location President John R. Freuler says, "Chicago is the logical center for national distribution and it offers special advantages for some purposes. For instance we can call meetings of our sixty-eight branch managers in Chicago with a minimum loss of time. I will maintain my office in New York and as usual I will be 'commuting' on the Twentieth Century. The New York offices will concern themselves more particularly with the problems of production while the Chicago offices will deal with distribution. Growing business in the middle west demands Chicago offices."

Another new policy established by the Mutual Company is the all-star production, meaning that for its features only well-known and well-established artists will be employed.

The birthplace of the Mutual Film Corporation was recently unearthed in the form of a photograph which President Freuler discovered among his possessions. It was the long forgotten Comique Theater on Kinnickinnic avenue, Milwaukee. Here Mr. Freuler was introduced to the motion picture business which led to the establishment of the Western Film Exchange of Milwaukee, which grew into a system of exchanges and finally developed into the Mutual Film Corporation. The film magnate is interested in the American Film Company, Inc., the Lone Star Corporation, which makes the Charles Chaplin Mutual specials, Thanhouser, Majestic-Reliance, New York Motion Picture Corporation, Vogue Films, Inc., States Film Corporation, North American Film Corporation and Signal Film Corporation. In addition he holds important interests in a number of other concerns in the picture making business. The development of all these concerns may be traced back to Mr. Freuler's interest in the business created by his connection with the little old Comique.

Four new players have been added to the Horsley-Mutual Company, Myra Davis Dowling, an actress of both legitimate and screen experience, who will support Margaret Gibson and William Clifford; Marguerite Foss, who has had several years of picture experience; Lloyd Holton, engaged as a member of Crane Wilbur's company; and Corine Bradford, known as "the girl on the cover," also assigned to Mr. Wilbur's company.

"Her American Prince," a five-part romantic drama in which Ormi Hawley and Bradley Barker have the leading roles, and "Dust," a five-act drama featuring Winnifred Greenwood and Franklin Ritchie, are the principal Mutual offerings for July 10 and 13.

"Quicksands of Deceit," is the three-reel feature in which Vivian Rich and Alfred Vosburg appear, ready for July 13. George Periolat and Queenie Rosson also appear in the cast.

Two part releases include "Love's Bitter Jealousy," an American production featuring Edward Coxen and Lizette Thorne, released July 10, and "Nuggett Jim's Partner," ready July 14, in which Frank Borzage is supported by Anna Little.

Crane Wilbur stars in the two-act feature "The Fool's Game," offered for July 15.

The laugh-provokers on this program are "Stung, by Gum," with Rube Miller and "A Deep Sea Liar," starring Ben Turpin, from the Vogue studios, for release July 11 and July 15, respectively. The Beauty contributions include "Two Slips and a Miss," with Carol Halloway and John Sheehan, for release July 12, and "The Rummy Act of Omar K. M." with Oral Humphrey, to be released July 16. George Ovey is the star of the Cub comedy "The Hero of the 'E. Z.' Ranch."

Mutual Weekly No. 80, for release July 12, presents a number of exclusive pictures taken in the various mobilization camps throughout the country and along the Mexican border. "See America First," the Mutual's popular scenic for release the same day, includes the second part of the trip through Glacier National Park in Montana. "Reel Life," the Mutual

Where Mutual's president made his debut into the motion picture business.

Film Magazine in pictures, for release July 16, is comprised of a number of unusually interesting subjects.

"The Sable Curse" has been chosen as the first vehicle for Richard Bennett on the Mutual program. Work has already begun on this feature at the American studio. Rhea Mitchell will be the leading lady and George Periolat and Adrian Morrison are also in the cast.

The Vogue-Mutual is producing three pictures weekly, and some new faces will be seen in these comedies. Gypsy Abbott and Elsie Green are the latest recruits. Rube Miller and Ben Turpin, assisted by Miss Abbott and Lillian Hamilton, are putting the finishing touches on "Some Liars;" while Jack Dillon, Paddy McQuire and Arthur Moon are the funmakers in "A Mix-up in Dry Goods."

William Russell and his company of players are now working on "The Torch Bearer." Charlotte Burton plays opposite Mr. Russell.

Among the two-reel subjects under way are "The Key," under the direction of Alfred Hollingsworth; "The Courtin' of Callilope Clow," a Mustang-Mutual presenting Frank Borzage and Anna Little; "Sandy, Reformer," another Mustang offering with Art Acord and Helene Rosson; "That Sharp Note," the first of the two-reel Beauty comedies featuring John Sheehan, Carol Halloway and John Steppling.

Gertrude McCoy is working in a three-act Gaumont-Mutual entitled "Gates of Divorce." Alexander Gaden plays opposite Miss McCoy and Lucille Taft, John Reinhard, Iva Shepard, Charles W. Travis, Albert Macklin and Fritz Orlamond make up the balance of the cast.

Director General J. P. McGowan of the Signal-Mutual studios has completed work on "Judith of the Cumberlands" in which Helen Holmes enacts the title role.

FOLLIES STAR SCREENED

Bert Williams, Star Comedian of Ziegfeld Follies, to Be Featured in Two-Reel Biograph Comedies Through General

The announcement of the Biograph Company to the effect that they will feature Bert Williams in a series of two-reel comedies, should come as an agreeable surprise to the exhibitors. Little need be said about the popularity of Bert Williams—he is known everywhere. The fact that he has again been chosen as the star comedian of the Ziegfeld Follies, just opened at the New Amsterdam Theater, New York, bespeaks his box office drawing power.

Bert Williams,—the celebrated comedian who works "in the dark,"—in one of his new Biograph comedies.

The laugh producing expressions of Bert Williams are especially adaptable to pictures—his droll pantomime being doubly effective on the screen. His initial release embodies much of the work that has won him favor on the stage, including his famous pantomime poker game, which is welcomed by his army of followers the country over in the Ziegfeld Follies each year. In "A Natural Born Gambler," his first two-reel comedy released July 24, through the General Film Exchanges, Bert Williams has lost none of his rich humor. He is funny without leaning toward slapstick, and all those who have seen it agree that the comedy as it is produced will meet with the expectations of the large audiences who are familiar with the comedian's work and who will be attracted by the film.

VITAGRAPH'S LATEST

Edith Storey in "The Tarantula"—Robert Edeson Takes Dual Role in "Fathers of Men"—New Daniels Comedy

The latest Vitagraph Blue Ribbon Feature, "The Tarantula," will be released on July 17. Edith Storey takes the leading part in this five-part play, assisted by Charles Kent, Eulalie Jensen, L. Rogers Lytton, Harry Hollingsworth, Emmanuel A. Turner, Raymond Walburn, Harold Foshay, Gordon Gray and Templar Saxe.

On July 10 "Fathers of Men," a six-part Vitagraph Blue Ribbon Feature was given to the public through V. L. S. E. This drama was written by James Oliver Curwood and in it Robert Edeson is seen in a dual role, supported by Naomi Childers, William Humphrey, Bobby Connelly, Harry Northrup, Stanley Dunn, Kalman Matus, Logan Paul, Robert Gaillard, Carolyn Birch and Betty Howe.

"Kernel Nutt the Piano Tuner" will also be released through the Big Four on the same date. This is a one part comedy featuring Frank Daniels. Olive Trevor, William Shea and Donald MacBride also appear in the cast.

Lillian Walker has been chosen as the star of Sophie Kerr's story, "The Blue Envelope," which is now running in the Woman's Home Companion. Wilfred North is directing this play and work has already begun on the important scenes. The story as prepared for the screen will harmonize with the movement for better films inaugurated by the magazine.

Earle Williams and Edith Storey are working in another chapter of the famous "Scarlet Runner" series by C. N. and A. M. Williamson, being produced for the Vitagraph by Wally Van. Julia Swayne Gordon, another Vitagraph favorite, also appears in the cast.

A three-part Broadway Star Feature by Edgar Cove, dealing with life in the theater, is now in course of production under the direction of Van Dyke Brooke. Leah Baird is the fatured member of an all-star cast.

Evart Overton, whose work in Vitagraph photoplays has won him a place in the foremost rank of screen stars, is seen as a member of a band of hoboes in his latest release. James Oliver Curwood is the author of the story, whose filming was supervised by Eugene Mullin.

Volume XVI CHICAGO, JULY 15, 1916 Number 3

The Executive Secretaryship and Other League Matters

ONE of the many things the Chicago convention will discuss is the project of appointing an executive secretary on salary as a permanent League representative. For many reasons we regard this as one of the most important of the problems to be decided.

To all intents and purposes the executive secretary of an association is the association. The old members, of course, make their appeals and transact their business with the president, the vice-presidents, or whomever they may happen to know among the officers and directors. But to the new members, the prospective members, the general public and the people who write or call to get their questions answered, the permanent secretary is the life principle of the association.

In the work of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America—or of any other similar association, for that matter—the point of contact with new and prospective members and with the public is most important. On it depends the growth, the power and the effectiveness of the whole League. The permanent executive secretary is, of course, the point of contact. He represents the old members to the new members, and he represents the abstract principle of the association to the world. Besides that, incidentally, he does the work of the association. He is its business manager, and to try to get along without him is to do no business—or at least to do it only once a year, at the convention.

An efficient executive secretary expands the one week's work per annum of the convention to fifty-two weeks' work per annum; and the association's effectiveness is thereby multiplied many times.

While the executive secretary is doing the work of the League, while he is expected to embody the League in one individual, he must live. Hence, the salary. He must live without the haunting consciousness that his family would be better off if he were doing something else; his salary must be as satisfactory, all things considered, as any income he could reasonably expect from some other activity without investment.

The committee suggests six thousand dollars a year as an appropriate figure for the office. It is none too much for an experienced and efficient man. And yet, as salaries go in the industrial market, it makes a good job, big enough to gain the respect of competent men, and to command all of their time. The figure is equitable to both employer and employe, and we see no reason for anyone to suggest any change in it.

However, we think all voting members of the League are agreed on the advisability of appointing a permanent, salaried executive secretary. So the question, important as it is, will probably present little difficulty to the convention, most of the discussion promising to hinge on the proper incumbent for the responsible office. Upon this subject we have no suggestions to offer, except to say that those who have studied the situation and its demands may be trusted to put forward a desirable candidate.

There are many other subjects crying for the discussion of the convention, and they are all so important that we hope nothing will clog up the program or interfere with its movement.

Nor, on the other hand, should any one subject be allowed, by virtue of its apparent importance, to usurp all the attention of the sessions and leave others of equal magnitude without adequate consideration.

It is not at all easy, where every man present is vitally interested and wants to give his particular angle of the question, to hold down discussion to the exact time necessary for a definite conclusion and no more. Yet this is just what the convention officers will strive to do if they wish to close the last session with the feeling its work is done, and well done.

The subject of censorship is good for an unlimited amount of talk. While it is rather quiescent just now, it is always a live and exciting topic. Yet we venture to say that all the necessary discussion to determine the League's attitude toward it and future activities concerning can be completed in a couple of hours—and most of that by the resolutions committee. And the same may be said for the subject of Sunday closing, which, important as it is, offers little really valuable material for long-winded and time-consuming discussion.

On the question of amending the League's constitution to offer membership to manufacturers, we have already expressed ourselves. We expect to see very little opposition to this movement, and so believe it will consume little time. Not much is gained by encouraging oratory on subjects that are already self-evident, and on which both speaker and audience are agreed at the outset.

Every local and branch of the League brings with it subjects of purely local importance, yet to which the whole body of the convention should give respectful ear. The motion picture is peculiarly national in its scope, and the problems that confront one state or city today will be the problems of other states and cities tomorrow. Particularly is this true of the freak legislation that continues to assail this industry here and there, and to the eradication of which the whole League may well bend its energies.

The question of unfair competition in exhibiting, since it practically constitutes the platform of one presidential candidate, is bound to come in for a good deal of study. No one can question its vital importance; but whether there is any cure for it remains to be divulged, we hope, at the convention.

We refer, of course, to the kind of competition created by the layman, the raw novice, who becomes an exhibitor because of the apparent success of a showman already established in his territory. He is attracted by what looks so much like easy money that he does not even check it up to see if it is real. The less he knows about the business the more ready and eager he is to get into it. And because of the proverbial fickleness of the pleasure-seeking public he manages, with all his ignorance, to take away just enough of the old showman's patronage to make a losing business for both.

Obviously that condition is good for neither exhibitor nor public, nor exchange, nor manufacturer. It tends to put the whole business on a doubtful, hazardous, discouraging basis—which is bad for everybody. The exhibitor is the primary sufferer, because he sees his permanently built property made useless and his investment rendered profitless without even a way out. The manufacturer feels the economic weight of the situation when he gains one customer for a few months, and then loses two.

That the manufacturer may recognize the seriousness of this loss is the only hope we see for correcting it. With all the manufacturers members of the League, there would at least be the chance of appeal to them, as fellow members, to deny their service to the man who attempts to establish another theater in an already saturated neighborhood.

We do not know whether or not that is the plan of that presidential candidate whose platform is laid upon the elimination of unfair competition. Possibly he has a different and better scheme. If he has, so much the better; the more ways there are in sight for curing the evil, the better for the future of the business.

In other lines of merchandising, wholesalers protect their dealers in their respective territories. Little of that protection has been granted in the picture business, which by its nature demands more, rather than less, than other industries.

The situation demands not merely the protection of certain exhibitors by certain manufacturers, but the protection of all exhibitors by all manufacturers. The rights of both parties to such an arrangement are, we are certain, morally and legally unassailable. And the only way in which the desirable condition can be brought about is through the admission of all the manufacturers to membership in the Exhibitors' League.

"Split Reel" Notes for Theater Men

HOW OTHERS ARE STEERING THE SHIP

THE working people of Danville, Illinois, can now enjoy pictures on Sunday. An ordinance permitting Sunday shows has gone into effect without the signature of the mayor.

The Essanay Film Service is going to open an office in Dame street, Dublin. Mr. Barker will be in charge.

Business men of Wichita, Kansas, are passing around to the voters petitions calling for an election on the repeal of the Sunday closing ordinance.

A petition signed by 552 residents of Crookston, Minnesota, has been presented to the mayor, asking for the closing of all theaters to which admission is charged on Sunday.

L. G. Roesner, manager of the Colonial Theater, Winona, Minnesota, was visited by thieves and is the poorer by about $500. The cracksmen blasted the door of the safe with nitro-glycerine.

Dallas street scenes, buildings, etc., shown on a moving picture machine made in Dallas and operated by a Dallas man, were a feature of the Advertising Clubs of the World convention at Philadelphia.

Ever see a preacher run a projection machine? There's one in Brooklyn, New York, who is taking a course of lessons in running a real picture show so that he may be able to present films in his church.

L. C. Pope, manager of the Torquay Electric Theater, has been granted exemption from military service until August 15, so that he may instruct his wife how to carry on the business in his absence.

Carl W. Spreen, manager of the Happy Hour Theater, Milwaukee, Wisconsin, was found dead in the elevator shaft of the Manhattan building last week. It is thought that Mr. Spreen fell through an open elevator door.

Norway Film Company is the name of a new corporation of Minneapolis. The incorporators are G. H. and Samuel Kaufman, M. H. Wingate, Harry Rosenberg and Max Robinowitz. The capital stock is $500,000.

Max Levine, manager of a motion picture theater at Buffalo, N. Y., was fined $50 on the complaint of the Children's Aid Society that he was admitting children to his theater unaccompanied by parents or guardians.

Ladies and girls attending theaters where "The Mysteries of Myra" is being shown will receive small powder puffs which have been prepared by the International Film Service, Inc., in addition to other catchy advertising novelties.

The Rothacker Film Manufacturing Company of Chicago is preparing to build a complete studio at the national convention July 10-18. Mr. Rothacker is planning to take pictures of those attending the show one day and show them on the screen the next.

J. I. Schnitzer, Charles Rauh and Robert Lieber, directors of the Interstate Historical Pictures Corporation have announced that a percentage of the receipts from the showing of "Indiana" will be used to furnish luxuries for the Indiana National Guard at the front.

L. L. Devereaux, manager of the Blackstone Theater, New Rockford, North Dakota, has been remodeling his house since the fire which did a great deal of damage. While the theater is being repaired this energetic manager is showing his pictures in a large tent.

Harry V. Side, manager of the Monroe Theater, Omaha, Nebraska, had a miniature submarine made and paraded around town on a small wagon to advertise the "Secret of the Submarine" serial. The boat was complete in every exterior detail and attracted much attention.

The exhibitors from Des Moines, Iowa, will come to the Chicago convention in a special car attached to the regular train running into Chicago on the opening day, and the Minnesota exhibitors have also announced their intention of getting a special car to carry them to the show.

Showing how picture interests may work with a municipality, Hobart Bosworth has stated to the city of San Mateo, California, that he will move his producing studios there if the city will put up $15,000 to be spent on necessary equipment. It is probable that the city will do so.

The farmers living near Centerville, Michigan, know how much they are missing because of the lack of a picture house in the village. Fifty of them have joined with business men of the town and the combine is erecting a 55-seater costing $10,000. Who said the farmer is not progressive?

The Women's Council of Chattanooga, Tennessee, has been very much incensed by the objectionable plays which have recently been shown in that city and has threatened to take the matter of censorship up with the city commission unless the exhibitors are more careful of the kind of films shown.

The Lyceum Theater, New York, has invited any member of the National Guard or Regular Army in uniform to be its guest at the showing of "How Britain Prepared." Secretary of War Baker said he wished every soldier or prospective soldier in the United States could see this picture to learn the lesson it teaches.

The Theater Visalia of San Francisco, California, has joined the ranks of exclusive Paramount houses. W. R. Spaulding, head of the association which owns the playhouse, has contracted for six nights of Paramount Pictures each week with the additional feature of the Burton Holmes Travel Pictures on Wednesday night.

The Columbia Park Boys' Club of San Francisco, composed of forty-two boys, was the guest of the Rialto Theater, New York. The boys, ranging from twelve to twenty-one years of age, represent the squad given an educational tour this summer. The club is paying its expenses by entertainments given en tour.

Declaring that he lost his theater through malicious attachment proceedings, R. R. Knight, of Los Angeles, has filed suit against Harry F. Maidenberg demanding $76,000 damages. He states that he was owner of the house and was deriving a profit of $30 a day when Maidenberg gained possession through a twist of law.

The Strand Theater of Minneapolis issued a very complete pamphlet about six by ten in size to advertise "Where Are My Children?" and to explain to the public the purpose of the picture. The results of the distribution of these were very satisfactory. The Minneapolis Board of Censors prohibited children from viewing the feature.

The city authorities of Montclair, New Jersey, have refused to allow an open airdome to be opened. Two citizens recently asked for a permit on the ground that they wished to keep the servant girls of Montclair from seeking such amusement elsewhere. The authorities contended that the one theater now running was ample for the needs of the community.

Managers of the Grand Theater in Fort Madison, Iowa, attract the interest of the housewife to their weekly programs by printing recipes for various delicacies on the reverse side. The latest to be featured was Paramount grape fruit jelly. The Grand program is a card three and three-fourths by seven, which carries announcements of the week's attractions on one side and advertising on the other.

E. B. Jones, of Springfield, Illinois, is ready to start on tour with his new moving picture palace. He will travel by rail to all parts of the country, exhibiting in small towns. The first trip will take in towns in Indiana, Illinois, Iowa, Wisconsin and Michigan. Jones holds contracts for 30,000 feet of films and has installed in his car a fireproof booth. His machine is said to be excellent. The car is electrically lighted and seats 150 people.

The first issue of Selling and Management, the official house organ of the Triangle Film Corporation has just come from the press. It is an attractive eight-page magazine and is devoted exclusively to matters of interest to all those engaged in any capacity with the Triangle company. House publications, heretofore, have been confined almost exclusively to the big utility corporations and in the moving picture field this one is a decided novelty.

Clifford V. Ansley, manager of the Palace Theater Hamilton, N. Y., has been forced out of business by the raids of the Colgate College students. They have invaded the theater on fifteen different times and frightened the women and children in the audience so much that they would not attend the theater again. Manager Ansley has sued forty-three of the students for $10,000 damages, claiming that they forced him out of business.

The Empress News, published by the management of the Empress Theater, and "edited with the assistance of everybody about the theater," is a truly "homey" program, written entirely from the viewpoint that everyone is interested in everything at the theater and in everyone who attends. Besides a page devoted to the regular weekly program it carries departments devoted to "Kompliments and Kicks," "Personal Patter," and "Plays and Players," as well as notes about the plays and the film industry, and much general information about the theater.

Mayor John Berwald of Davenport, Iowa, made a tour of inspection of the motion picture theaters of that city and scored a number of them roundly. He claimed that many of the smaller houses were absolutely disregarding the safety of the people in case of fire, while the larger houses were doing all in their power to protect their patrons. The mayor took this matter up immediately with the proper authorities and will do all in his power to see that conditions are improved where needed.

Six Chicago theaters, located in the residence section at Wilson avenue, jointly issue The Weekly Movie Record, a 16-page magazinelet about the size of the American magazine. The houses represented are the De Luxe, Clifton, Bryn Mawr, Kenmore and Ascher's Lakeside. The program for each week at each house is given and the remainder of the space is given over to a good selection of photoplay news and advertisements. The booklet is given away at each theater.

Managers of the Calhoun Theater on Lake street, Milwaukee, Wisconsin, which shows the Paramount features, deserve special commendation for the program which was issued on the first anniversary of their house. The program was a twelve-page booklet with a particularly attractive cover, a well-drawn sketch printed in soft brown sepia ink. The advertising pages were particularly well laid out and the program of the week was stretched through the entire book in belt form, with coming attractions featured on the back cover.

Exhibitors of Cleveland, Ohio, are still discussing the question of closing their houses during the month of July, or a portion of that month. The theaters whose heads have expressed a favorable attitude toward the plan, the idea of which is to stimulate the patronage later in the season are the Gordon Park Theater, Colonial, Lincoln, Manhattan, Fulton, Funland, Columbia, Boulevard, Marquis, Randall, Park View, Edison, Delmar, Virginia, Castle, Nixon, Fountain, Globe, Crescent and Chic. Sam Bullock and a committee of three are working to secure replies on the project from all the houses in the city.

"Could you eat eleven pounds of beefsteak?" The foregoing line is one of the eye-catching heads used in Rex Reels, the organ published by W. R. Patton of the Rex Theater of St. Anthony, Idaho. The paragraph then goes on to describe the joys of eating fine steak, but the impossibility of enjoying eleven pounds of it at a sitting. "Same way with pictures," the writer goes on. "If, when you come into the Rex I stuffed you for three hours and a half with the best 'porterhouse' class of pictures money could bring here, I would expect you to go away so full of pictures—and weariness—that for a week you would feel like you wouldn't give a nickel to see the battle of Gettysburg 'picturized' with all the original actors in the cast."

And Brother Patton is right.

First Aid to Theater Men

S. L. Rothapfel, director Rialto Theater, New York.

AT this time of year when all business people are beginning to talk about summer vacations I would like to put in a plea with every exhibitor in the country before he makes plans for all his spare time to save at least a few days if not the whole week from July 10 to 18 to attend the convention in Chicago. The convention needs every exhibitor and every exhibitor needs the convention. You may rest assured that this will be a wise investment of both time and money for you will return home so full of ideas for bettering your theater and so fully imbued with a spirit of ambition that the results will immediately be felt in your business. It is the up-to-date man who is going to succeed—the man who is always looking for new ideas—who believes that every suggestion he can receive from someone else who has had experience will be to his advantage—who is going to get ahead. And where can you find a more fertile field for gathering these new ideas, these helpful experiences than at a convening of exhibitors from all parts of the country, each one with a different problem which he has had to meet and solve. So don't forget to put aside part of your vacation to be spent in Chicago, and reap the full reward which will be awaiting you there.

43. Please send me a list of cities and towns where it is necessary to secure permits from Censor Boards and give me some idea of the ordinances covering the exhibition of moving pictures if possible. The final plans in organizing a talking film corporation are being perfected and this information would be of value to me.

You have given me rather a broad subject to cover but I will give you as much information as I possess on these matters and trust it will answer your purpose.

Fort Smith, Arkansas, has inadequate laws and no proper censorship but this matter rests in the hands of the chief of police and instructions have been given to the night captain to stop without hesitation the running of any film which he thinks is improper.

Los Angeles, California, has a board of censors consisting of seven members whose duty it is to enforce the ordinance prohibiting the showing of any objectionable pictures. No theater is allowed to display any films until three days after a list of the subjects is furnished to the board of censors.

In Hartford, Connecticut, the mayor is considered the guardian of the public's morals and he has authority to revoke the license of any theater which exhibits objectionable pictures; while in New Haven the chief of police or a police officer delegated by him has supervision of the city and only such films are allowed to be shown as have been endorsed by the National Board of Review. The state law of Connecticut places the granting of licenses and the general supervision of picture theaters under the control of the superintendent of the state police.

Detroit, Michigan, has an ordinance to the effect that the commissioner or superintendent of police shall inspect all films and report to the mayor and this report guides in the issuing of a license or revoking a license after it has been issued.

Kansas City, Missouri, has a censor of films and a board of appeals consisting of three members, to which people may appeal if they are aggrieved by any action of the censor. No films can be rented, sold or exhibited without permission of the city censor.

Jackson, Mississippi, has a very lengthy ordinance covering all points pertaining to motion picture theaters which has been approved by the National Board of Underwriters and the Mississippi Advisory Rating Bureau, and also has a motion picture censor.

South Omaha, Nebraska, has a rather indefinite ordinance regarding the exhibiting of motion pictures. The licenses are issued by the fire and police commissioners and they have appointed a woman member of the police department whose principal duty is the censoring of films.

In New York City there is no official board of city censors but the National Board of Review governs the approval and disapproval of films in this city.

Portland, Oregon, has one short ordinance which prohibits the exhibition of immoral pictures and empowers the police to sieze a reel when the picture has been condemned. The only court of appeals is the municipal judge. They have a board of censors composed of women of the various clubs who give their service gratis for the reviewing of the films.

While Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, has no ordinance covering the exhibiting of motion pictures they do not allow anything shown which has not been passed by the National Board of Review.

In San Francisco a permit for exhibiting pictures must be obtained from the board of police commissioners, and an advisory committee censors all pictures before they are allowed to be exhibited.

A number of cities have no ordinance whatever covering this question but the police department regulates the pictures exhibited by reporting any immoral films which are shown. Among these are Boise City, Idaho; Rockford, Illinois; South Bend, Indiana; the state of Delaware; Lexington, Kentucky; Topeka, Kansas; Alexandria, Louisiana; Baltimore, Maryland; Minneapolis and St. Paul, Minnesota; Meridian and Vicksburg, Mississippi; Lincoln, Nebraska; Syracuse, New York; Concord, New Hampshire; Raleigh, North Carolina; Carson City and Reno, Nevada; Albany, New York; Columbus, Dayton, Cleveland, Ohio; Columbia, South Carolina; Chattanooga, Tennessee; Charleston, West Virginia; and Cheyenne, Wyoming.

44. What kind of sign is best to advertise my theater? Is a sign going out over the street better than one over the door of the theater? Do you think an electric sign is worth what it costs? Don't you think a cloth banner which can be changed once a week to make variety is better than an electric sign which is always the same?

These and numerous other questions regarding advertising signs for moving picture theaters have been asked me by many people and I will endeavor to answer all inquiries in the one treatise on this subject.

It is difficult to give any definite advice regarding signs because the kind and method of use will be governed entirely by conditions. The theater located in a residential district and the downtown theater would be governed differently. The house which has no competition would not need as much advertising in this line as one which is one of a number of theaters. Also a great deal depends upon the size of the theater, the amount of business it is doing, the admission price it is charging, and so forth, as to which kind of sign is the most suitable.

The fundamental function of the sign is to advertise, and it is a wise exhibitor who puts the very largest amount he can possibly afford into this kind of publicity. Anything original or out of the ordinary is very desirable for the sign is designed to catch the attention and interest of the passerby and allure him into coming into the theater.

There are two classes of signs—permanent and temporary. Under the head of permanents would come the sign which carries the name of the theater and perhaps the admission price, or tells what kind of entertainment is given in this house. The permanent sign should be an electric one for no matter how small a theater some kind of an iluminated representation is possible and the bright glare of the lights gives the best publicity. Regardless of the number of posters, banners and other varieties of sign you have always use an electric one too. The current expended in the illumination is insignificant when compared with the results it brings in the way of increased patronage.

There are any number of different varieties of electric signs—the box with the lights all around, those with lights above only throwing their illumination down upon the words, others with the letters studded with lights, skeleton letters made up entirely of lights, those using intermittent current, or very elaborate ones may be planned if the exhibitor so desires and thinks it advisable.

The electric sign should be arranged in the most conspicuous position and placed so that it will be readily seen from a distance, and from all sides. The sign which is flat above the entrance cannot be seen as quickly as one which extends out over the sidewalk. The flat sign may attract attention as one comes near the theater or if they are walking on the other side of the street but the projecting sign can be seen for blocks both ways and will catch the eye at a greater distance. Also the intermittent sign will usually attract more attention than the steady glow for as it moves or flashes off and on it attracts immediate attention.

The temporary signs include a numberless variety destined to be used only for a short time and which are displayed inside the lobby or outside the theater. Chief among these are the banners or posters which are utilized to advertise a particular actress, some special feature, etc., and are changed from day to day or week to week as needed. The banners are generally made of stout muslin with the wording painted on them and they may exploit the name of the film, the principal player, the producing company—or all three. Some managers vary these by making the catch line refer to the players for a while, then changing to the title of the film and so forth. One exhibitor quotes an incident which made him appreciate the value of varying his headline in this way. He had always devoted the first line to the name of the producer, the second to the player and the third to the title of the feature. One day while standing in the lobby he heard five different people pass along, read his banner, and then say "Fox pictures! Oh, I have seen Fox pictures before. Let's go on and see if the next theater hasn't something new." He immediately decided that as long as the public would not stop to consider that one manufacturer puts out more than one picture he would better advertise the players, so he changed his signs thereafter to advertise only the actors and the story in which they appeared. Another exhibitor says the people ask that he show the producer's name each time as they are then able to judge to some extent themselves what kind of play is showing because they know what style the different companies release. Sometimes it is best to simply classify the play as "a roaring farce tonight," or "a beautiful picture in natural colors," or a "thrilling drama." Some people do not care what company or players are represented but do like to know something about the character of the feature shown. The exhibitor by studying his patrons and his locality can judge just what will be the most attractive to them and then play this point up large in his advertising slogans.

The same rule holds true with any kind of banners as with the permanent signs, they attract more attention if thrown out over the sidewalk so they can be seen from all directions, also have plenty of bright lights around them so they can be easily read and will be more attractive. In all signs, whether permanent or temporary care should be taken that they are simple. Do not try to crowd too much into the sign, and be sure the letters are large and clear or half the value of the desired publicity is lost. A good place for the banner is directly under the permanent sign as it will surely be seen, the one enhances the other and all the advertising is displayed before the public eye at once.

The posters and announcement boards at the front of the theater or on the sidewalk also come under the head of the temporary advertisers. These usually portray scenes from the play and are intended to give the casual passerby an idea of the kind of film being shown. It is also well to have regular bulletin boards beside the door or in a conspicuous place giving the program for the evening including the producer's name, the actors' names and just a descriptive line as to the kind of play.

The clever and progressive exhibitor can think of any number of good ways of advertising his program and his theater, and from a study of his patrons know just what will attract them and also by studying the general location and habits of the people who are possible patrons be able to entice them by his flaunting signs to walk past the theater at least, and usually if you can get them as near as the door they will be curious enough to go in. The points to be carried in mind in the choosing of a sign are to make it conspicuous, use plenty of lights, and make your sign different from that of your competitors.

The Rothacker Film Manufacturing Company had three camera crews, with special lighting equipment, on the job at the Congress hotel during the Republican and Progressive conventions. The same crews covered the Democratic convention at St. Louis. Another crew is in Toledo winding in scenes from a women's convention.

Chicago as Producing Center

ESSANAY COMPANY PROVES POSSIBILITIES OF MIDDLE WEST

NOT only has Chicago proved to be the logical distributing center of the country, but Essanay believes it has proved it to be of the greatest advantage as a producing center.

Since the time he was a pioneer in pictures President George K. Spoor believed that Chicago and the territory adjacent thereto offered as wonderful locations as any other section of the country. While he led the way in the original rush to California and for years divided production between his Chicago, Niles and Los Angeles studios, he never lost faith in the former city. He is yet to be disappointed in his selection of Chicago early in the year for every foot of his pictures.

In filming "The Sting of Victory," Henry B. Walthall's next feature, now half completed, beautiful mansions of southern design were to be found in numbers at Lake Forest, Chicago's millionaire suburb. Just north of this is an excellent battlefield location, Camp Logan. In normal times there are the soldiers of Fort Sheridan, in the same locality, and the boys of the Great Lakes training station, together with numerous Chicago guard regiments to draw on.

Just as the beautiful north shore can furnish southern homes or Italian villas with equal ease, so can the city proper give any desired architecture. William Gillette found in Chicago locations which duplicated the worst parts of London for his "Sherlock Holmes," perhaps one of the most difficult films ever made so far as keeping true to type was concerned.

Lake Michigan can look like an ocean any time a camera is trained on it and if other aquatic scenes are desired the most beautiful lake region in the country lies only an hour or two away in Wisconsin.

In northern Wisconsin the primeval wilderness stands preserved in state parks. Thus, when such a setting was required for "The Return of Eve," Edna Mayo's next feature, it was a simple matter to transport a company to the famous Dells of the Wisconsin river, where the territory still is to be seen as it lay when the Chippewas roamed over it before the coming of the white men.

It is possible with Chicago as the center to film the bustling twentieth century business activities and nature at its simplest with one camera all in the same day.

For rural beauty central Illinois, especially that portion around Starved Rock, is famous throughout the country. Essanay has used the locality scores of times.

Essanay has never yet found a play for which an ideal setting could not be located within a night ride of Chicago. This is as President Spoor predicted.

From the motion picture angle it would seem that with the thousands of available locations in and about Chicago hundreds of millions of dollars have been spent to make ideal backgrounds for the film.

For indoor scenes Essanay has found that artificial lights produce just as beautiful photography as that of the sun. And with the advantage of Chicago as a distributing center, Essanay believes its argument for the central west has been proved.

There will be no lessening of efforts at the Essanay studios during the summer months. On the contrary production will be continued with the consistent average that has been maintained in months past. The latest five-act play for V. L. S. E. distribution is "Lost Twenty-four Hours." Essanay's largest studio is now occupied with sets for Henry B. Walthall's latest feature, "The Sting of Victory." Edna Mayo and company are at the Dells of the Wisconsin river, working out of Kilbourn, Wis., for scenes in "The Return of Eve," a five-act feature.

Essanay's New Studio

The new Essanay studio in Chicago has so greatly facilitated production that the company now has completed plays clear through the month of September. The company has now three studios in operation at 1333 Argyle street, on the north side of the city, and can take care of both features and short subjects at the same time with ease.

The new studio, said to be the largest indoor, artificially lighted studio in the world, is 350 feet long by 175 feet wide. On the east side of the old building there is an extension for factory purposes, while in the center there is a large portico, so that the building as it now stands forms a perfect "E."

The main offices have been moved to the new studio building. To the right of the entrance is a large carpenter shop and back of this is the studio proper, stretching back to the rear of the building.

The front of the building, on the second floor, is devoted to the main offices, including that of George K. Spoor, president of Essanay, and other officials.

"The Valiants of Virginia," the Selig Red Seal Play released through V-L-S-E, had its premiere at the V-L-S-E theater, Chicago, beginning July 2. The drama made an immediate hit.

Motion picture men recently captured Presidential Nominee Charles Evans Hughes. They made an arrangement with him by which he gave them a half day of his time.

"CIVILIZATION" IN CHICAGO

Appreciative Audience Packs Cohan's Grand at Chicago Premier—Hundreds Turned Away—Thomas Ince Speaks

With every seat in the house filled, a line of ticket seekers extending from the box office to the street, and hundreds turned away, Thomas H. Ince's great message of peace, "Civilization," opened at Cohan's Grand in Chicago on June 30. That the public will support a high-priced motion picture when it feels the production is worth it was most ably demonstrated.

One of the impressive scenes from Ince's "Civilization," and Enid Markey, who carries the feminine lead with honors.

Familiar with the horrors of the great European war, and with many in the audience who themselves so recently said good-bye to husbands, fathers and sweethearts as the Chicago troops marched away to the Mexican border, the people came to the theater in a receptive mood ready to thoroughly appreciate a spectacle of this nature. And it was a most enthusiastic audience easily swayed by the picture from cheers and loud applause to breathless awe and shuddering hatred of the demon war, to laughter and finally to tears as the soldier boys came marching home rejoicing that peace had come, and many sad and longing faces were turned away as the heroes marched by and the loved ones they sought were not in the line.

As the curtain descended on the closing scene there was a thunder of applause and cries of "Thomas Ince! Speech! Ince! Ince!" and the creator of this masterpiece stepped upon the stage evidently deeply moved by the enthusiasm which his work had wrought. In a few words he thanked the people of Chicago for the hearty approval they have given his production, and said that after he and his assistants had spent many months of labor to make the drama perfect in every way and through it spread the gospel of peace to the American people, he felt very grateful that their efforts had been so enthusiastically sanctioned.

Seldom has the Chicago press been so universally commendatory in its reviews of a film drama.

Kitty Kelly of the Tribune described it as "one of the world's biggest photoplay achievements." She goes on:

> Here we have in many places the motion picture sublimated into a thing of such sheer intangible beauty as to make one lose intellectual conscience of what was before one. Some of the battle scenes are referred to. With the use of exquisite coloring and photography of fine quality there were wrought actual poems in pictures, which is the nearest way of describing beauties of a texture for which our language has no word.

Ashton Stevens, Examiner, characterizes it as the greatest battle drama ever enacted.

> It is a sermon. But it is pictured in fire and blood. There is no escape from its utter drama. It rushes you on and on, breathless for the sequel. It takes you miles away from the four tight walls of a theater. A whole vast country is the stage—fields, roads, villages and cities, the sea and down in the deeps of the sea, and far into the air above in biplane and gas ship. Victor L. Schertzinger's orchestral score is tellingly simple. It is written in the musical idiom of the people. It "gets over" like a popular song.

Louella O. Parsons, the Herald critic, wrote:

> "Civilization" carried the audience into a mythical land of strife, where home, family and humanity are forgotten. It is the creation of a dreamer, a poetical daydream painted in the colors of battle to strengthen the illusion. From the standpoint of lighting effects, exceptional photography and elaborate scenes, nothing better has yet been offered in pictures.

Charles Collins of the Post:

> "Civilization" is a fine, gaudy, explosive fable in the cinematograph's one-syllable imagination. The battle scenes, peopled with fighting men and tormented with hell-fire, are thrilling; the sentimental scenes have telling appeal to those who respond to the emotions of the screen.

W. K. Hollander of the News:

> It is a wonder play. Startling circumstances follow in rapid succession, each eclipsing the preceding ones in magnificence and awe inspiring aspect, until the brain is in a whirl from all the seemingly impossible and surprising events unfolded to view. Miracles appear to be performed before the very eyes of the spectators. The camera has been taxed to its utmost and has responded to the magic touch of its operator without wavering or in the least disclosing how the mysterious and tremendous effects, so thrilling and inspiring, were accomplished.

Sixteen states have already been disposed of to state right buyers for "Civilization," and there is scarcely a state in the Union or any territory on the two continents for which negotiations are not taking place. Representatives are conferring with Ince for prices on Brazil, Argentine Republic, Uruguay, Peru, Trinidad, Cuba, South America and Australia. The majority of the western territory was sold two weeks before "Civilization" had its premier in Chicago.

Leander Richardson is now in Chicago in advance of "Civilization," and later his mission will carry him all over the United States and also to Europe.

Alec Larimore has been appointed by Ince as office manager and organizer of the new suite of "Civilization" offices in the Times building, New York.

Hart in Aztec Story

William S. Hart, America's favorite "western hero," soon will be seen in the long-awaited "Aztec story," in which he has been working at Inceville, when he is presented by Thomas H. Ince in "The Captive God." This Triangle-Kay Bee play is from the pen of Monte M. Katterjohn and offers Hart in a role that is totally unlike anything he ever has attempted since his desertion of the footlights for the film studio. The part is that of a stalwart Castilian who, shipwrecked in the early part of the sixteenth century, is adopted by the people of Tehuan and made their leader because of his superior wisdom.

Wilfred Lucas will son be seen on the Triangle programme in "Hell to Pay Austin." Bessie Love plays opposite him, principally supported by Mary Alden, Eugene Pallette, Ralph Lewis, James O'Shea and A. D. Sears.

CONDUCTED BY B. F. BARRETT

Former Editor of Photoplay Scenario Magazine.

NOTE—This department will appear hereafter in each issue of MOTOGRAPHY, and will treat of all subjects of interest to the photoplaywright—whether amateur or professional. You are invited to suggest any subjects you desire to have discussed, or ask questions on any matters relating to the writing of photoplays which have been puzzling you. The department is also open to you at any time for the expression of your own ideas or the submitting of ideas of others which have helped you, and will be interesting to other photoplay writers.

Lasky Will Co-operate with Authors

BY JESSE L. LASKY

President, Jesse L. Lasky Feature Plays Company.

I RECENTLY went on record with the statement that the art of motion picture producing was not advancing and gave as the reason the scarcity of good material for stories; in fact, I laid the blame for this lapse of progress entirely on the shoulders of our novelists, dramatists and scenarioists, who are providing the material for the present day photoplays.

Since the wide publication of this article less than a month ago I have been deluged with letters from authors and writers and others connected with the motion picture industry, many of them agreeing with my views of the matter, but the majority laying the blame for the lack of suitable dramatic material back on the producers and on myself as one of the producers.

The motion picture columns of many daily papers and some of our trade papers also took exception to some of my statements so that I am moved to not alone defend my position but I want to show if I can that the Lasky Company at least does more than criticise a deplorable fact and is taking every possible means to remedy the existing state of affairs. The controversy is based on the following arguments. I claim the art of producing on the screen is hampered by the lack of good material and the fact that our authors are not rising to the occasion. My critics, on the other hand, claim that the fault is with the producers; that we do not recognize good material when we see it, and if we do recognize a good story then we quibble over the price so that the poor author is not encouraged to continue his writing. They further state that good ideas submitted to a scenario department are often returned to the writer by the department later to appear disguised in a different form and produced under another title.

One very able writer and critic writes me as follows:

It takes months, instead of weeks, to write a strong, original and vital story in such carefully revised scenario form as will do away with costly editing after vizualization. There is a vast amount of creative work involved and a lot of skilled craftsmanship besides. Yet all this labor must be handed over without consideration of any sort, without protection from wholesale stealing or retail peculation, not to the reputable producers themselves, for private examination and secret consideration, but to a department of responsibility wholly unknown. Every week I am asked by authors about the responsibility of producers.

What can I reply?

The concluding paragraph of a very able answer to my article by Epes Winthrop Sargent of the Moving Picture World is worth quoting. Appealing to the producers, he writes:

Come out in the open and buy and pay for stories. Give the promising writers a chance to see how things are done. Follow their scripts until they no longer have to write in to inquire if the current release is their story or one like it, as has been done in the past, and it will be found that the supply will equal the demand when there is a real and genuine demand backed by checks.

The Indianapolis Star in its columns placing the blame equally on the producer and the author, states:

Personally I am of the opinion that Mr. Lasky is right. If the motion picture game is to retain its hold upon the affections of the public there must be far better stories than have been recently pictured. The authors are not rising to the situation; nor are the producers. For this, in part at least, the producers are to blame. We hear a good deal about the need for good scripts, but at the same time we don't hear much about special offers made to authors for such scripts. The idea that anyone can write a good motion picture scenario is absurd; the art is a new one; it requires a special technique; a knowledge of the rules and requirements of an entirely new game. The man—be he a well known author or not—who can write a striking original story can be certain of his price; a much better price in many cases than the motion picture producers offer. Why, then, go to the bother of turning a good short or serial magazine story into motion picture form? At least as originally written it would be passed upon by editors competent to judge English; can this be said of the men who pass upon motion picture scenarios? Whenever the motion picture producers really sense the need for better pictures; are willing to enlist the services of men and women competent to write them, and are, at the same time, willing to pay prices that will equal or better the prices paid in other forms of literary endeavor, then they will get them and not till then. After all, brains are worth quite as much as celluloid film.

Recognizing that there is some truth in the above statements, the Lasky Company on the first of June established a scenario department along new and original lines and through this department we hope to answer every one of the above criticisms by doing away with as many of the evil conditions existing between the producers and authors as is humanly possible.

First we guarantee that all material submitted will get quick consideration and if it is not acceptable we will return it to the author with a very carefully written, constructive criticism, in which we will endeavor to point out the reasons why the story, in our humble opinion, was not worth purchasing. If, on the other hand, the story contains an idea or even a situation worth developing, we agree to collaborate with the author and to help him develop his story to a point where it is in such form that we can pay the author a good price for material that under ordinary conditions would have been returned as being not good enough for production.

After a practical experience of over two years at our coast studios, during which he wrote some of the most successful Lasky photoplays, we have brought to New York to head the department, Hector Turnbull, formerly dramatic critic on the New York Tribune. Mr. Turnbull has been persuaded to give up writing himself and to lend all his time to the encouraging and assisting of other writers. We intend to appeal to men at the top of their profession who in the past would not take the trouble to study this new art with care. We want to co-operate with the men who write good stories or who have not yet established their names in the literary field; in fact, we ask every writer experienced and otherwise to get in touch with our department. We are willing and ready to pay well for ideas submitted in ordinary synopsis form—and through trained continuity writers, many of them formerly successful dramatists, we will take these stories and preserving all their dramatic qualities, construct them into the final complete scenarios.

Pictures today have a better circulation than any magazine or periodical ever published. Are we not then entitled to the works of the greatest authors and dramatists of our times? We think we are, and we are prepared to pay in competition with the best periodicals and publishing houses such prices that—all things being equal—will win the author over to the motion picture drama. Having won him we promise a sympathetically produced photo drama preserving all the elements of the author's story and giving him full credit for the same.

Through motion pictures a new, beautiful and universal medium has come into existence—one well calculated to create better understanding among nations whose real boundaries are those of language. When our modern authors finally realize that through this medium they may reach out to the nations of the world and convey their messages to the literate and illiterate classes of these nations; when they realize that through this new medium, which speaks all languages, they have the most powerful and potent means of expressing their every thought, then and only then will our writers of special attainments begin to take full advantage of this greatest of new arts—the motion picture drama.

Thousands of Scripts for World Contest

Although the World Film Company's scenario contest does not close until September 15, William A. Brady announces that at the end of the second week over 50,000 scenarios and synopses had been received. It would appear that all the world is interested in scenario writing, as contributions have been received from students of Vassar, Notre Dame, Leland Stanford and Columbia universities, a United States congressman, a coal miner, a senator, union labor leaders, a secretary of a cabinet officer, a mayor of a middle west town, a Uruguayan diplomat, suffragettes and thousands of others from all walks of life.

These manuscripts are read and sorted as they are received and a report on the first 1,700 read showed that 852 were possible, 96 were extraordinary and 23 unavailable. This is a very high rating, as it shows that 35 per cent of the scripts submitted were of sufficient interest to justify a second reading and only 23 out of 1,700 read were considered worthless.

There is still a chance for every one regardless of the great number already received so do not become discouraged but work out the idea you have in mind and send it along—it may prove worthy of classification among the "96 extraordinary scripts."

Famous Offers $100,000 for Scenarios

Adolph Zukor, president of the Famous Players Company, states that he is ready to spend $100,000 for photoplay scenarios. Here is a chance for every free lance writer. The conditions are as follows:

We have scrupulously avoided the "prize contest" in making this announcement because we consider the contest to be very unfair to the authors who submit scripts on that basis. Lured by the bait of some fair stipend offered as the first prize, they are forced to compete on a "heads I win and tails you lose" plan because if they fail to win the prize they receive very negligible offers for their work if it proves acceptable at all.

In this case, however, we are making a flat proposition that we have appropriated $100,000 for the purpose of acquiring one hundred original scenarios which we consider to be worth $1,000 each to us. It is a matter of no importance to us whether one writer earns the entire $100,000 or whether it is divided among one hundred writers. We want the best ideas that money can buy, and we want nothing but the best. Therefore, we have definitely committed ourselves to pay $1,000 each for acceptable scripts, and we will reject everything that does not measure up to our standards. There is no middle ground—it is the best or nothing.

There is no time limit on the submission of the ideas; we are always open to the receipt of scripts until the $100,000 has been exhausted. Therefore, there is no reason for an author submitting a half-baked idea to us, as writers have ample time in which to work out the polishing up of their ideas.

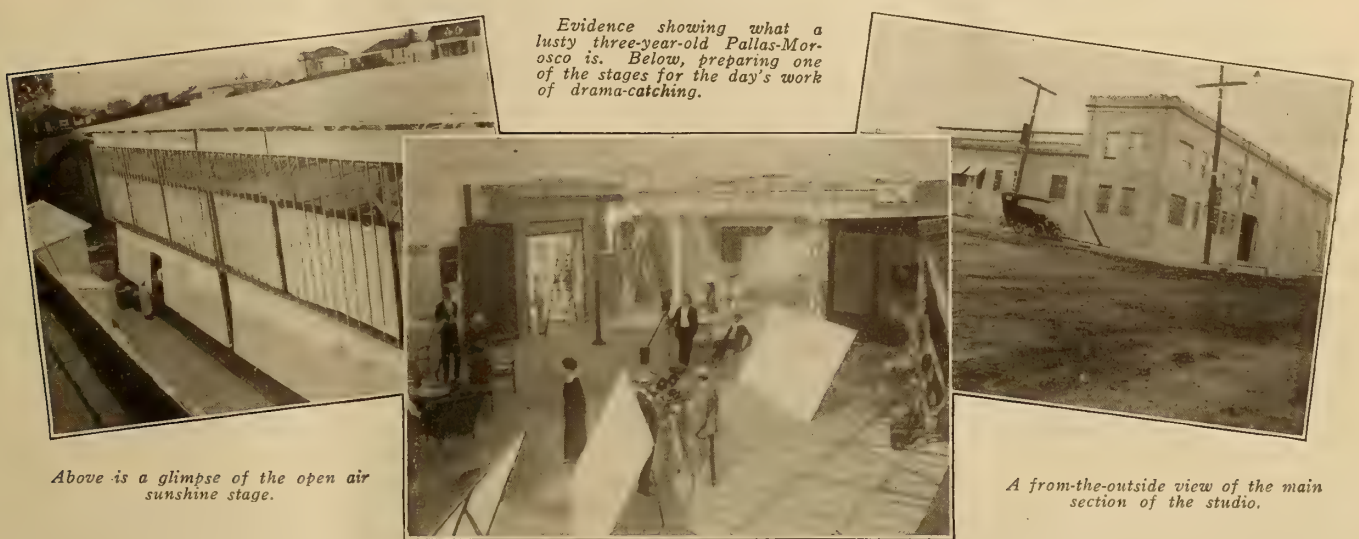
As each script is submitted to our photoplay department it will be read and judged on its intrinsic merits without reference to any other proffered idea. There will be no placing the script aside to wait for the final comparison with hundreds of others which have passed the first reading. Nor will there be any special judges engaged for the work of passing on the merits of the ideas. Scripts will be judged solely on the standards best suited to prescribe for the needs of the company.

Our step is not one which presages a departure from our former principles, nor does it arise from an immediate dearth of material. It is simply devised as the most effective means of establishing direct communication with the best imaginative brains of the country with a view of ultimately entering into permanent relations with many of the foremost writers of the period.

The scripts must meet certain well defined restrictions. We are anxious to avoid lurid dramas as the objectionable sex variety, and we do not want political, religious or other controversial subjects. We also prefer ideas which are especially suitable for Mary Pickford, Marguerite Clark, Pauline Frederick, Hazel Dawn, Ann Pennington and our other stars, but we do not insist that the ideas be confined solely to plots necessitating feminine stars. Any unusual plot will be accepted, no matter whether for men of women stars, provided it embodies an idea which is intrinsically worth $1,000 to the company.

Although we have restricted our announcement to authors of proved merit, the author's reputation will have absolutely no bearing on the acceptance or rejection of any of the one hundred scripts. Photoplay value are the only essential factors in determining the merits of the ideas.

Though it is true that no other company has ever made such an offer since the beginning of the photoplay industry, still I do not consider that to be a particularly significant fact. The chief point, to my mind, is that it marks the first big effort of a producing concern to get into direct contact with the foremost writers of our day. Hitherto the larger concerns have devoted themselves chiefly to the adaptation of the successful plays and novels of the greatest authors. In the vast majority of cases, the negotiations for the rights to these plays and novels were otbained through arrangement with the different agencies representing the writers.



These adaptations have been successes but they were not ideal because they were not written especially for the screen. In these, and in all other instances of a similar nature, it has been a matter of moulding the dramatic theme to fit the necessarily stringent requirements of the motion picture screen.

What we are endeavoring to do is to have men of the mental caliber of these authors turn their imaginations directly to the devising of plots that are especially suited to the motion picture screen. Granting that the adaptation, when cleverly effected, represents the highest type of photoplay which we have had thus far, it is our belief that the alliance between the producers and the men of letters which we hope to perfect through the medium of this gigantic offer will mark the greatest upward step in the history of the motion picture since the introduction of trained stage players in the adaptations of stage successes and of great novels.

As for the screen itself, I have every confidence that the results obtained by this revolutionary step will mark a new era in the quantity of quality feature photoplays.

How Pallas and Morosco Grew

INTERESTING FACTS ABOUT THE BIRTHPLACE OF THE "SEA WOLF"

Evidence showing what a lusty three-year-old Pallas-Morosco is. Below, preparing one of the stages for the day's work of drama-catching.

A from-the-outside view of the main section of the studio.

IT is now nearly three years since the birth of Bosworth, Inc., on August 8, 1913. The growth of the studio has progressed from a small stage of twenty feet by twenty-five feet to one of the finest studios in existence, equipped with every feature to make it absolutely complete. From the inception of the story of a feature photoplay, whether adapted from a stage success, a popular book or an original scenario, to the time when after a final inspection the finished five-reel product is released direct to the exchange—all the making or assembling of everything required is performed at the Los Angeles studio.

This company that launched its career with such a pronounced success as "The Sea Wolf" proved to be, has had a continuously expanding growth that has barely kept pace with its ever increasing screen triumphs.

The first small studio, which was rather inaccessible, was given up in August, 1914, and the firm moved into a new fireproof studio erected to embody all the valuable features of the leading film plants. The assembly of structures consisted of a glass covered stage, a concrete fireproof laboratory with a capacity then thought to be greatly in excess of any future needs, a long double-decked row of concrete, white enameled dressing rooms with running water in each room and finished in model fashion, a wardrobe building, a director's building and a "prop warehouse."

The formation of the Oliver Morosco Photoplay Company on November 9, 1914, necessitated a big increase in the studio grounds and in December, 1914, a big tract of real estate on the opposite side of Council street was purchased. Here was erected a vast open air stage on which the spectacle scenes, requiring a big assembly of men, vehicles and horses, could be staged. A number of the big scenes in "Captain Courtesy," "Peer Gynt," "The Rug Maker's Daughter," "Davy Crockett" and other Morosco and Pallas photoplays were performed here. A big carpenter shop was also erected and fitted with every form of wood-working tools and machinery.

In January, 1915, and again on May 15, 1915, the glass covered stage was enlarged until it covered the entire property not occupied by buildings north of Council street. A reinforced concrete structure for the executive offices, bookkeeping and scenario departments, was finished in February, 1915, and on March 11, 1915, a building to house the lofty scene painting frames, together with a sixteen-compartment scenic dock was erected. Then a larger double warehouse to store "props" and stage fittings was completed August 1, 1915. This building was connected on October 19, 1915, by a trussed roof to the carpenter shop and afforded a large earth-floored space protected from the sun and unfavorable weather. This space has been useful for special equestrian stunts.

To house the increased force of directors and to take care of the employment bureau's ever increasing burden, a duplex building was erected to flank the big gates that protect the way to the stage. Here the directors were established, each in his own office.

In the latter part of December, 1915, the adjoining property together with a large bungalow was secured and this building was rebuilt to accommodate the drafting, title painting, model-building, display painting and architectural departments. The scribes of the scenario department were housed on the second flooor.

The present war necessitated the buying and accumulating of a large stock of supplies for future needs and accordingly a big warehouse was erected in February, 1916, on the property south of Council Street. The purchasing offices were installed here. An extra projecting room, or rather building, was raised back of the art department structure in February, 1916, also an isolated armored film vault to hold the negatives that overflowed the vault in the laboratory.

In March, 1916, an annex was added to the laboratory for the exclusive use of the directors when cutting down their productions. April 15, 1916, a new department was established and fitted for blacksmithing and iron-working. Thus the growth of the studio has paralleled the growth of the popularity of Morosco and Pallas photoplays and further plans of extensive expansion are under discussion.

NO MORE SUBTITLES?

New Descriptive Apparatus Automatically Shows Captions at Bottom of Screen While Film Runs Without Interruption

A new invention which makes it possible to show upon the screen descriptive sentences at the same time the pictures are being shown has made its appearance in the photoplay world. The device is called the descriptograph. It was invented by Dr. J. W. Billings, of Union, Iowa, and is now being manufactured by the Descriptive Film Company of Grinnell, in the same state.

The trouble that some people have, particularly those who are not frequent picture-goers, in keeping a number of characters straight in their minds throughout a film is eliminated by the descriptive sentences thrown on the screen by the descriptograph. It also eliminates all subtitles from the film itself, giving a continuous story of picture and word. The action is explained as the film runs, and where this is unnecessary bits of conversation and other information which adds to the interest of the story and its literary merit can be given.

The descriptive appliance is small and may be located anywhere in the operating booth. It consists of a holder for the celluloid disk upon which the sentences appear, a frame, and the light with its connections. It is entirely automatic in its operation. The mechanics of the appliance are as follows: The lower magazine valve is rebuilt so that the small brass eyelets which are inserted into the film in passing between the rollers form an electrical connection which closes a relay circuit which in turn operates the celluloid disk bearing the descriptions. The whole apparatus is easily installed and requires practically no attention. The caption disks are ten inches across and fit in the reel box.

The descriptograph has been used in Iowa theaters with success and demonstrations of its work will be made at the Chicago convention.

The men composing the Descriptive Film Company are H. L. Beyer, president; Paul P. Meyers, secretary; J. H. McMurray and H. F. Lanphere, trustees; J. W. Billings, general manager, and LeRoy F. Spurlin, production manager.

UNIVERSAL'S JULY RELEASES

Marie Walcamp Plays Columbia for Preparedness Parade—Ten Thousand Knights Templar Attend Rodeo at Universal City

Universal City was well represented in the Preparedness Parade which took place in Los Angeles. Marie Walcamp was honored by being chosen to represent Columbia and rode on a gaily decorated auto truck which occupied the position of honor in the parade. Another feature which called forth much applause along the line of march was a "Spirit of 1916" group from the Universal Company composed of Victor Potel, well known as "Slim" comedian, garbed as Uncle Sam; Ernest Shields, a juvenile actor, carrying a suitcase inscribed "To Citizen's Training Camp"; and Marcia Moore, an ingenue, with a suitcase inscribed "To Women's Training Camp."

A dramatization of the famous novel "The Heart of a Child," released as a Red Feather, will head the Universal program for July 10. Edna Flugrath enacts the principal role. "Henry's Little Kid," a typical Nestor comedy, will be released the same day.

"Nature Incorporated," a Gold Seal two-reel comedy drama, is the offering for July 11, in which Herbert Rawlin is starred with Agnes Vernon playing opposite him. The Rex release on this day is "War-ridden Mexico," secured by the Animated Weekly cameraman; while Imp gives a Matt Moore and Jane Gail comedy "A Stranger in His Own House."

The feature for July 12 will be "Conflicting Conscience," a one-reel Victor, in which the leading parts are taken by May Emory and Bertram Grassby. L-Ko contributes a two-reeler "Ignatz's Icy Injury," featuring Billy Armstrong and Lucille Hudson.

"No. 16 Martin Street," a Laemmle two-reeler featuring Dorothy Davenport and Emory Johnson; a Big U juvenile comedy, "The Three Brave Hunters"; a Pat Sullivan cartoon, "Sammy Johnson Gets a Job," and a Ditmare educational split-reel, "Mexican Natural History," make up the program for July 13.

"The Little Grey Mouse," a two-reel Imp feature starring Edith Roberts and Harry Benham; and Victor's "Little Boy Blue," will be ready July 14.

"The Human Pendulum," a three-reel Bison with Marie Walcamp and Lee Hill, and the Joker one-reeler "The Harem Scarem Deacon," are the July 15 offering.

July 16 releases include "The Crimson Yoke," a two-reel Mexican drama under the Rex brand," a one-reel Laemmle comedy, "Flirting with Marriage," and an Imp comedy "Two Seats at the Opera."

Abraham Katz, of the Bluebird projecting artillery, is also trumpeter in Company B of the Twelfth Regiment New York National Guard, and has answered the call of his country for service on the Mexican border. In accordance with the Bluebird policy Mr. Katz' position will be waiting for him when he returns.

The Bluebird Photoplays Company of St. Louis just won a suit which arose from the action on the part of some would-be reformers to suppress the showing of "Undine" in St. Louis. The trial resulted in a farce and speedy victory for the Bluebird Company.

Ten thousand Knights Templar and their ladies were the guests at Universal City at a Rodeo and wild west show which was held in the suburbs of the city and was participated in by one hundred cowboys and cowgirls and all the members of the Jaccard company which is producing the new Universal serial "Liberty, a Daughter of the U. S. A."

"Damaged Goods" Bookings Close

The Mutual Film Corporation announces that it will accept no bookings for "Damaged Goods," the seven-part Richard Bennett drama, for showing after September 1.

Richard Bennett, the actor who made "Damaged Goods" famous both in the picture and on the speaking stage, is now at work at the American studios in Santa Barbara on "The Sable Curse," a Mutual Star production for which a release date will be announced later.

For the purpose of making a number of scenes for the production of "Onda of the Orient," Universal Director Henry McRae recently took his large company from Universal City via steamboat to San Francisco.

V. L. S. E. Policy Discussed at Convention

PAY-WHAT-IT'S-WORTH-METHOD OF RENTING ADOPTED BY MANY

ONE of the questions to be discussed thoroughly at the Chicago convention is open booking, box office value of renting films. Representatives of the V. L. S. E. attending the Chicago convention, will be at the command of that body to describe in detail to those interested the advantages which the open-booking policy of renting features possess for both exhibitors and manufacturers.

Big Four representatives are firm in the conviction that the adoption of open-booking, and box-office value systems by the trade would make for the best interests of the industry. For this reason the Big Four will stand ready to respond to any call for information regarding the success which exhibitors have achieved by reason of these business plans.

It is said that the evidence which the Big Four has of the popularity of the open-booking-box-office-value-no-deposit plan, would make certain the success of the agitation for these systems. This evidence is in the form of hundreds of extraordinary letters from exhibitors all over the country.

A letter received by the V. L. S. E. within the last week, announcing that an expenditure of $1,700,000 is to be made by an exhibitor for additional expansion, solely by reason of the success that has been experienced as the result of the open-booking policy, reflects the influence which this business plan is exerting throughout the industry.

The letter is from Eugene H. Roth, manager of the Portola Theater, San Francisco, one of the largest western exhibitors, representing one of the best known theaters in the country. The letter follows:

> The open market affords every manager the opportunity of taking the pictures he knows are pleasing and suited to his clientele. Every theater throughout the country is peculiar unto itself. The management reflects the policy that its customers expect and desire, not alone in the internal workings of the house, but in the program offered.
> There are a number of pictures which are beautiful and costly productions, and wonderful in costuming and scenic effects, which I cannot use because they are not the type of pictures which my audience desires.
> But through your consistent policy, I am privileged to pass these by instead of being forced to take them and lose money on them, and play such pictures as "God's Country and the Woman," "Sherlock Holmes," "The Great Divide," "The Valiants of Virginia," and many others such as those which we have successfully played, which I know will be pleasing to my patrons and that I will make money on.
> We have built our success on the basis of this policy and the reputation of the pictures which we get as a result. Frankly, I am willing and glad to admit that this policy has made it possible for us to see far enough into the future to warrant our making an expenditure in San Francisco of $1,700,000 to properly exploit good pictures of all makes, by the open booking plan.

With a number of other exhibitors ready to multiply Mr. Roth's experience, it seems certain that the convention will formulate a platform calling for the elimination of advance deposits, flat rates and closed contracts.

Frank Rembusch, National President Fred J. Herrington and Lee Ochs, candidates for the presidency all have declared themselves emphatically on some one phase of these three points. Furthermore, there is ample evidence for belief that many of the manufacturers will not be adverse to the elimination of these features of their booking systems.

Although their respective companies still do business along the old lines, many individual producers have voiced their recognition of the potency of the open booking policy and the consequent absence of the deposit system as the one manner in which to better the industry generally.

In fact, persistent rumor has it that one of the largest distributing organizations in the world, will abandon its closed contract system at a near date.

Baltimore House Abandons Contract Booking

The Parkway Theater, of Baltimore, which caters to one of the most exclusive audiences in the staid Maryland capital, has abandoned the closed contract system of booking in favor of the open booking method of the Vitagraph-Lubin-Selig-Essanay, Inc.

The theater recently opened under the new order of things with "Salvation Joan," the Big Vitagraph feature starring Edna May and Harry T. Morey. "The Suspect" with Anita Stewart, and "Sherlock Holmes," with William Gillette, will follow in its wake.

In announcing the change of policy, Bernard Depkin, manager of the Parkway, declared that he realized through long experiences that it is impossible for manufacturers to make all pictures of equal merit and that therefore it is improper to compel him to pay the same price for each picture whether or not it is suitable to his clientele.

Another prominent house which has adopted this method of operation is the Criterion Theater, one of the most modern edifices in the South, which was formally opened on Peachtree street, Atlanta, last week. On the four days of the opening week Big Four features were shown. On Wednesday and Thursday, "That Sort," the five-part Essanay feature, with Warda Howard in the leading role, was the attraction, and on Friday and Saturday Anita Stewart was seen in the Vitagraph feature, "The Suspect."

Big Features in Small Towns

Mrs. S. L. Lewis, manager of the Liberty Theater, Gunnison, Colorado, received repeated requests from her clientele to show "The Battle Cry," but in her opinion, the size of the town didn't warrant it. These requests came to the attention of Frank Harris, Denver manager of the Big Four, and he immediately sent circular letters to fifty of the most prominent citizens of Gunnison announcing that Mrs. Lewis would book the big Vitagraph feature if they would lend their support and guarantee their presence at its showing.

The result was that the business startled even Mrs. Lewis. She immediately instructed Mr. Harris to send along any others on which he would lend his co-operation, and V. L. S. E. features will now be shown in Gunnison for months to come.

R. K. Evans, manager of the V. L. S. E. at New Orleans, put over a similar stunt on the same feature recently. He was guided by the telephone directory of Ponchatoula, Louisiana, to whose citizens he announced by letter that Bernard Antony, manger of the Ideal Theater, would show "The Battle Cry" if they would aid him.

"The Battle Cry" was shown in Ponchatoula on the Fourth of July. Over 200 citizens of that town have subscribed their admission price and the success of the showing is already assured.

Two Features a Week in Town of Twenty

All the daring deeds in the film industry are not confined by any means to the acting end of the business. There are also many instances of valor and courage in the exhibiting end, but for the title of leading hero we nominate William Coffelt, owner of the Leewood Theater, Leewood, West Virginia.

The town of Leewood boasts of a population of 20. (Yes, the compositor is correct, the number is twenty) and this number is padded, at that. Mr. Coffelt, however, not only had the unmitigated courage to build a theater in that town, but now he has signed up with the V. L. S. E. to show two of its big features weekly.

The feat is all the more remarkable when it is learned that Coffelt declared he doesn't know where they even have twenty people in Leewood, as the only other edifices in it are the restaurant and two small houses.

Leewood is situated at the intersection of three West Virginia railroads. He gets all the transient business from these railroads. The number of travelers is large, and then for miles around the country is a thriving coal section, and all the operators come into Leewood at night to enjoy the pictures.

Realizing that an improvement in the welfare of the film industry in general is an improvement in the welfare of each individual in it, four branch managers of the Vitagraph-Lubin-Selig-Essanay, Inc., are at the head of screen clubs in as many cities of the country.

Those at the head of screen clubs are E. R. Pearson, of Kansas City; C. E. Holah, of Cincinnati; Frank B. Spurrier, of Washington, and C. E. Shurtleff, of Cleveland.

W. C. Brown, Atlanta manager of the V. L. S. E., announces that Wallace Walthall, brother of the noted Henry, has been appointed to a position in the booking department of that exchange.

PENN CONVENTION A SUCCESS

Pertinent Resolutions Adopted and Candidate for National President Selected—New Officers Elected

"A success in every particular and an attendance far exceeding our expectations" was the unanimous opinion of the committee in charge of the Pennsylvania state convention held at Pittsburgh on June 26, 27 and 28. The convention was opened with an address of welcome by Mayor Armstrong to which Ben H. Zerr responded in behalf of the exhibitors. The following resolutions were adopted:

Be it resolved, that we, the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of Pennsylvania in convention assembled believe complete harmony can best be secured by each branch maintaining its own organization and guarding its own identity in all matters affecting the common welfare of the industry. We believe, moreover, in co-operation between exhibitor and producer.

Be it further resolved, that we recommend the formation in the motion picture industry of a Board of Trade or a Chamber of Commerce, and that we believe that the exhibitors should have equal representation in such organization, and that the exhibitors' representatives in such organization shall be elected by the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America.

Be it further resolved, that we record our appreciation of and gratitude for the good work done by the trade papers and the press, which have placed the interest of the industry paramount to that of the individual, and for their untiring championship of the interest of the organized exhibitor.

The question as to the position of the Pennsylvania State League in regard to the choice of national president was decided by the following resolution:

Be it resolved that Fred J. Herrington is unanimously endorsed as a candidate for national president for re-election at the Chicago convention. As we feel that his record of the past year is deserving of the support of all exhibitors for a second term of this office.

Interesting talks were made before the convention by F. H. Richardson and Stephen Bush of New York and Ben J. Sauer of Cleveland. A cabaret and dinner were given in the Fort Pitt Hotel for the entertainment of the guests.

Among the motion picture stars attending were Muriel Ostriche of the World Film Corporation; and Rosemary Theby and R. A. Meyer of the Knickerbocker Film Company.

The election of officers resulted as follows: President, G. W. Sahner, Pittsburgh; vice-president, Frank Stehle, Altoona; secretary, James Delves, Pittsburgh; treasurer, I. W. Shearer, Pittsburgh; delegates to the national convention, William Fritz, Pittsburgh; W. W. Dawson, Gallitzin; Charles Peterson, Tamaqua; G. W. Sahner, Pittsburgh; James E. Smith, Pittsburgh; A. J. Barthell, Pittsburgh; Oliver McKee, Pittsburgh; I. W. Shearer, Pittsburgh, and M. J. Franney, Shenandoah.

Beerbohm Tree Again at Fine Arts

That the Triangle Film Corporation are going to extremes in their efforts to build up business for exhibitors, is confirmed in the statement from the Fine Arts studio, that Sir Herbert Beerbohm Tree, the eminent English star, has signed a contract to appear in a series of screen productions.

Sir Herbert scored a sensational success with his film characterization of "Macbeth," which recently had its premiere at the New York Knickerbocker theater, and later transferred to the Gaiety, where it enjoyed a successful engagement. The celebrated Shakespearian actor and producr is on his way to the Fine Arts studio and will start immediately in a feature production.

Managing Director S. L. Rothapfel, of the Rialto theater, New York, has returned from a flying trip to the west, based primarily upon a visit to Indianapolis to assist in an advisory capacity in the construction of the new Circle theater there.

Constellation of World Stars

EQUITABLE RELEASING THROUGH WORLD ON OPEN BOOKING PLAN

WORLD PICTURES under the direction of William A. Brady can lay claim to a host of attractive personalities.

Alice Brady, whose portrait adorns the front page of this issue of MOTOGRAPHY, has appeared in many features, principal of which are "As Ye Sow," "The Rack," "Then I'll Come Back to You," "Tangled Fates," and "La Vie De Boheme," and will soon be seen in "Miss Petticoats."

Kitty Gordon has appeared in "As in a Looking Glass," "Her Maternal Right," and "The Crucial Test," and is next to be seen as one of the famous vampires of biblical times.

Doris Kenyon came into prominence in "The Pawn of Fate," with George Beban, and then went to Cuba under Director Chautard and played a small part in "The Feast of Life." Her work in that picture stood out in so great a contrast to the other players that she was immediately cast to star in a forthcoming production.

Clara Whipple became a featured player in "The Reaper," in which John Mason played. She is now working in "The Heart of a Hero," in support of Robert Warwick.

Gerda Holmes, recently seen in "Her Great Hour," "The Chain Invisible," and now working in "Husband and Wife," an all-star cast production, is a permanent World player.

Molly King specializes in mountain types and has been seen to advantage in "A Woman's Power" and "Fate's Boomerang."

Gail Kane will soon be seen playing opposite Robert Warwick in "The Heart of a Hero."

Ethel Clayton is one of World's dependable stars. Her forthcoming big features are "A Woman's Way" and "Husband and Wife."

June Elvidge graduated from the stage, as did many others, and will soon be seen in features similar to "The Hand of Peril" and "The Closed Road."

Muriel Ostriche is daily becoming more and more a universal favorite. Her next picture will be with Carlyle Blackwell in "Sally in Our Alley."

Frances Nelson, first featured in "Love's Crucible," is soon to be seen in "What Happened at 22." She was also seen to advantage in "Human Driftwood."

Clara Kimball Young will soon be seen in "The Story of Susan" and "Dark Silence."

In addition to the feminine personalities, there are male stars galore.

Since the discontinuance of active production, the entire output of the Equitable Motion Pictures Corporation, releasing through the World Film, is now, and has been for the past two months, available to exhibitors on the open booking plan. The productions in this policy includes Clara Kimball Young and Wilton Lackaye in "Trilby," Helen Ware in "The Price," Katherine Osterman in "Divorced," Thomas A. Wise in "Blue Grass," Muriel Ostriche in "A Daughter of the Sea" and "A Circus Romance," William Courtenay in "Sealed Lips," Frank Sheridan and Arthur Ashley in "The Struggle," Bruce McRae and Gerda Holmes in More Worldly beauties. Clara Whipple, Frances Nelson, Clara Kimball Young, June Elvidge, Mollie King.

"The Chain Invisible," and Katharine Kaelred in "Idols." In addition to these are twenty others which were made from August, 1915, to May of this year.

William A. Brady's ambition is to put into his screen productions the same infinite care for details which has characterized his stage plays.

For the story of "Nathan Hale," Mr. Brady, through influential friends, secured the consent of the directors of the Boston Museum to allow Chautard to use the old prints, relics, preserved uniforms, and costumes of revolutionary times, as patterns for his property and wardrobe departments.

The historic landmarks of Concord, Lexington and Marblehead, Mass., were utilized and Boston Common was turned over to the organization each morning for a week.

For "Miss Petticoats," an old whaler, the Charles W. Morgan, was engaged by World Film and with its crew of twenty-five men of every imaginable nationality, it was taken forty miles to sea and there for an entire week scenes incidental to the picture were cameraed.

In "Sally in Our Alley," the production which was delayed six days in order that a few alleys and streets of lower New York could be used and the artificiality of studio duplicates done away with.

If the aspirations of Mr. Brady are realized, artificiality will disappear in all World pictures and the real material, which should characterize screen plays, will eventually take the place of crude studio sets.

To Stimulate Recruiting by Films

In an effort to stimulate recruiting a committee of representatives of motion picture companies consisting of Jack Cohn, Universal; Pell Mitchell, Mutual; Jack Wheeler, Selig; H. N. McKean, International; and Erie Mayell, Pathe; called on Secretary of War Baker and Secretary of Navy Daniels and offered to throw open the film news weekly service for the distribution of army and navy pictures. They offered to send a man to Vera Cruz to take naval pictures and to send a special motor car with two film photographers into Mexico to take pictures of the American army in action.

Secretary Daniels promptly agreed to the suggestion and Secretary Baker was very much pleased with the offer and submitted the proposition to General Funston at San Antonio for consideration.

The committee ordered W. S. Cline, of the Pathe forces, to leave Washington at once for Galveston to go on a naval vessel to Vera Cruz, and have a special motor car with two men and a mechanician waiting at El Paso to go into Mexico as soon as the War Department gives its consent. The pictures to be taken will be equally distributed among the five film concerns named and will be exhibited in all parts of the country as a feature of their weekly news films.

G. E. Jenks, formerly a member of the Universal's western scenario staff, has joined the Signal Film Company forces.

Following in line with the rapidly increasing procession, B. S. Moss, the motion picture producer and showman, has issued an order that all employers responding to the call of the colors will suffer no diminution of pay throughout the period of their absence and that their positions will await their return.

CREATING KEYSTONE COMEDIES

Hampton Del Ruth Describes His Method of Writing Synopses, Procuring Continuity and Directing and Cutting Films

Hampton Del Ruth, managing editor and assistant manager of production of the Keystone Film Company, expresses his regret that this company cannot buy more material from free lance writers, and describes the system whereby Keystone comedies are created in an effort to explain their inability to obtain the material they require from the outside writer.

Hampton Del Ruth.

Mr. Del Ruth says that as a rule the idea or basic plot comes to him in the form of an incident or is suggested by something he has just seen. He sends for two members of his staff of writers and both are given his idea in a few words and are told to work out the plot separately as best suits their fancy.

Two or three days later these men each read to Mr. Del Ruth their synopsis of the plot. Then the mind of the master begins to suggest, change and readjust the story. At this point a shorthand man is called in and reports the words of the managing editor as he reviews the plots with the writers. After going over the details with Mack Sennett, Mr. Del Ruth then selects the cast.

The synopsis is typed; the director who is to have the story, his assistant and the cast are called together. They are simply the audience, however, while Mr. Del Ruth rehearses the story and the stenographer makes more minute notes.

The director then takes the synopsis and goes over it alone with his company and then Mr. Del Ruth and Mack Sennett are called in to review the rehearsal. Again the stenographer takes down the thoughts suggested and notes are made for the continuity, and the director is instructed to follow the suggestions.

MOTOGRAPHY, desiring to be of all possible assistance to exhibitors visiting Chicago, will be glad to make arrangements for hotel reservations. Exhibitors desiring reservations will kindly name the price they desire to pay for hotel accommodations and name the hotel preferred. Visiting exhibitors may have their mail and telegrams addressed in care of MOTOGRAPHY. Every effort will be made to make delivery of these letters and telegrams from MOTOGRAPHY'S booth at the Coliseum.

Gleamers big and little among the Fox folk. On the left, is the dignified Miss Kittens Reichert; next is June Caprice in a sepia study; in the center is Bill Farnum, now dominating screens the country over in "The Man from Bitter Roots"; Theda Bara's interesting profile comes next; then Bertha Kalich in "Ambition."

Fox Annexes New Gleamers

VALKYRIEN AND SUTHERLAND ADDED TO PLAYERS—OTHER INFORMATION

WILLIAM FARNUM, strong man of the screen, has done with his Herculean portrayals and will soon be in work in more elite and less burly parts.

Motion picture lovers will say good bye to the Farnum with the black shirt and pick and shovel in the gold diggings. They will greet the new Farnum of the cane, the top hat and the full dress suit. The star's change from the California to the New Jersey studios will be made within a short time.

Mr. Farnum's name has come to be synonymous with manliness and virility in the picture fan's vocabulary. Throughout his long service the noted actor has had roles which called for the strongest as well as the best that was in him. He worked hard, steadily and conscientiously.

Valkyrien, the Danish picture queen, is now a Fox star. At the head of her own company she has left for Maine and is working on her first Fox production, a great drama of the sea, the title of which is being kept a secret.

Victor Sutherland is one of the latest additions to the William Fox dramatic forces. Mr. Sutherland will have the lead in the new Virginia Pearson picture now being screened at the Fort Lee studios. He has been acting for more than five years, on the stage and before the camera.

Within a fortnight motion picture fans will witness a contrast in debuts in a single picture which is probably unique in the annals of filmdom. Two premieres will be made—one at eighteen, the other at eighty.

One who will have her premiere is June Caprice, the winsome eighteen-year-old Fox discovery, who will have her boy in screenland full-famed from the beginning.

The other debutante is Miss Sara Alexander, who was playing with dolls when Andrew Jackson sat in the White House. Miss Alexander has the character role of Aunt Susan in the picture, and she is the oldest actress in the world who ever registered for the screen. Lisle Leigh, her niece, also has a part in "Caprice of the Mountains."

More than one snake-skin belt is in the process of evolution as a result of the trip of the Fox Company's delegation to the little southern village where the pictures of "A Tortured Heart" were made. One rattler forty-three inches long came dangerously near leaving Director William S. Davis, who was in charge of screening the photoplay, with a permanent memento of the visit to the Southland.

One scene demanded that Stuart Holmes, in the person of a heartless gambler whom a posse was seeking, jump into a stream known throughout half the commonwealth of Georgia for the superabundance and general prevalence of high ground moccasins.

Mr. Holmes, like all finished villains, never lets his countenance betray his thoughts, and into the pond he went. And Stuart Holmes says he is still searching for the cameraman who emitted the shrill scream while he was splashing around in the snake-infested waters.

Violet Debiccari, age twelve, is now with the William Fox company under the direction of James B. Vincent. Miss Debiccari is a god-child of Madame Sembrich's.

Annie Lee Lowry will make her debut in moving pictures in the next June Caprice film. She will have an extremely important part, as the story of the picture will center completely around Miss Lowry. Her role, in fact, will be next only to those of Miss Caprice and Mr. Hilliard. Annie Lee Lowry is three months old.

Reel Fellows in Jolly Outing

On July first the Reel Fellows Club of Chicago enjoyed a jolly afternoon and evening outing at Cedar Lake, Indiana. A dozen automobiles took the three score or more guests on the pleasant trip, with a fine chicken dinner ready at the end of the forty-mile jaunt.

The Essanay, Emerald and Universal companies were represented from among its actors and among the other guests were R. R. Nehls, American, president of the Reel Fellows Club; Charles Ziebarth, superintendent of the Chicago American plant; M. G. Watkins, Emerald, secretary of the club; Harry Weiss, World, and Frederick W. Wild, of Wuertsner Brothers and Son, Chicago.

The club is planning a week-end party to be held at Cedar Lake some time in August. The Reel Fellows held a special pre-convention meeting last week at which boosts for the big Chicago show were concocted.

"A Tin Soldier," a famous comedy of Charles Hoyt, is being produced in two acts by Essanay.

JULY PARAMOUNT PICTURES

Mae Murray, Hazel Dawn and Owen Moore Appear in Two Five-Reel Features, Also Three Single-Reel Subjects

Paramount Pictures scheduled for release during the week of July 17 include two five-reel subjects, "The Dream Girl," a Lasky production in which Mae Murray will be featured, released on July 17, and "Under

"Imperial Berlin," from Paramount Burton Holmes travel pictures.

Cover," from the Famous Players Studio, starring Hazel Dawn and Owen Moore, ready July 20. The three single reels of travel, romance and the "magazine on the screen" show the Paramount-Burton Holmes Travel-Picture "Down the Danube to Vienna," a continuation of the trip through Europe before the war; the Paramount-Bray animated cartoon, "Colonel Heeza Liar's Courtship"; and the Paramount Pictographs giving a treatise on "Ice"; glimpses of men in public life addressing large audiences in "Oratory," the business feature "System"; "Better Babies," "Ant vs. Man," and "Juggling" in Hugo Munsterberg's series, "Testing Your Mind."

A. B. Reed has joined the ranks of the artists who are contributing to the Paramount-Bray animated cartoons with his frontier comedy, "The Wild and Woolly West."

Emery Downs, manager of the Atlas Amusement Company and the Knickerbocker Theater, Cleveland, Ohio, sent a most interesting letter to H. I. Day, editor of Paramount Progress, on the subject of handling crowds in the theater. Mr. Downs says that in the first place the crowds should be handled before they arrive by explicit information being given on both the slides and the program as to just the minute the feature will start at each show. In seating patrons the ushers should see that no single seats are left between two parties who do not happen to be together. An usher standing in front of the theater should announce when the house is filled for the first show that there are no seats left for that performance but the next show will start at a stated time with seats for all. Also the ushers should be instructed in the manner in which they handle the crowd to keep them all in a good humor and emphasize the courtesy of the house.

"Don't Cheat Yourself," in the Paramount Pictographs, shows how the shopkeeper is not guilty more than once in a thousand times of giving short weight or short change, but the public cheats itself by careless buying and neglect to count change. This picture also shows the numerous tricks of huckster thieves for which the police are always on their guard —the dented tin can, the false bottom berry box, foot springs which hold down the weight side of scales, and the quarter which adds to weights with the aid of a piece of gum.

H. I. Day, editor of Paramount Progress, deplores the fact that so few motion picture theaters issue newspaper-style house organs. He claims that this is the style most pleasing to the patrons and there are not more than a dozen in existence. Mr. Day suggests that Paramount Progress is in a position where it can be of service to any exhibitor who desires to start such a publication, as the editors of this magazine have had practical newspaper experience which will be of value to any one desiring advice.

The New York office of the Morosco-Pallas organizations has just received the sad news from its headquarters in Los Angeles of the death of Page Peters, the popular screen actor, who has been appearing in important juvenile leads under these brands for some time past.

Accompanied by a party of friends, Peters motored down to Hermosa Beach from Los Angeles for a day's outing. While in bathing the player swam out beyond the rest of his friends and was not missed until some time later, when a search was started and his body was found.

Six feet in height and of striking dark complexion, Mr. Peters was one of the most handsome men in motion pictures, as well as one of the best liked actors, both in and out of the profession.

Lenore Ulrich, who just recently closed a big season on Broadway in Belasco's play, "The Heart of Wetona," is now engaged at the Pallas Pictures studios in Los Angeles on her latest photoplay vehicle for the Paramount program, "The Intrigue." The subject is being staged under the direction of Frank Lloyd and presents a timely drama by Julian Crawford Ivers. The supporting cast will offer several new faces under the Pallas Pictures trademark, including Cecil Van Anker, Florence Vidor and Paul Weigel, together with the two Pallas favorites, Herbert Standing and Howard Davies.

Director Joseph LeBrandt of Universal is producing his own film play, "When the Light Came," in one reel. The leads are played by Paul Byron as a hunchback and Neva Gerber as a blind girl.

Heart Strings are thrummed by American's "What Happened at 22?"

Two Features a Month for Pathe

ASTRA WILL CONTRIBUTE TO GOLD ROOSTER PROGRAM

WITH a number of the film companies forced to cut their activities, Pathe comes into the limelight with a statement issued by J. A. Berst, vice-president and general manager, to the effect that Pathe will increase its productions. Although no definite announcement has been made it is reported that beginning in August or September this company will release two features a month instead of one on its Gold Rooster Program. The five million dollar serial program will provide an unbroken chain of two continued photoplays, in addition to the Lonesome Luke comedies, Goldberg cartoons, Pathe news, Heinie and Louie comedies, colored scenics and educational subjects.

Pathe is getting its features on the open market policy. Among the independent producing companies which will contribute to the Gold Rooster program is the Astra Film Corporation, recently organized by Louis Gasnier and his associates Edward Jose, George Fitzmaurice, Donald McKenzie, George B. Seitz, Ouida Bergere and Anthony P. Kelly.

Among the artists who will appear in the Astra productions are Pearl White, William Courtney, Grace Darmond, Mary Nash, Ralph Kellard, Leon Barre, Jane Gray and Macey Harlan.

The next Gold Rooster will be "The Shadow of Her Past" featuring Lina Cavalieri, to be released July 17. "A Woman's Fight," produced by Blache and featuring Geraldine O'Brien will go to the public on August 14.

In addition to the Fitzmaurice productions the list of features for the fall includes "The Test," from A. H. Woods' success, "The Light That Failed," Rudyard Kipling's story, featuring Robert Edeson, and two other Woods' productions.

Mr. Jose's first contribution to the Astra offering will be a five-reel feature with Pearl White. Donald McKenzie is working on a serial for release in the fall under the title of "The Shielding Shadow," in which Miss Darmond, Mr. Kellard and Mr. Barre head the cast.

The Balboa Company will also have an important place on Pathe's program. Arrangements have been completed for a series of feature productions with "Little Mary Sunshine," the youngest leading lady. Work has already been started on these productions under the direction of W. A. Douglas of the Pathe force, who is also looking after the production of "The Grip of Evil," Pathe's newest continued photoplay scheduled for release July 17.

A triple look at Jackie Saunders, former artists' model, now of Pathe and Balboa.

The Pathe program for July 10 presents the final episode of "The Iron Claw," "The Triumph of the Laughing Mask." "A Trial of Souls," the latest chapter of the "Who's Guilty?" series, will be released this same week. The Lonesome Luke comedy is entitled "Luke Rides Rough Shod." "The Bang Miu Gold Mines" and "Some Ports in Catalonia" make up the industrial and scenic reel and the Pathe News No. 66 of July 12 and No. 57 of July 15 complete the program.

The leading characters in "The Grip of Evil," Pathe's new masterplot in fourteen chapters will be Jackie Saunders and Roland Bottomley. Miss Saunders was an artist's model and has posed for many drawings of Harrison Fisher, Howard Chandler Christy and Clarence Underwood. When she decided to go into pictures she joined the Balboa Company, where her success led to her being chosen as the lead in the new serial. Roland Bottomley is an Englishman, who despite his youth has gained remarkable prominence on the stage. In "The Grip of Evil" Bottomley in the same role throughout is seeking the answer to humanity's problem while Miss Saunders in different parts runs the gamut of human emotions with a new gown to fit every mood.

The opinions of some of the nation's most prominent men on the question "Is humanity in the grip of evil?" will be given to motion picture audiences through leaders in the first episode of "The Grip of Evil." In each case there will be a local news value which is sure to interest both the exhibitors and the newspapers. This serial will afford the exhibitors an opportunity to stimulate interest on the part of their audiences by means of unique advertising, guessing contests and so forth.

J. A. Berst, vice-president and general manager of Pathe, was granted a conference with the Hon. Dudley M. Hughes, chairman of the House Committee on Education with reference to the bill for federal censorship. Mr. Hughes showed great willingness to cooperate with every branch of the moving picture industry in making the bill the best possible and as a result of the conference was willing to take up several amendments to the bill embodying certain important changes which Mr. Berst had suggested. Mr. Berst is a strong advocate of federal censorship as a means of eliminating all local supervision of the films. In discussing the subject of local censorship he gave as an excellent example of its folly the town of McMinnville, Oregon, a town of 2,500 inhabitants, in which there is a regularly appointed board of censors.

A new function of the films was demonstrated recently in the restoring of a soldier, long reported missing, to his family and friends. After the battle of Loos an English infantryman's name was posted in the "missing" list, and his family mourned him as dead, especially as many months rolled by and no word was received from him. One of his friends, however, conceived the idea of watching the Pathe Gazette, the English sister of the Pathe News, to try and find some trace of the lost soldier, and haunted the theaters where the Gazette was shown. His search was finally rewarded when he discovered his friend among the convalescent soldiers. He arranged for a private showing of the film to make sure he was not mistaken in his identity of the wounded soldier and then went to the hospital at Hoylake, Cheshire, where the picture had been taken and found the soldier who had been wounded in the head and consequently lost all memory of his name or past life.

WORKING ON SIX TRIANGLES

Louise Glaum, Dorothy Dalton, William Desmond, William S. Hart, Bessie Barriscale, Frank Keneen and Enid Markey Stars

With the return of Raymond B. West, the senior subordinate director of the Thomas H. Ince staff, from his vacation spent in Honolulu, the roster of Ince directors is raised to six. The others actively engaged in making Triangle productions are Charles Giblyn, who is working on "Somewhere in France," the last story of the late Richard Harding Davis, in which Louise Glaum is being starred. Walter Edwards is supervising Dorothy Dalton and William Desmond in Lanier Bartlett's desert-island story; William S. Hart, who is star as well as director in Monte Katterjohn's Mexican border drama, being produced partially at Inceville and partially on the desert south of El Centri, California; and Charles Miller, now filming the current Bessie Barriscale vehicle, an Irish comedy-drama by C. Gardner Sullivan.

Olga Printzlau is a recent addition to the scenario staff and her services will be devoted exclusively to the writing of Triangle Kay-Bee plays. Miss Printzlau is well-known as a writer of screen-dramas and was lately affiliated with the Universal Company.

George Elwell, the boy actor whose work in the Triangle plays, particularly "The Raiders," won him instant recognition, left the studio to enlist in the California militia and has departed with his regiment to the Mexican border.

A baby burro weighing only fifty pounds is the latest addition to the Triangle players. The animal is being filmed by Director Reginald Barker for the current Triangle Kay-Bee play in which Frank Keenan is appearing as star. Enid Markey, who is playing Keenan's daughter in the story, is particularly fond of the new pet.

Joseph J. Dowling and Will H. Bray, character actors of the Ince Triangle forces, recently demonstrated the art of make-up and facial expression to 15,000 Knights Templar at the "Midsummer Movie Carnival" held in the Los Angeles amphitheater. Dowling represented President Wilson while Bray resembled Justice Charles E. Hughes.

Facilities for making of Triangle Kay-Bee plays were augmented by the addition of $15,000 worth of Cooper-Hewitt lights at the Culver City studios. The lamps are now being assembled and will be ready for use within a week. They are to be employed to furnish artificial light for night work at the plant, and on dark days.

"Civilizations" Producer Talks

Thomas H. Ince's "Civilization" will undoubtedly run on in Chicago until well into the autumn. Negotiations to this end are already under way with another theater than Geo. M. Cohan's Grand Opera House, where the season of dramatic productions begins about the first of September. It had not been anticipated that "Civilization" would outlast the intervening period, but the extent of its success has sent the management scurrying for quarters in which to let it remain indefinitely following its present tenancy of the Grand. A similar condition exists in New York at the Criterion, where the picture is on view, but must move soon.

Mr. Ince, who came to Chicago for the opening, returned to New York on Wednesday, but will come back for the impending convention, going on from here to his studios in California.

The successful producer of "Civilization" does not believe all the opportunities in the motion picture field have been exhausted. "Anyone who keeps his eyes open and his energies alert," said the earnest young magnate of Inceville and Culver City, "will have as good a chance now as at any time since the manufacture of moving pictures began. I do not claim any special heaven-born prescience, but it did not take me very long at the outset to see that the picture makers had fallen into a rut and needed a fresh start. This was the first fruit of keeping my eyes open.

"It had occurred to me that too much acting did not produce the best effects—that the closer we got to nature the better our picture. This was my corner stone, and I have been building upon it ever since. Precisely as a fake Indian is an inferior subject to a real Indian, so a canvas warship is ineffective as compared with a real war ship, and a tin cannon is a joke alongside a genuine field piece or naval gun. Following this line we have had a gradual elimination of artificial scenes and articles of all sorts, and the motion pictures have profited vastly.

"In making 'Civilization' it was essential to picture a battle on the sea, and we enlisted the interest and finally the consent of the United States Navy Department to our proposition that a flotilla of American ships of war participate in this episode and actually sink two vessels which we were to supply. These vessels were to be real, but of course supplied with false armor, steel masts and other appurtenances of war upon the ocean."

Director Dave Smith of Vitagraph has begun another of his lively three-reel comedies. This one has "Sunshine" Mary Anderson, who recently made a hit in "Miss Adventure," as the leading character.

"Fall of a Nation" in Big Demand

DIXON ANSWERS CRITICISMS OF BRYAN CARICATURE

EDWARD V. GIROUX, general manager of the National Drama Corporation, in contradiction to the regular custom, is not seeking a market for "The Fall of a Nation," but is endeavoring to keep the insistent demands for the war-drama from swamping him. Following Thomas Dixon's announcement that because of the Mexican crisis he had determined to make this feature available at once to all sections of the country everyone sought territorial rights and booking privileges at once. Small groups of states have already been disposed of and several applicants for larger territories are being investigated as to their reliability and qualifications to promote the spectacle on the high plane demanded. In the territory which Mr. Dixon has retained for touring purposes all applications for bookings are being filed in order of receipt and if possible will be handled in this way when the routes are laid out. From a dozen to twenty-five exhibitors a day have requested first run in the New York district, but Mr. Dixon has not definitely decided regarding this territory.

Beside the New York showing a second production was started in Los Angeles on June 19, another at Chicago on July 3, and a July engagement is promised for San Francisco. It is predicted that by Labor Day "The Fall of a Nation" will be available in all parts of the United States.

The second month of this spectacle at the Liberty theater started on July 4. Summer prices have a marked effect on the public and plans were made to entertain two capacity audiences on the Fourth.

The possibilities of making the interpretation of a photodrama through the medium of music a practical success was demonstrated at the Liberty theater, when several members of the Institution for the Blind attended a showing of "The Fall of a Nation," and proved that with a few explanatory words and music properly synchronized and sufficiently atmospheric as was the score prepared by Victor Herbert, the blind man can visualize by his ear. As a mark of his appreciation of this unexpected commendation Mr. Dixon arranged to have small groups of seats set aside for the blind from time to time during the engagement.

Thomas Dixon has come to the front in answer to the criticisms of his caricature of ex-Secretary William J. Bryan under the name of Hon. Plato Barker in "The Fall of a Nation," with the statement: "It appears to me the film is always singled out for condemnation in respect of matters that do not start even a ripple when presented on the legitimate stage or in the funny columns of the papers. Is the public aware that Mr. Bryan is being caricatured in almost every summer show or revue in the country? Every newspaper cartoonist is privileged to make fun of public characters. Yet when a film author does the same thing hands are held up in horror and 'breaches of decency and national respect' are talked of.

"I attacked Mr. Bryan as a public man and as an opponent of the policies of President Wilson which his actions as secretary and his subsequent resignation at an inopportune moment impeded. I am a firm supporter of Mr. Wilson and his international and domestic policies. I have nothing whatever against Mr. Bryan personally, but claim the right to make legitimate sport of his mistakes which might have cost America dear. Every development of the international situation proves anew from day to day that the professed friend of unpreparedness is the most dangerous enemy to American liberty."

Five-Reels of Vitagraph-General

Vitagraph will release five thousand feet of film on the General Film program for the week of July 10. These will be made up of a three part Broadway Star Feature and two one-reel comedies.

"Waters of Lethe" is the feature, produced in the western studio. Mary Anderson is the star, William Wolbert, the director, and Mrs. Owen Bronson, the author. Jack Mower, Corrine Griffith, Carl Von Schiller and Otto Lederer appear in the cast.

"Wrong Beds" is a comedy of errors in which William Dangman takes the leading role. George O'Donnell, Lucille Crane, Harry Mayo and Florence Natol add to the laughs in this picture which was written by James A. Stiles and produced by Frank Currier.

In the other one-reel comedy, "The Man From Egypt," Hughie Mack has many thrilling adventures. The assisting funmakers include Jewell Hunt, John Flatow, Kate Price and William Shea. The story is a colaboration of G. Graham Baker and Lawrence Semon, and Mr. Semon also directed the action.

Signal Starts on New Railroad Film

Director General J. P. McGowan of the Signal studios is happy in the acquisition of a superior director general in the person of his mother, who has just arrived in Los Angeles from Sydney, Australia. Mrs. McGowan had not seen her son for fifteen years and the reunion was a most delightful one.

The Signal Film Company has completed its production "Judith of the Cumberlands," and will begin immediately upon the final scenes of "The Diamond Runners," work upon which was stopped as soon as the company returned from Honolulu and discovered that "Judith of the Cumberlands" was scheduled for release ahead of this film.

The next production of the company will be a five-reel picturization of the novel by Vaughan Kester, "The Manager of the B and A." Helen Holmes and J. P. McGowan are at work on the preparation of the scenario and the cast will be practically the same as in the Signal-Mutual features. Helen Holmes will appear in the stellar role with a supporting cast including J. P. McGowan, Leo D. Maloney, Paul C. Hurst, Thomas G. Lingham and William Brunton.

Jean Perkins, a Signal stock player, has been engaged to make a series of high and fancy dives each Sunday for an extended period at Hollenbeck Park, one of the Los Angeles resorts.

Director General McGowan has begun negotiations with several western railroads for the purchase of rolling stock to be added to the equipment used in the railroad films.

LEARN TO SWIM ON DRY LAND

Annette Kellerman Will Teach Everyone to Swim This Summer in a Series of Lessons Published in Hundreds of Newspapers

"In 'A Daughter of the Gods' I will be seen performing many extremely dangerous feats in the water," says Annette Kellerman. "I have taught a hundred mermaids who appear with me in many scenes of the picture to do with ease things they never dreamed of attempting before, though they were already splendid swimmers when they came to work with me in Mr. Fox's picture. These feats of modern mermaids are always followed with great interest by the public, for they bring fresh evidence of the splendid influence which the growing popularity of swimming is exerting upon the feminine sex.

"Girls now receive practically from childhood the same athletic training that is given to boys. They are encouraged to take part in all sorts of outdoor sports and thanks to a constantly improving course of physical education in our splendid American schools they now grow up strong, healthy and vigorous.

"It has occurred to me," continued the noted star, "that thousands of boys and girls, and men and women as well, when they see these feats will have a desire to attempt them. My natural inquiry is: Why should they merely attempt them? Why should I not teach them to actually do them?

"Perhaps you do not know that swimming lessons can be taught on dry land. I have taught hundreds of pupils to swim in parks and miles away from the water and then seen them make trips to the water and swim from the very outset.

"I am going to teach all who wish to know by lessons through newspapers in hundreds of cities and then personally drop into many of these cities and see how my classes prove their ability to take instruction from a distance.

"Thousands of parents and hundreds of swimming teachers have done one great wrong in trying to teach children to swim. The old-fashioned method, still practiced by the unthinking, of teaching children to swim by throwing them into deep water with the idea that they will learn to swim is cruel, tremendously dangerous and utterly futile. Mankind, without special instruction or individual practice, is not amphibious. Man learns swimming easily, but instruction is vitally necessary."

Florence Deshon Leaves Spoken Drama

The greater part of Florence Deshon's stage career has been before the footlights, rather than upon the screen, but since her first picture with the Famous Players Company, an engagement with the Fox Company in the West Indies, and her present contract with the Frohman Amusement Corporation have temporarily taken her from the spoken drama entirely.

Florence Deshon and C. Aubrey Smith in Frohman's cinema translation of Locke's great novel "Jaffery."

It would have been easy to prophesy Miss Deshon's adaptability to screen work for she some time ago proved herself the possessor in drama of a remarkable quality hitherto limited to pictures.

Screens show many stars in different places at once but few actresses can accomplish that feat in person.

Yet this is just what Florence Deshon did, during a season in Chicago. Her part in the spectacular drama, "Life," ended with the second act, and by the rise of the curtain upon the last act of "Too Many Cooks" she was in the other theater, made up and ready to step on the stage as an entirely different character.

Miss Deshon's present engagement with the Frohman Company is in "Jaffery," which promises to be a powerful picture version of William J. Locke's most popular novel.

Milwaukee Exhibitors Protest

At a recent meeting of the license committee of the common council of Milwaukee a request was made on part of some society wishing the appropriation of a certain sum of money with which to build municipal theaters in the city of Milwaukee. This is entirely against the wishes and interest of Milwaukee theater owners who in a body went to this committee to protest against any such move. They succeeded in having the matter laid over for four weeks and hope by that time to have it entirely done away with.

The last monthly meeting of the Milwaukee exhibitors took place July 7. Preparations were made for the big preparedness parade which will be held July 15. As quite a number of exhibitors are going to be in Chicago during that time the work will be left to those who remain at home. Exhibitors are going to co-operate with the exchanges and operators, also those connected with the trade in order to have as big a turnout as possible in the parade. All theaters will be closed from 2:00 P. M. to 4:00 P. M. to give everybody connected with the trade a chance to take part in this big public affair.

"Dust"

Five-Reel American Mutual Masterpicture Released July 10. Reviewed by Genevieve Harris

THE combination of the talents of Edward Sloman, director, Julian Lamothe, author, Franklyn Ritchie and Winnifred Greenwood, players, is proving a remarkably good one. This latest production has some extraordinary features and is in general very much worth while.

It is a sociological drama, with a serious purpose, and it presents its points with much effectiveness. One of its best features is that its arguments are all given as the beliefs of the young author-hero, Kenyon, not as a lesson the play sets out to teach. For instance, there is a symbolic insert at the beginning in which the laboring class is shown coining their lives into money for their employers. Any objection to this is silenced when this is shown as a vision of the young sociologist and author and as anyone knows, this vision is a common one of reformers.

Kenyon tears away the badge of "Humanity" which Marion is unworthy of wearing.

Franklyn Ritchie is especially good at depicting this sort of role, of the serious, enthusiastic young man of high ideals. As Kenyon, he is an author with plans for the betterment of humanity, especially the submerged tenth. In his explorations, he finds that the worst working conditions in the city exist in a factory owned by John Moore, to whose daughter Marion he is engaged. Winnifred Greenwood presents Marion most skilfully. She shows her as a young woman of character and decision, but blinded and spoiled by a training which takes little account of the seamy side of life.

An unusual feature of the play is its clever avoidance of sentimentality. For instance, to counteract a rather lofty, although characteristic, speech of the reformer, there is Marion's mocking laughter. And at the death of Mina, the little factory girl, there is a fine touch of irony in the fact that the mother's chief grief seems to be that there will be no one to pay for the piano, the piano which was a contributory cause of Mina's death, since she had overworked in an attempt to meet the installment dues. It is this sort of unexpected twist, this impartiality, which lifts the drama far above the average.

The crowning touch of irony of course is the scene in which Marion deserts her post of duty and allows Mina, an employee of her father's factory, to die, while she herself goes to an entertainment where she enacts the role of "Humanity" in a pageant for the benefit of the Belgians! For Kenyon, unable by words to gain Marion's interest in his work, and thus influence her father, takes the girl to visit Mina, recently injured in a factory accident. Marion, who is on her way to the entertainment for the Belgians, is impatient at the delay. They find Mina unconscious from the effects of an opiate given by her ignorant mother. Kenyon, alarmed at the girl's danger, orders Marion to keep her awake until he returns. Marion follows instructions for a while, then yields to the tempetation to run away to the entertainment. When Kenyon and the doctor arrive, the girl is alone, dead.

Wild with anger, Kenyon goes to the entertainment, where he denounces the hypocritical society folk, tears the badge of "Humanity" from Marion's costume and forces her to return with him to Mina's home. But instead of a usual repentance scene, events turn so that Marion has another chance to laugh at Kenyon's theories.

After this there is a break in the play and the action drags for a little while, as reform bills are enacted by the state legislature, etcetera. But a very sensational and effective scene ends the drama, when Marion's father, inspecting his factory in an attempt to find ways of evading the new laws, is caught in the fire which breaks out. He and many employes are killed, while Marion, waiting for him outside, is a witness of the terrible disaster. This experience, with a realization of what death means, brings a change in the girl's attitude. Much of her inheritance she secretly devotes to good works, and when she is discovered in this by Kenyon, the two are reconciled.

The featured players have a good supporting cast. Nell Franzen plays the role of Mina with sincerity and skill, while Louise Lester is very good as her mother. William Marshall as a young inventor and Harry Von Meyer as Marion's father are also good.

"Quicksands of Deceit"

Three-Reel "Flying A" Drama Released July 13. Reviewed by Genevieve Harris

THIS story concerns a bad little rich girl and a good little poor girl. At least one girl was rich enough to be sent to boarding school, while the other was an orphan. Vivian Rich again plays a "ragged" role, as the runaway orphan, Ida, while Queenie Rosson, sister of Helene, as the other girl, Eleanor, shows that she has her share of the family histrionic ability. George Periolat appears as John Hardy, a farmer, father of Eleanor and foster father of Ida. The skill of this actor at make-up has been commented upon often, but his disguise in this drama is the densest recently seen. There is little chance of his being recognized. And for a change he is not a villain.

The plot of the drama has a number of melodramatic, time-worn situations, not very convincing, but redeemed by some bits of good acting, and by photography and setting generally good. There is an appeal to the sympathy, and the interest of the spectator is held through the various complications. But in general the play's appeal is limited to the patrons of the lower class house.

bor. But instead she elopes with a man from the city while her father believes she is at boarding school. Ida, who knows the truth, is sworn to secrecy. The man deserts Eleanor before her baby is born, and the girl sends for Ida. Eleanor dies, and Ida takes the baby and goes away, letting her benefactor believe that she has deserted her home. Later, the truth becomes known and Hugh begins a search for Ida. She and the baby are found and brought home. Hugh and Ida are married, while the little grandson consoles Hardy somewhat for the loss of his daughter.

The devotion of the adopted girl to her foster sister is a theme which might have been used to better effect, but in this drama it is obscured by a number of improbabilities.

"The Iron Claw"

Nineteenth Episode of the Pathe Serial. Reviewed by George W. Graves

A HUGE boulder which opens and closes by means of one of those mystifying mechanical arrangements proves of great importance in the nineteenth episode of "The Iron Claw." Margery learns the secret of the cave from a note written by the Mask and when the Claw pursues her she slips into the cave. The Claw insists upon getting into the cave and this time his determination robs him of his liberty. Before his villainous deed is accomplished the detectives arrive and place him under arrest.

Add to this the fact that the Mask reveals his identity to Margery and the importance of the mysterious cave can readily be understood. The end of the chapter finds the spectator still wondering about the Mask. To be surprised is one thing and to be dumbfounded is another. We must confess to being dumbfounded at seeing the Mask remove the disguise from his face for Margery's benefit. If we remember rightly we saw the Laughing Mask do the very same thing under different circumstances only a few chapters back and yet Margery is surprised again as she was then, which only goes to show that there is no accounting for the surprises confronting one, viewing "The Iron Claw" from every possible angle.

"The Decoy"

Mutual Masterpicture Released June 29. Reviewed by Thomas C. Kennedy

THIS melodrama produced by George W. Lederer from the story by Herbert Hall Winslow and released on the Mutual Masterpiece Program centers about a young country girl whose faith in her aunt and her own innocence lead her into the toils of a coterie of New York crooks, but this same honesty brings her out of her troubles.

"The Decoy" has a sufficient number of the popular style of melodramatic situations and enough fast action to make it a good story in spite of its theatrical, unconvincing characters and incidents. The crooks quarrel with themselves and they have a desire to make things troublesome for the girl, so between these things and the hero's sterling qualities there is enough going on at all times to satisfy the demand for action. "The Decoy" contains a quantity of situations without ever becoming subtle and it holds the interest consistently.

Frances Nelson, an actress possessing good looks and ability, is the featured player. Miss Nelson plays the part very well and the part, in turn, gives her opportunities to act. She is Glory, the girl who is forced by poverty to write to her aunt in the city for aid. The aunt is not a very motherly sort of woman.

One of the striking spots in "The Decoy."

Her associates are notorious crooks and she invites Glory to come and live with her because Glory may be of aid in some of their deals.

In one of their schemes Glory helps; but she helps the wrong person. She informs the man they cheat at cards of their wickedness. That night she makes her escape from the house. Glory climbs fire escapes and walks over roofs until she accidentally falls through a skylight and finds herself in the apartment of the man who offered her protection because she exposed the perfidy of his card-playing friends.

The leader of the band does not play fair with the younger man and Glory's aunt, and they decide upon revenge. Bannon lures Glory to his apartment and is attacking her when the revenge-seeking Dix arrives and shoots him. Her friend is charged with the murder, but Glory induces Dix to confess by pretending to be in love with him and convincing him of the fact when she tells her fiance "to fade away." When Dix is disposed of Glory and Danvers marry.

The production is good and the photography satisfactory. Gladden James, Leonore Harris, Robert W. Frazer and Frank Beamish, who is very good in the role of Bannon, complete the cast.

"The Dupe"

Lasky-Paramount Drama With Blanche Sweet. Reviewed by Thomas C. Kennedy

A SOCIETY play by Hector Turnbull is the latest starring vehicle for Blanche Sweet and if it is a play which handicaps the star the high class production characteristic of Lasky offerings acts as a balancing element to both. The part given Miss Sweet is much like the others in this play, it is not convincing and no player could be expected to make it real. On her own account Miss Sweet is pleasing as she usually is, and Thomas Meighan plays opposite her in a satisfactory manner.

If either Ethel, the poor girl who becomes the secretary to a society woman and the latter's dupe in an attempt to divorce a worthy but unattractive husband, and Jimmy Regan, the social lion who falls in love with Ethel, were life-like characters it is only reasonable to suppose that Miss Sweet and Mr. Meighan could bring out this quality, but it must be said that they do not. Ernest Joy as the tired-business-man-husband and Veda McEvers as the discontented wife complete the cast.

Regan and Mrs. Strong have a love affair. This is not unusual to Regan for all the ladies in his set have at some time or other attracted Jimmy. He advises Mrs. Strong to engage a secretary. Ethel Hale is the girl employed. She is pretty and simple. Jimmy is immediately taken with her and she, of course, likes him.

Mrs. Strong determines to be free from Strong and married to Jimmy, but the family lawyer tells her that she has no grounds for divorce. First she must prove or have proof of unfaithfulness on the part of her husband. Her opportunity comes when Ethel succumbs to the temptation of appropriating some of her money to purchase an evening gown for the proposed dance. Mrs. Strong promises not to disgrace Ethel if she will take dinner with Mr. Strong. This apparently is evidence enough; but the plan fails. Jimmy is earnestly in love with

Ethel and he saves her from her troubles and in the end announces his forthcoming marriage to the little secretary.

The photography is excellent and so too are the settings. While the play is not convincing and its action is at times quite slow, it must be understood that "The Dupe" is not a dull picture. Spectators wil be interested by the five reels. Neither in placement or wording are the subtitles up to the Lasky standard.

"The Grouch"

Three-Reel Essanay Comedy Drama Released July 22. Reviewed by Genevieve Harris

THIS bright little comedy can be offered any audience with confidence that it will thoroughly delight each member. It contains a number of incidents which are sure to win laughter, but it never approaches slap-stick. The tone of the play is gay but not farcical. Its success depends largely on the clever work of Harry Beaumont and Harry Dunkinson in straight comedy roles. Beaumont is a most likeable juvenile and has the qualities which make for popularity. In this sort of a role especially, he is sure to win a large following among the "fans."

An attempt to cheer up "the grouch."

Dunkinson has the title role, a business man, Dixon, whose disposition makes him very trying to live with or work for. His wife and daughter, as well as his office force, are half terrified, half amused at his rages. Dunkinson acts this role very well, never overdoing it. Beaumont plays Jimmie Bradley, a young college graduate who gets a position as office manager for Dixon, and undertakes not only to systematize his business but to cure his disposition, a thing Jimmy's father, a doctor, has tried in vain to do. Jimmy undertakes this cure because of his interest in Dixon's daughter, Helen, a role played by Virginia Bowker, a pretty ingenue.

There isn't very much plot to the picture. The cure is affected as much by Jimmy's gaiety as by anything he does, although he improves the business and teaches the boss to play golf. At last, the startling change in his conduct arouses the suspicion of his wife, and she and Helen follow him to the country club. When they find him surrounded by a group of pretty girls, it is their turn to be angry. But Dixon wins forgiveness from his wife, while Jimmy convinces Helen that he deserves her gratitude instead of reproach, and the play ends happily for everyone.

Judging from the delight which audiences show at the presentation of comedies of this sort, they come close to being "what the public wants."

"A Milk White Flag"

Three-Reel Selig Comedy Released July 10. Reviewed by Genevieve Harris

THIS is another comedy adapted from a play by Charles Hoyt and featuring Otis Harlan. In some respects it resembles the previous productions of this combination of talents, but it is more entirely farcical than those, which means that it has almost no plot or character drawing and is filled with the sort of slap-stick antics that will send certain audiences into spasms of laughter. At least it has done so in the past, for there is little material in the offering that has not been used many, many times before in farce pictures.

The funeral of a live "corpse" is principal event in the story. Otis Harlan, as Piggott Luce, is the leader of the Milk White Guards, a regiment in a town in which there is a rival regiment, the Black Guards. Piggott sees a chance to invest in an undertaking establishment a sum of money equal to the amount of his life insurance. With his friend, the undertaker, he plots to trick the insurance company by pretending to die. There are the usual incidents and accidents when he is feigning death in the coffin, and at last the White Guards give him a military funeral. When the cannon is fired, the horses run away, spill the coffin before a locomotive which smashes the box, while the "corpse" rolls into a stream below where it quickly comes to life.

Piggott's wife had been suing for divorce just before the supposed death, and the decree is granted after Piggott comes to life. Then, for a surprise ending, Piggott inherits a fortune from an uncle, and at once finds favor in the eyes of the pretty regimental vivandiere.

The supporting cast of players includes Charlotte Minneaux, Grace Darmond, Leslie King and James Bradbury. T. N. Heffron directed the production.

"The Eye of the Night"

Triangle-Ince Drama Has Convincing Atmosphere. Reviewed by Thomas C. Kennedy

AN English fishermen's village is the locale for this drama by C. Gardner Sullivan. It is a picturesque location for a story of the girl whose fatherless child is the cause of a wave of scandal and abuse which sweeps through the puritanical town, and the introduction of an air raid. The period is the present, which serves a good purpose, as it makes way for a number of spectacular scenes which add materially to the value of "The Eye of the Night."

William H. Thompson enacts a role that differs considerably from any he has appeared on the screen in heretofore. He gives a good characterization as the keeper of the lighthouse. Lighthouse keepers are rather picturesque individuals. Somehow one always looks to them to be, above all else, big-hearted and truly charitable, and old David Holden is not disappointing in this or any other respect.

Margery Wilson heads the supporting cast. She is the girl whose lover is called to war and because of this her child is born out of wedlock, which is something in which the villagers find sufficient grounds for according her no sympathy whatever, even without hearing any of the circumstances she has had to contend with. Miss Wilson is a particularly good screen actress. It is within the realm of all probability that, before long, she will have ascended to the heights of stardom.

Jane's marriage to young Benson is prohibited by his parents, who are her guardians. Robert does not learn that she will become a mother until the day set for his regiment to leave for the front, and then it is too late to be married. The child is born in a London charity hospital and as Jane is unable to support herself and the baby, too, she returns to ask the lighthouse keeper to care for it. He insists upon her remaining with him. This angers the villagers and they petition the government to remove Dave from his position as keeper of the East Light, and this is a severe blow to the kindly Dave, but the end finds him happy, for Jane's lover returns; he was wounded, not killed, as the report had it.

The piece was given a splendid production by Walter Edwards. The street scenes in the village and those showing action occurring at night are impressive. Thornton Edwards, J. P. Lockney and Agnes Herring are included in the cast.

"Hearts and Sparks"

The Newest Triangle-Keystone Comedy. Reviewed by Thomas C. Kennedy

"HEARTS and Sparks" is the story of the well known villain who holds the mortgage on the home and uses the important papers as a lever to force the pretty daughter of the house to marry him. This Keystone has a dashing finish; automobiles dash around a track and furnish both thrills and laughs.

Hank Mann, who is the "mean man of means," succeeds in being funny in most instances and he has able support from the others in the cast as well as some good material embodied in the story. Gloria Swanson is one of the prettiest and most pleasing heroines we ever saw in a marry-me-or-starve melodrama.

The wireless spark-plug which is a child of the young inventor's resourceful brain has good comedy possibilities and they are realized in "Hearts and Sparks." The flivver he equips with the wireless plugs is run from a distance. When the villain burns the garage the inventor has only to throw in the switch and the flivver runs itself out of harm's way. Moreover, the spark plug is burglar proof. The spiteful mortgage holder tries to steal one, but it creates too much disturbance when the invisible power is turned on.

Bobbie Vernon, Nick Cogley and Billie Bennett are included in the cast. "Hearts and Sparks" is a satisfying Keystone, which means that it is thoroughly enjoyable entertainment.

Dorothy Gish and Fine Arts Children in Triangle Picture. Reviewed by Thomas C. Kennedy

THE trials and tribulations of the "little old red school house" are set forth in "The Little School Ma'am," which was produced at the Fine Arts Studio under the direction of C. M. and S. A. Franklin. The story is simple to a degree and was written by F. E. Woods and Bernard McConville.

Dorothy Gish is the school teacher and this little Nan who comes from Virginia is much more interesting than any of her persecutors, the narrow small charactered people of the Western town, and all their harsh treatment. Nan is a pretty, wistful little girl and the charming pictures composed by the directors, who always choose the most delightful locations and procure splendid photography, unite with the appeal of this character to make "The Little School Ma'am" a picture of considerable appeal.

As a pleasing, prominent feature of this offering, the Fine Arts children are second to no other phase of "The Little School Ma'am." These children enact an amateur theatrical entertainment which is delightfully amusing. They also are to the front in other portions of the play and the scenes they appear in, while having little to do with the play itself, add atmosphere and they are good enough to rise above their real status, which is padding. The Franklins and the Fine Arts children are a rare combination for filling out a slim story, though, of course, in this respect most of the credit must go to the Franklins.

The story concerns itself with the school teacher's unequal struggle to keep her position at the school, whose management is in the hands of prejudiced town officials. Nan is from Virginia and for that reason she and the visiting novelist, who is also from Virginia, are drawn together by a common bond. She goes driving with the young man one evening and an accident causes them to remain out until daylight. This is grounds for her discharge, but it turns out to be no calamity because the gentleman from Virginia marries her.

Elmer Clifton, George Pierce, Howard Gaye, Josephine Crowell and Millard Webb are in the cast. The photography is excellent and it reveals backgrounds that for sheer beauty are superlative, and these beautiful pictures give the offering distinct charm.

"The Woman Who Dared"

Beatriz Michelena in California Motion Picture Production. Reviewed by Thomas C. Kennedy.

IN offerings from the studios of the California Motion Picture Corporation one looks for a production of singular elaborateness, which condition was brought about by a standard set long since and consistently maintained. Consequently when we say that "The Woman Who Dared" is a capitally produced screen play the inference to be drawn is that the picture is more remarkable than the average elaborate photoplay.

Adapted from the C. N. and A. M. Williamson novel by Captain Leslie T. Peacock, "The Woman Who Dared" tells a story that is replete with interest compelling moments and the construction is masterful. Contrary to all precedent, the play is really too big for exposition in five reels, despite the fact that there is no material for spectacular effects. When shown to the trade and the press, "The Woman Who Dared" ran eight reels, and to make it shorter would require the pruning out of some one or two incidents; for the scenes which are given too much space are the exception.

This strange condition has its drawbacks. "The Woman Who Dared" would be stronger were it shorter, because an eight reel offering which presents nothing in the way of spectacular scenes is too long. Our own impression was that the picture held us but we did not hold the picture for the last two reels; that is to say the action and situations were there in the last two reels as they were in the other six, but we by that time had had enough. If, however, the picture is released in eight reels the fact remains that it will be hailed generally as a great screen melodrama.

The story is laid in Rome. As it is a play strong enough to create its own atmosphere, the director, George E. Middleton, did well to allow that element to care for itself. All outdoor locations have enough depth for the purposes even though the camera in these scenes was placed close to the players. In this way the background of shrubbery, the side of a building or the railroad cars, which, by the way, are particularly good properties, frames the action in a locale that is to all intents and purposes Rome.

Beatriz Michelena is the featured player in a cast of marked ability. The acting is in all particulars excellent. The minor parts are rendered in good style by players who are fine types for the characters. Miss Michelena enacts Beatrix, the French prima donna, who engages herself to an Italian count and steals some important papers of state to aid her own France, impressively and with pleasing sincerity.

William Pike as the American who is of immeasurable assistance to Beatrix when she endeavors to return the document and finally marries her, and Andrew Robson as the Duke and Albert Morrison as the count form a strong supporting cast. These three actors fit themselves nicely into the picture and deserve high praise.

The story is one of adventure and intrigue. It does not call upon the asset that is individual to the camera, which is views of the great out of doors, but for all of that it is good screen material. Owing to the popularity of the novel a synopsis of the play is not necessary here, and, besides, a synopsis could give only a very imperfect idea of the genuinely interesting and suspenseful phases which mark this story as one of great merit. The plot is strong, there is perfect continuity and altogether the play may be said to be an excellent example of scenario construction.

"Who's Guilty?"

Eighth and Ninth Releases of Pathe's Series. Reviewed by George W. Graves

ANNA NILSSON and Tom Moore have highly emotional roles in the eighth number of the "Who's Guilty?" series, entitled "Beyond Recall," in the performance of which they will add to the popularity which their previous efforts have won for them. The story, which has to do with the pitiable partiality of the law, is worked up in an extremely lucid and skillful manner, traceable to a well-written scenario. Good dramatic moments abound, the whole picture inculcating an unwavering interest. The settings are sumptuous and the photography is good. This offering is destined to please.

Edwin Martel, a young man in straightened circumstances, is the main character. His close friend, John Leonard, is engaged to a young woman who openly shows her dislike for Martel. Loenard contemplates an extended trip to South America and asks Martel to accompany him, but makes no mention of this to Margaret.

Martel accepts the invitation and immediately visits the girl who is in love with him. This decision of Martel's brings on a violent scene in which the girl pleads with him to remain at home. When Martel returns from a short visit with Leonard he finds that the girl has committed suicide.

The time for Leonard to sail arrives and as Martel fails to put in an appearance he leaves, thinking Martel gave in to the girl at the last moment. Martel in reality is under arrest, charged with the murder of Elsie. Margaret, who is a student of law, aids in the case against Martel. He is convicted and pays the penalty. Leonard returns and he, as Martel said he could, proves that an innocent man has been executed.

In the ninth number of this series, "The Weaker Strain," the two stars rival their performance in the eighth in effective acting. In their support is Guy Coombs and Octavia Handworth. The story brings up the question of whether or not woman's place is in the home and then sets about in a striking manner to show how, for at least one type of woman, it is. This woman, extremely attractive, with a beautiful voice and perfectly good intents, starts out on the career of a singer. The man who has introduced Laura to society tries to force himself upon her, and to keep the solemn promise which she has made to her husband Laura stabs her persecutor. Her husband, entering the room shortly after the murder, tries to shoulder the blame himself. Laura shows her love for him by trying to convince the officers that she is guilty. But the husband's confession is accepted and he is led off to execution as the picture closes.

"The Eternal Question"

Metro—Popular Plays and Players—Released July 3. Reviewed by George W. Graves

MADAME PETROVA'S presence in a picture always magnifies its value and makes up in a large degree for shortcomings of plot and production. Not many screen stars of the present can boast of such a magnetic presence and such art. Madame Petrova certainly does full justice to this picture, but it cannot be affirmed that it does the same thing by her, for several reasons, the most potent being that it does not carry the desired amount of conviction.

This is not because of lack of good material in the story, but because of frequent anti-climatic periods in its development. The wonderful effectiveness of Madame Petrova, however, and her good supporting cast, the principal members of which are Mahlon Hamilton, Warren Oland and Arthur Hoops, will no doubt lend to the offering enough color to hold an average audience's attention.

Pierre Felix is confident that clothes and environment, not birth and breeding, make the woman. His conviction is of such strength that he makes an enormous wager with a fellow clubman, Ralph Courtland, that he can pick a woman from the streets and make a perfect lady of her within the space of three months. For their test they select Bianca, apparently the daughter of an organ grinder, Ralph leaving for the West shortly after her installation in an expensive apartment. It is a significant fact that Bianca takes to elegant society like a duck to water. Pierre introduces her as a Russian Countess. When Ralph returns he falls headlong in love with the Countess, not dreaming of her true identity.

Ralph is finally brought to the realization that he has lost the wager, and this loss threatens to ruin him. Then Bianca discloses to him some of her history. She is the daughter of the King of Montenaro, escaped from Europe to avoid a forced marriage with the Grand Duke Serdian. Here Bianca's exciting escape from her country and the persecutions of her would-be husband, the Grand Duke, are visualized. After hearing her story, Ralph hastens to prevent the wagered money from being paid over to Pierre, as the latter has lost.

Pierre, bent on revenge, joins forces with the Grand Duke of Serdian, who has come to America to locate Bianca. He kidnaps the woman and delivers her to the Duke on his ship. The manner in which Ralph, Bianca's accepted lover, pursues the ship and wrenches his loved one from the arms of her captor makes a fairly thrilling finish.

A YOUNG bride, in this story in which Edward Coxen and Lizette Thorne are featured, is injured in an automobile accident, loses her memory, and wanders to a farm house where she is cared for. When she recovers, she is still unable to recall her past life. To complicate matters, she and the young farmer, played by Edward Coxen, fall in love. This situation forms the basis of the two-reeler, and while the story is not remarkable nor very plausible, it is well directed and photographed so that it comes up to the average program release. There are some charming outdoor farm scenes, and for excitement there is a well managed automobile wreck scene.

The Belmonts arrive to take Paula home.

Paula, the young wife of Richard Belmont, is cared for at the home of James Benton, after her injury in the wreck. Meanwhile her husband searches in vain for her. Benton falls in love with Paula and she is beginning to return his love, although her unremembered past life stands between them. Then Benton takes a business trip to the city, and it happens that his business is with Belmont. He is a guest at the latter's home and there hears the story of the bride's disappearance and is shown a portrait, which he recognizes.

He does not at once reveal the secret but later, after a struggle with his conscience, he tells his knowledge of Paula. Belmont and his mother go to the farm, where Paula recognizes them and regains her memory.

Alfred Hollingsworth directed the story from a scenario by A. Coldewey. George Field, Dixie Stewart and Bessie Banks complete the cast of players.

"The Weakness of Man"

World Film Offering Produced by Peerless. Reviewed by Thomas C. Kennedy

HOLBROOK BLINN'S acting is the feature of this continuously interesting melodrama produced at the Peerless studio under the direction of Barry O'Neill. There are a few inconsistencies in the play, but they are not of enough account to mar a picture which realizes its full possibilities in the way of entertaining its audience. The director handled the piece capably and effectively.

Mr. Blinn is gifted with a striking presence and in playing the part given him by this story he drew a convincing and interesting character by judiciously combining naturalness with this gift. As David Spencer he never over-acts, and that his character, which is not an unusual one to the screen, so attracts and holds the attention is due to that fact.

Spencer is a worthless sort. He is very rich, or his father is, and he occupies himself with spending his income. Returning from Europe he meets an actress. After their arrival in New York Babbie learns that David is to marry a society girl, a match made by David's father. The girl is heartbroken and she visits David at his apartment. The result is David concludes to break his engagement with Janice and he celebrates the event at a costume party.

The elder Spencer is informed of this and he hurries to the place, and there he dies from a heart attack. Then, in compliance with the wishes stated in his father's will, David marries Janice. The union is an unhappy one, but Janice will not consider a divorce. David finally decides upon suicide. He is presented with an opportunity to play dead and he accepts it. The body found in the river is accepted as that of David Spencer because of the clothes and papers found in them. As a toiler David again meets Babbie. Janice is now happily married to an old friend, and David leaves the past behind him and with Babbie journeys to the Northwest.

A good cast appears in support of Mr. Blinn. Eleanor Woodruff appeals as Janice, a part giving her little opportunity, and Alma Hanlon is a praiseworthy Babbie Norris. Richard Wongerman and Charles D. Mackey complete the cast. The production is good in its entirety and the photography is of a good brand.

"Tom and Jerry" Comedy

First Two-Reel in Comedy Series by the Emerald Motion Picture Company. Reviewed by G. Harris

THE Emerald Motion Picture Company of Chicago has released the first "Tom and Jerry" comedy in a series of ten. These pictures, which are directed by Frederick J. Ireland, feature Tom Keesey as Tom Bradford and Charles Huntington as Jerry Simpson. These roles are amusingly contrasted, for Jerry is short, fat and bald-headed, while Tom is a tall, very thin young man. They go through many laughable antics, made more effective by this contrast.

The comedies are not slap-stick, although the players get into many exciting situations and the action is fast. Much of the material used in this first release and the method of presenting it suggested a vaudeville playette rather than a film farce. This is probably because the leads work together in much the manner of a vaudeville "team" of comedians.

Next to Tom and Jerry in importance are Mrs. Tom and Mrs. Jerry, roles handled skillfully by Rhea Catto Laughlin and Dolores Cassinelli, respectively. These are "straight" roles and the players attractive.

The story in the first two reels introduces Tom and Jerry in their homes and later at their place of business, for they are partners. Their wives are invited out of town for the day, and when an attractive customer, Madame De Luxe, arrives that morning, they decide to entertain her at Jerry's apartment. They do not guess that they are running a two-fold danger, for not only must they keep the affair from their wives, but Madame has a very jealous husband who follows her. So when the wives miss their train and return to the apartment, the audience knows that things will be hard for Tom and Jerry. Then the irate husband arrives, bringing the baby which had been left in his care. So the situation becomes rather complicated for a time. In the end, Tom and Jerry are found out, scolded and finally forgiven.

The second installment promises to tell of "Tom and Jerry in Quarantine."

"The Conflict"

Lucille Lee Stewart Featured in V. L. S. E. Drama. Reviewed by Thomas C. Kennedy

THE elaborate and tasteful settings which Ralph W. Ince used in producing "The Conflict" are comparable, if, indeed, they do not surpass the finest ever seen in a Blue Ribbon Feature. Barring a not particularly good back-drop used in one of the interior scenes, this film is a delight to the eye, for there are a number of remarkably deep sets which in no way suggest studio properties.

The quality of the settings and the acting of some members of the cast are the notable features of "The Conflict." The story tells of a young woman who marries a man she does not love to avenge a wrong done her by another woman. Edward J. Montagne is credited with the authorship of the play, but judging from the printed synopsis distributed to the reviewers and certain under-developed incidents and characters the real author of this play is the person who cut and titled the film. Just who is the author is not a matter of vast importance. This is only another way of saying that the story told by "The Conflict" is not well constructed, nor is it convincing.

Lucille Lee Stewart makes her second appearance on the V. L. S. E. Program and she for the second time gives evidence of an ability which seems bound to win her a notable following and much popularity with the picturegoers. Miss Stewart is distinctly pleasing of appearance and personality and in "The Conflict" some of her scenes are very effectively played. Huntley Gordon heads the supporting cast. He is excellent as Henry Mortimer.

Madeline only marries Mortimer to spite Jeanette and consequently she is not happy with him. Mortimer warns his wife to discontinue gambling but she answers that she will not and that she will get money to continue somehow if he refuses to pay her debts. Jeanette's plan to separate the Mortimers is almost successful, for Madeline cannot resist Paul's love-making. Paul's frequent visits to the Mortimer home and the husband's jealousy lead up to a sitation in which we find Paul the victim of an attack upon his life. He dies from the injury but first he writes out a confession clearing Mortimer and placing the blame upon Jeanette, so in the end the Mortimers find happiness together.

William Lytell, Jr., Jane Mortimer, Frank Currier, John Robertson and Richard Turner are other members of the cast. "The Conflict" is a play that will interest its spectators and though its story impresses not at all, it has qualities which make certain its approval by the average audience.

"The Human Orchid"

Five Part Drama by Field Feature Film Co. Reviewed by George W. Graves

BRIMFUL of stirring action and with an interesting plot, "The Human Orchid," featuring Irva Ross, holds attention riveted for the space of five reels without any difficulty. Not a little difficult acting befalls the star, which she handles in a striking manner. Her girlish charms, the preponderating cause of her misfortunes, register appealingly on the screen. Supporting Irva Ross, who has the role of Ruth Brooks, are Howard Hall, Charles Graham, Walter Miller, Julia Calhoun, Jean Armour and Noah Beery. The play was written and directed by Mr. C. C. Field.

Colonel Troutwood, a wealthy politician, takes into his home Ruth Brooks, an orphan and refugee from her cruel guardian. In payment for his kindness Ruth is able to help him considerably in his work. One day she overhears the terms of a contract and sees it signed by an unscrupulous politician, who for the sum of $10,000 agrees to turn in to the Colonel, who is running for office, the vote of his district.

Late one night Colonel Troutwood enters Ruth's room and, obsessed with passion, forces his attentions upon her. The girl's inducements and pleadings are without effect and a furious struggle, suffering none from the lack of realism, ensues. Finally a candle holder proves to be Ruth's salvation and she departs, leaving her persecutor stretched upon the floor. Some will like the unfeigned brutality depicted in the above-mentioned scenes but others will no doubt classify them as being more indelicate than need be for their dramatic purpose. One thing is certain—that they work one up to a high pitch of excitement.

Ruth applies for aid to District Attorney Sulfin, Troutwood's political rival, and reveals the plot against him, but she is soon disgusted on learning that he intends to employ methods in his own interest as corrupt as those of Troutwood.

Dr. Hilton was an old sweetheart of Ruth's mother, and, at her dying wish has long been searching for Ruth. How he locates the girl, the manner in which the political troubles evolve and his and the girl's part in them, form some good situations. Then, after the turbulent elements have been pacified, Dr. Hilton woos and wins Ruth with as much ardor as he endeavored to win her mother long ago.

S. S. Hutchinson, President of the American Film Company, recently received an offer of $5,000 for a stage which has appeared in "Flying A" Mutual Western films. It probably transported its weight in gold many times for the Wells Fargo Express Co., before the days of trains. Mr. Hutchinson replied that while the stage could be duplicated for a small sum of money, the real thing is desirable because of its "atmosphere" and realism.

Signal Goes Lumbering

The Signal Film Corporation is beginning to make plans for a trip to the lumber country north of Eureka, California, some time this summer for the purpose of staging the exterior scenes in another Signal-Mutual feature. The title of the story has not yet been announced, although, as planned at present, the company will be away several weeks.

While in San Francisco, the Signal Film Company were able to get some unusual motion pictures of the longshoremen at present striking in that port. With absolutely no one willing to incur the strikers' anger by hiring to do their work of unloading the steamers, the crews of the incoming ships and their officers must attend to that duty themselves. As a result S. A. Sues, J. P. McGowan's cameraman, managed to get several feet showing the captain, first, second and third officers busy unloading trunks and similar luggage to the docks.

Painter Ruins "Six Immortal Acts"

Anita Stewart of the Vitagraph company is highly indignant. And no wonder. She has been called immoral—by an illiterate sign-painter, too.

It all happened when an amateur Fordham letter artist, in making a poster advertising the little star in "The Suspect," unwittingly made the announcement read:

"Anita Stewart in six immoral acts in "The Suspect."

F. P. A., who conducts "The Conning Tower" in the New York Tribune, ran the brilliant sign artist's product in his column; then Anita wrote him declaring the show was 99 and forty-four hundredths per cent pure.

A recent decision handed down by the Appellate Division of Albany, New York, declared that Sunday pictures are a nuisance. The case was an appeal by Austin A. Hamlin, the plucky exhibitor who thus loses his second fight.

$500 for Five Words

One hundred dollars a word would not be turned down by many a struggling writer.

That's the rate at which Herbert H. VanLoan, publicity representative for the Universal Film Company, was recently paid for five words which he has just sold to Pathe Lehrman of the L-Ko company for the latter's five real burlesque about to be produced. Van Loan created them some time ago and had them copyrighted.

The words? Oh yes. They are "The Mirth of a Nation."

Women's Company in Difficulties

Another start will have to be made if there is to be a going film producing company "of, by and for women." The concern formed recently in the west upon that basis, has filed bankruptcy proceedings. It was known as the American Woman Film Company and employed nearly one hundred people.

"Far From the Madding Crowd," a picturization of Thomas Hardy's ever popular story of Wales, is the first of the five act Mutual Star Productions in which Miss Florence Turner is to star.

ABOUT BUDDING PLAYS, AND NEWS OF THE TRADE

Big Summer's Work Ahead for Metro

George Baker is New Director—One-Reel Weekly Features to be Added to Output.

METRO PICTURES CORPORATION will run its art factories at a humming speed this summer. In addition to the screen production of "Romeo and Juliet," with Francis X. Bushman and Beverly Bayne in the stellar roles—the most pretentious feature ever offered on this program—several new stars and directors have been engaged, the regular stars and directors are working at top-speed and one-reel weekly features will be added to the output.

Mme. Petrova in Metro's Popular Players' feature "The Eternal Question," released July 3.

George D. Baker, formerly of the Vitagraph Company, is a notable addition to the directing force. Mr. Baker understands the theatrical business thoroughly, having been an actor, author and manager. He was a member of the firm of Baker and Castle, producers of "Graustark," "In the Bishop's Carriage," and "The Goose Girl." His first work with the new company will be directing Emmy Wehlen in a five-part feature.

A notable Bushman-Bayne feature will be "A Virginia Romance." This is the first time the two stars have appeared on the Metro program in a subject less than five reels in length.

Among the new stars at work on Metro productions is Irene Fenwick, who will appear in a five-part wonderplay which is as yet unnamed. As soon as this production is completed Miss Fenwick will start on a new play, "The Guilty Man."

Henry Otto, a recent addition to the directing forces, is supervising May Allison and Harold Lockwood in the making of the final exterior scenes at the Thousand Islands on "The River of Romance," a five-part production which will be released July 17. Mr. Lockwood and Miss Allison will leave in about two weeks for California, where the Metro-Yorke Company has taken over a big studio. Antonio Gaudio, a graduate of the Ambrosio studio in Milan, and one of the best cameramen in the country, will accompany the Lockwood-Allison forces to the coast.

Mabel Taliaferro has begun work on "God's Half Acre," a five-part feature, the first of the six productions which she has contracted to do for Metro.

Mme. Petrova is working at the Popular Plays and Players studio on the final scenes of "The Eternal Question," which was delayed on account of the continued rainy weather. While waiting for sunshine Director Perry N. Vekroff, a newcomer to the Metro fold, began work on "The Secret of Eve," also featuring Mme. Petrova. Upon the completion of this play Mme. Petrova will be starred in a production which she has written herself. She will also assist in the direction of this feature, as she does in every one of her productions.

Edmund Breese will soon begin work on a Popular Plays and Players production. This picture will be another picturization of one of Robert W. Service's poems.

Charles Horan, who has just completed "The Quitter," with Lionel Barrymore in the starring role, is now at work on the scenario of "The Upheaval," which will be ready within a few days with Mr. Barrymore in the stellar part.

Max Figman and Lolita Robertson, who recently joined the Metro forces, have been engaged to make one reel comedy features. Their first offering is "Her Birthday Gift." They are working under the auspices of the Rolma Film Corporation, a newly organized producing company on the Metro program.

Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Drew, who have been making single reel comedy features for Metro, have been away on a two weeks' vacation in the Adirondacks, and upon their return will at once begin work on their popular laughmakers.

Interesting short length features, now a regular offering of the Metro program, are the Metro-Travelogues, which are quite different from other features of this character.

Mme. Ganna Walska, the noted Polish grand opera singer, who recently lost her singing voice, has arranged to appear in pictures while she is undergoing treatment with a throat specialist. Mme. Walska has become a member of the Metro-Rolfe studios and will make her screen debut in a film, as yet unnamed, in which Irene Fenwick is starred.

Edward Brennan, who has been appearing in leading roles in Metro productions, has left for Kansas City where he has accepted the position of director and general manager of the Keller & Eslick motion picture company. Mr. Brennan's first production will be "The Sunflower Princess," which will deal largely with the historical interests of the sunflower state.

Many Sales for "The Yellow Menace"

Margaret Greene, who appears in support of Nat C. Goodwin in the Unity Sales Corporation's "The Marriage Bond," is one actress who believes in the efficiency of dramatic schools as her own career has as its foundation one year of dramatic schooling from which she entered upon a rapid rise to stardom. The Unity Company is planning to feature Miss Greene in a big production shortly.

Jane Meredith, appearing in "The Pursuing Vengeance," claims that "so far as temperament is concerned a broken toe is as good as a broken heart so far as emotional work is concerned." And Miss Meredith speaks from experience for Sheldon Lewis, the star, accidentally trod on and broke one of her toes during a tense emotional scene and the agony depicted on her face was not of the common stage variety.

"The Yellow Menace," which was the first serial ever to be sold on the states rights basis, has been snapped up eagerly by independent exchanges all over the country. Among those acquiring state rights to the serial are: Electric Theater Supply Co., Thirteenth and Vine Streets, Philadelphia; Quality Film Co. Inc., 404 Ferry Street, Pittsburgh; Eastern Feature Film Co., 57 Church Street, Boston; Wm. A. Lochren Co., 16-18 North Fourth Street, Minneapolis; General Feature Film Co., 5 South Wabash Avenue, Chicago; Scott & Sanford, Commerce Street, Dallas, Texas; Famous Players Film Service, 12 Queen Street East, Toronto; Balaban-Hershberg Film Attractions, Chicago. Andrew J. Cobe, vice-president and general manager of the Unity Sales Corporation, states emphatically that "The Yellow Menace" will be in 16 episodes and 16 episodes only.

The Unity Company announces a series of comedies, the first two releases of which will be known as "Tweedledum Torpedoed by Cupid" and "Tweedledum Plays the Hero," featuring the European comedian Perez.

Regarding Animals in Pictures

Editor MOTOGRAPHY:

Our attention has been called to an editorial in MOTOGRAPHY which asserted that no specific instances were given in articles published by this society concerning cruelty to animals in making motion pictures.

We believe that the writer of the editorial had not read the articles in question or he hardly would have made such a statement. We are sending you herewith two copies of Our Animals containing the two articles referred to. You will note we recited details, gave the names of the companies and individual offenders, the judges before whom the cases were tried, the amount of fines, etc., and also showed the pictures of the animals upon whom the cruelty was perpetrated. The cases are matter of record in the courts of New York and Los Angeles. The few pictures not mentioned by title are so closely described that any one interested can locate them without difficulty.

It is not part of our policy to do any one an injustice through a misrepresentation of facts. Our statements of the abuse and cruelty inflicted upon dumb animals to make sensational motion pictures are absolutely true.

Faithfully yours,

MATTHEW MCCURRIE,

Secretary San Francisco Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals, and Editor, Our Animals.

Editor MOTOGRAPHY:

We emphatically agree with the sentiments expressed in your editorial on "Cruelty to Animals." So far as we can determine there has not been more than one or two pictures produced in recent months in which cruelty to animals was shown. People not familiar with the technic of motion picture production, frequently mistake a trick of photography for an actual occurrence. I do not believe that directors in the motion picture companies would be guilty of practicing any wanton cruelty upon dumb animals, used in the production of motion pictures.

Nevertheless it seems advisable to send out a general bulletin cautioning any director that may be careless in this direction from carrying out his intention. Certainly the executive officers of the producing companies would decline to release on their program pictures featuring scenes of this character, which might be offered them by their directors.

We appreciate the editorial you have written on the subject and thank you for the valuable space devoted to it.

Yours very truly,

W. D. MCGUIRE, JR.

Executive Secretary, National Board of Review of Motion Pictures.

Weiss Goes to Central Film

Harry Weiss has resigned his position as asociate manager of the Chicago office of the Bluebird to accept a position as general manager of the Central Film Corporation. Mr. Weiss will handle for Illinois, Wisconsin, Indiana and Kentucky all Clara Kimball Young films as well as the Lewis J. Selznick productions tor Jones, Linick and Shaeffer.

Mr. Weiss has been actively associated with the film industry for a number of years, having been manager of the Chicago office of Metro for one year, also manager of the Chicago offices of the World and Feature Film Corporations.

Cupid Shoots Up "Flying A"

And now Helene Rosson and Ashton Dearholt, popular American Film Company favorites, have been joined in the holy bond of matrimony.

But they were not the first of the "Flying A" colony to step out of single freedom, as Frank Borzage, who plays leads with and directs charming Anna Little, has become a benedict, taking as his life partner, pretty Rena Rogers, who achieved renown as the little leading lady of Vogue comedies.

Mrs. Lonergan Dead

Mrs. Ella A. Lonergan, mother of Phil and Lloyd Lonergan, of the Thanhouser scenario staff, and of Elizabeth Lonergan, scenario writer, journalist and author, died on June 19, after an illness of several months. Mrs. Lonergan is said to be the first woman to have served in a reportorial capacity on a newspaper in this country. The Chicago Tribune is one of the big dailies on which she served. During her newspaper career Mrs. Lonergan attracted considerable attention as a short story writer. The late Thomas E. Lonergan, her husband, was also prominent in newspaper circles in the days following the Civil War in which he was enlisted. Mrs. Lonergan was buried on June 21 from her home at 130 Lefferts avenue, Brooklyn, New York.

Nicholas Power Again Honored

Included among the most notable exhibits shown at the Third National Exposition of Safety held at the Grand Central Palace, New York City, May 22 to 27, 1916, was the display of the Nicholas Power Company. Power's Cameragraph Nos. 6A, 6B, "Road Equipment," the new Nitrogen Lamp Equipment and a model showing comparison of the movement used in the Power's machines and the old Geneva movement discarded by this company some years ago comprised the exhibit of the Power Company. Nicholas Power was awarded the Grand Prize. The Triangle-Fine Arts donation to the Actors' Fund of America has exceeded the twelve hundred dollar mark, according to the report of De Wolf Hopper, who has charge of the subscription list of this studio.

CHILD STAR RULES BY MIGHT OF CHARM.

SO GREAT is the admiration of girldom for Mary Miles Minter, the little Mutual star, that the stage hands have to string ropes around the "set" in the big glass studio at American's Santa Barbara plant.

Mary Miles Minter is so comfortable at American's Santa Barbara studios that the says she doesn't even miss New York.

Little Mary (and her mother) occupies a luxurious home and owns a large new automobile which she is learning to drive.

So far, in "Youth's Endearing Charm," she has appeared only in rags; but when she blossoms out in the fashionable gowns as the petted darling of a millionaire's home, it is expected the older leading ladies will sit up and take notice.

When Samuel S. Hutchinson, president of the American Film Company, Inc., induced Mary Minter to sign a contract to appear before the camera for the American Mutual, he promised her and her admirers that he would provide the very best in stories, direction and studio equipment. He is living up to his part of the agreement to the last letter—and in doing so, has secured the services of the eminent director, James Kirkwood, to pilot the child star under the "Flying A" banner.

Mr. Kirkwood has directed such favorites as Mary Pickford, Dorothy Gish, Henry Walthall and Blanche Sweet, and many others. His theory is that the motion picture is the fundamental form of art expression, with the future as definitely assured as the future of the drama, music, sculpture and painting.

With this invincible combination, it is easy to predict the result.

The Hippodrome in Dallas, a beautiful 1,200-chair theater, will soon open under the Hughes-O'Rourke Construction Company management. These people are operating the Jefferson, with Ray Stinnett as house manager. The Hippodrome will use features and vaudeville.

One of the first productions to be played under the new management is "The Unwritten Law," the Beatriz Michelena production from the California Motion Picture Corporation studios.

The house has been closed for a number of weeks, and was sold under the hammer about two months ago, Hon. Will H. Atwell, former U. S. district attorney, buying it in at $12,500. He stated at the time that he was representing other parties, and did not make the purchase for himself.

The film baseball clubs in the City Major League of Dallas had a disastrous day, Sunday, June 18.

The Motion Picture Cubs, of which E. T. Peter is the owner, were drubbed by the Bears by a 10 to 2 score; and the Consolidated Cats, Ned E. Depinet, manager of the Consolidated exchange, owner, was trampled under by the 7 to 2 route by the Panthers.

The Queen Theater of Dallas played a week's engagement of the new Lois Weber production, "Where Are My Children?", featuring Tyrone Power, and it is now running in other Hulsey Theaters in Texas. During the entire week full houses were secured. The people of Dallas were strongly attracted by the production, and much talk of it could be heard on the streets and in the homes.

J. J. Hegman, Majestic Theater, Temple, Texas, made a record run in his new car, from Temple to Dallas, in seven hours last Sunday. "J. J." came to Dallas to see the boys around the exchanges and book some big attractions, and decided he would try out his recently purchased automobile.

With the arrival back to Dallas of C. R. Scott and F. M. Sanford, who have been in New York for the past several weeks, things began to hum in the "1900 Block" on Commerce street.

Scott and Sanford brought back with them a number of attractive contracts for film, among which are "The Yellow Menace," "Tweedledum and Tweedledee" comedies; "Diana, the Huntress," "The Marriage Bond," "Tom & Jerry" comedies, and Tom Terriss' late feature, "My Country First."

These gentlemen have a large office space at 1911½ Commerce street. It is probable that an exchange, under the Dallas office, will be opened in New Orleans for handling the Louisiana-Arkansas section of their territory.

Prior to July 15 the concern, which is now under the name of the Unity Film Exchange, will give a trade showing in Dallas and another in New Orleans. At these trade showings seven reels of the "Tweedledum and Tweedledee" comedies, nine episodes of "The Yellow Menace," "Diana," "The Marriage Bond," and some of the "Tom and Jerry" comedies, will be shown the exhibitors.

A. W. James has moved into his new Airdome at Broken Bow, Oklahoma, where he has a house seating 400. Stock, repertoire, musical comedy and pictures will be used. The house is called "The Strand," and is owned by King and James.

The O'loma Photoplay School gave a minstrel for the benefit of the Muskogee band at the Hinton Theater June 20 and 21. Muskogeeites were well pleased with the offering, which was a burlesque on "motion picture studio work." The O'loma Photoplay school has been in business in Muskogee, Oklahoma, for several months.

Eureka Springs, Arkansas, has three picture houses, but at the present time only one is running, the Empire, which is using features from the various feature programs.

Ensley Barbour has leased the Folly Theater at Oklahoma City, where he will play tabloids and pictures. Raleigh Dent has been selected as house manager.

The Star Theater at Smithville, Texas, managed by Alfred A. Bauscher, burned May 13, but is now being rebuilt on a more extensive scale. The new house will seat 600 and be equipped with all modern paraphernalia. A. D. Baker Amusement Company, of which A. D. Baker is general manager, will have charge of the house. This concern also manages theaters in San Marcos, Brenham, Luling, Shiner and Gonzales, Texas.

The Key Theater, Houston, Texas, operated by Miss E. Johnson, one of the few lady exhibitors in the Southwest, has been remodeled throughout and 350 new upholstered opera chairs installed.

The Lincoln Theater at Houston, Texas, has been completed and is now under the management of Miss E. Johnson, who also has the Key Theater. The Lincoln was built at an outlay of $20,000 for colored people only; it seats 600, and has a Style K Wurlitzer Unit orchestra.

The Pastime Theater at Canadian, Texas, has been remodeled throughout and new opera chairs installed. It is under the direction of T. V. Humphreys.

Paul Baracco has a new motion picture house on the north side of Main street in Houston, Texas, which seats about 500, and is getting good business.

Anthony J. Xydias, the veteran censorship scrapper at Houston, Texas, has found that it is more profitable to book film for a number of towns and has accordingly arranged with six or eight exhibitors to use all the film he uses. When he books a production now, he gets the lowest possible rate for the several towns, saving money for himself and the exhibitors aligned with him in this enterprise.

A CHILDREN'S FAVORITE

Mary Miles Minter is probably not excelled in popularity with the growing generation of picture fans; and her admirers are not backward about writing letters of loving approbation.

One little girl recently wrote as follows

My dear little Mary:

You don't know how I love you and your acting. This is Sunday and I went to church with my papa and mama, but I am afraid it didn't do much good for I just sat there and thought of you more than I did of the Lord.

Mary, tiny, dimpled, laughing, golden-haired, is now busy in her first picture for the American Film Company, Inc., under the personal supervision of Samuel S. Hutchinson.

The picture is called "Youth's Enduring Charms," a strikingly appropriate title for this tiny actress' photoplay effort.

Complete Record of Current Films

Believing the classification of film pictures by the nature of their subjects to be of greater importance to the exhibitor than clsasification by makes, MOTOGRAPHY has adopted this style in listing current films. Exhibitors are urged to make use of this convenient tabulation in making up their programs. Films will be listed as long in advance of their release dates as possible. Film manufacturers are requested to send us their bulletins as early as possible. Reasonable care is used, and the publishers cannot be responsible for errors.

Brief Stories of the Week's Film Releases

General Program

The Squaw's Love—BIOGRAPH RE-ISSUE—JULY 10.—Featuring Mabel Normand, Alfred Paget, Claire McDowell and Dark Cloud. Gray Fox, the friend of White Eagle, loves Wild Flower, the chief's daughter, but when he asks her father's sanction, he is exiled for his presumption and taken off into the wilds and deprived of his firearms. Starvation would have been his fate had not White Eagle, on a hunting trip, happened along. White Eagle promises to bring Wild Flower to Gray Fox and when Silver Fawn, his sweetheart, sees him stealthily leaving the camp with Wild Flower she thinks her lover false. She follows the fleeing pair and creeping up behind hurls Wild Flower into the stream, from which she is rescued by Gray Fox and after the meeting of the four an explanation is given and they make good their escape.

Otto the Sleuth—LUBIN—JULY 10.—Featuring Davy Don. The sleuth is notified that a pet canary has been stolen from a nearby residence and the owner asks him to investigate. He questions the servants, but their boldness makes him uncomfortable. Finally the mistress comes in and he asks her for the bird cake, which she is holding, to be taken home. The sleuth cannot find a clue and finally plans to get a bird like the one stolen, replace it and get the reward. This is done, but when he arrives at the house he hears laughter and peeking through the curtain he discovers that the real bird has been found. The folks spy him and seeing the cage behind his back they ask for it. The husky butler grabs the cage and seeing bird in it they all have a laugh and order him out of the house.

A Milk White Flag—(THREE REELS)—SELIG—JULY 10.—Featuring Otis Harlan. A review appears elsewhere in this issue.

The Private Officer—(TWO REELS)—ESSANAY—JULY 11.—Featuring Francis X. Bushman and Beverly Bayne. Harry Lampton discovers that Lieut. Frothingham, his rival for the hand of Muriel March, is a fortune hunter and denounces him to the girl. The lieutenant enters at this moment and Muriel declares she will marry him. Lampton to forget joins the army and is assigned to Frothingham's troop and the lieutenant lets no opportunity pass to humiliate him. Shortly after Frothingham leaves the post and he goes on a debauch. His failure to return for guard mounting means disgrace and Lampton taking advantage of his facial resemblance to the officer, poses in his place and saves him. The colonel discovers the affair and the girl learns the truth and Lampton is commended and wins the girl.

The Half Wit—LUBIN—JULY 11.—Featuring L. C. Shumway. Ned, a half-wit boy and who is a good mimic, is used as a tool by a gang of crooks led by Bud Adams, and he finds a sincere friend in Theresa, the daughter of Mancuso, a wine merchant. The Mafia are after Mancuso and he plans to escape their demand by selling out his business and leaving the city. Theresa confides this to Ned who is disconsolate because he loves her. In his despair he tells the story to the crooks and they plan to rob Mancuso. Ned, however, finds out their intentions and by mimicing Bud Adams' voice he lures the gang into the cellar of Theresa's home, where they are caught in a trap. Theresa rushes for the police and the gang are captured, but not until they have knocked Ned unconscious. Ned recovers from the operation performed on his brain and he is no longer a half-wit. A wealthy banker offers to send Ned to college but he is loyal to the only friend he had in the old days and gives up the promised career to marry lonely Theresa.

Men and Women—(THREE REELS)—BIOGRAPH—JULY 12.—Featuring Blanche Sweet, Lionel Barrymore, Marshall Neillan and Gertrude Robinson. Robert Stevens is sentenced to six years in prison for robbing the bank where he is employed through the efforts of Calvin Stedman, the prosecuting attorney. At the expiration of his sentence he settles in Arizona taking his little daughter Agnes with him and assumes the name of Stephen Rodman. He prospers and later is elected governor. Agnes, now in an eastern school, is in love with Will Prescott, the brother of her school chum, Dora, who is loved by Ned, Will's chum and assistant at the Jefferson National Bank, where Will is cashier, and Calvin Stedman, who is counsel of the bank. Ned and Will speculate through Arnold Kirke, and Ned wins and Calvin seeing Ned in Kirke's office and knowing that speculating is contrary to the rules of the bank, gets Ned into trouble. Will takes bonds belonging to the bank and loans them to Kirke, who is on the verge of ruin. Ned is accused of the theft and when Rodman, who has come east to visit his son-in-law to be, learns this he goes to Cohen, the president of the bank, and states that he is willing to supply the funds to save the bank if Ned is not prosecuted. Finally Will gives himself up and Governor Rodman makes good the amount of Will's defalcation and they leave the east for Arizona, where Will with Agnes starts life over again amid new surroundings.

The Fable of the Small Town Favorite, Who Was Ruined by Too Much Competition—ESSANAY—JULY 12.—The daughter of a well fixed mortgage shark, residing at a way station, had all the component parts of a peach. She got her fashion hints, etiquette and behavior from the questions and answers department of an agricultural monthly. Gabby Bill, the gay young drummer from the city, met the peach at a lawn fete. Things progressed nicely. There, unfortunately for Willie, daughter induced father to send her to a finishing school. There she met the other kind and found her ideal. Gabby Bill came to town when she was home for the summer vacation. "Don't you know me?" he asked when they met. "Rully," she said, "it seems that I have seen you somewhere. Are you the man who tunes the piano?" As he moved away he kept his hand on his Solar Plexus. Moral: Anybody can win unless there happens to be a second entry.

Spring Cleaning—VIM—JULY 12.—Featuring Harry Meyers and Rosemary Theby. Hubby gets home from the road and prepares to enjoy a few days at home, when Wifey announces that she will begin her spring cleaning. Hubby immediately has business at the office, but the boss is heartless and sends him home. He meets Bill, a trusty friend, and arranges with him to send a telegram demanding Hubby's immediate presence in Jersey City on business. All day Hubby looks for the telegram to arrive. In the interim he gets in bad with Wifey over the spring cleaning. His meals are irregular and unsatisfying; he cannot sleep after 5 a. m. At last the telegram arrives and he tells Wifey he must be off. She advises him to open the wire. He does so and reads: "Stay home and help your wife. Bill." Then he sinks through the floor.

Expiation—(THREE REELS)—LUBIN—JULY 13.—Featuring Octavia Handworth and E. K. Lincoln, Jack Hammond on his return from college decides to spend his life assisting his mother in philanthropic schemes and his mother tells Jack the story of her life. Her father, an Englishman, found it necessary to live in Turkey where she, his only child, grew up into girlhood. At the outbreak of the Crimean War, their home is captured and the girl is assaulted by one of the Russian officers and the next day she finds an old fashioned seal ring which she shows her son. Jack vows to kill the man who ruined his mother's life, should they ever meet. Jack and his mother come to America and here meets Alfred Gerard and Elsie, his only child, and Jack falls in love with Elsie, while Gerard becomes interested in Mrs. Hammond. Sometime later Jack asks Alfred for Elsie in marriage and is told that Elsie is not Gerard's daughter, but a waif and tells Jack the story of his life, which is a repetition of his mother's story. Jack then shows Gerard the ring and he demands to know where he got it. Jack tells him that he is his son and that he has sworn to kill him, but Gerard takes the revolver from him and leaves the house. Elsie and Mrs. Hammond see Gerard about to kill himself and rush to him. Mrs. Hammond jogs Gerard's elbow with the result that he only receives a scalp wound. Mrs. Hammond takes his head in her arms and declares her love for him just as Jack comes upon the scene and he tells Gerard that this expiation must take the form of making his mother happy as she loves him.

Spaghetti—VIM—JULY 13.—Featuring Babe Hardy and Billy Ruge. Between attending to business calls and endeavoring to keep his assistants from making love to his pretty cashier, Runt has his hands full. To mend matters, his chef spoils the meal of a regular customer and he, being a typical son of Sunny Italy, shows his disapproval by trying to divert the circulation of the culinary artist's blood. In despair, Runt employs Plump as head chef. The latter's gifts are more in the line of lovemaking than in preparing the menu and Runt discovers to his horror that he has only added another nuisance to his establishment. Things go from bad to worse. The Italian gentleman calls for another meal and Plump's cooking sends him into a couple of fits, in the course of which he makes good his threat and cleans up the whole place. Spaghetti flies through the air. Plump runs away with the cashier and poor Runt, trying to quell the disturbance, is finally buried under volley after volley of the stringy mixture.

The Dupe—(Three Reels)—Knickerbocker—July 14.—Featuring Frank Mayo. Working his way through college, Frank Jackson becomes chauffeur for Rogers, a wealthy clubman, who neglects his wife. Mrs. Rogers falls in love with Frank. Rogers catches Frank examining his pocketbook and accuses him of theft. He then demands that Frank furnish him with divorce evidence. Frank accepts, then warns Mrs. Rogers. She begs him to stay and protect her. Rogers forces attentions on his wealthy ward, Florence Milburn. She meets Frank and they fall in love. Mrs. Rogers declares her passion for Frank, and he goes away. Detectives hired by Rogers find her about to kill herself. Frank finds Rogers trying to kiss Florence and beats him off. The lovers are happy while Rogers and his wife are miserable.

The Great Safe Tangle—Vim—July 14.—Featuring Robert Burns and Walter Stull. Lark, the lawyer, who has ordered the new safe has accepted from his friend Shark some valuable papers, which Robin, a clerk in Shark's office, but in reality the spy of a foreign government, is anxious to obtain. After an arduous journey Pokes and Jabbs arrive at the office building where despite the protests of Lark that it was he and not Shark that had ordered the new safe, the terrible truckmen deliver the safe in Shark's office. Then they forcibly take from Lark's office his own safe in which Robin disguished as a girl had concealed himself. On their way back to the store with Lark's safe, Pokes and Jabbs get stuck fast on the railroad tracks in front of an oncoming express. With a crash and thud the train hurls them high in the air but with the good luck that always accompanies the pair they fall through the roof of the office building and back into Lark's office, safe, Robin and all.

The Secret of the Night—(Turee Reels)—Essanay—July 15.—Featuring Lillian Drew and Sydney Ainsworth. Against her father's wishes Evelyn Glenn marries John Martin, a detective. For a year they are happy together and then Martin suddenly disappears. He has been struck by lightning and becomes a victim of asphasia. With memory of his identity completely obliterated, he, strangely enough, takes up his same line of work. As Thomas Harding he becomes a famous detective. His wife lives on in darkness concerning the mystery of her husband's disappearance. Grace, her daughter, grows to womanhood and is to marry Carrol Johnson. Francois Maudont, a French adventurer posing under the name of Cuthbert, fascinates her and possesses a hypnotic power over the girl which puzzles her mother. She appeals to a detective agency and Thomas Harding is assigned to the case. The shock of meeting with the familiar surroundings of the past brings back his memory and John Martin and his wife begin life where they left off years before.

Hang on Cowboy—Lubin—July 15.—Black, a human vulture who preys on innocence, selects the day to lure little Bess to the city that Jack, a cowboy, decided to go to town for a ring and marriage license for his sweetheart Nan. Jack comes through the danger zone with his life, leaving the trail of excitement behind him—a soda emporium that needed repair, a bootblack stand with Italians ranged in front frozen with fear, a police station astonished and its clerks terror-stricken, a fire department that to a man didn't know whether to laugh or be angry, a wrecked joint in the tenderloin, the four men who had trapped Bess jailed in jig time, and the thoroughly repentant and frightened Bess clasped in her mother's arms. Jack rode to the ranch with the ring, a somewhat mussed marriage license, a broad and battered grin, and the declaration that he had had "a bully day."

Legal Advice—Selig—July 15.—Featuring Tom Mix and Victoria Forde. Ruth Sands, an eastern girl, arrives at Coyote Flats, to practice her profession as an attorney at law. Tom Walton, the ranch foreman, falls in love with the beautiful woman-lawyer, and decides to get into trouble. He steals the sheriff's horse, and riding into town, shoots up the main street. He is arrested and thrown into jail. The day of Tom's trial arrives, and all the cowboys are on hand to hear Ruth defend him. While Ruth is pleading the case, she looks toward the door and there stands a well-dressed eastern fellow, who proves to be her husband. They rush into each other's arms and when the cowboys learn who the newcomer is, the court case is immediately suspended.

Mutual Pictures

Love's Bitter Strength—(Two Reels)—American—July 10.—Featuring Ed Coxen, Lizette Thorn and George Field. A review appears elsewhere in this issue.

Stung, By Gum—Vogue—July 11.—Featuring Rube Miller. Rube, the chief of police, in love with Madge, who favors art, is very fond of raw eggs and is in the habit of taking them from the hen house of Madge's father. He complains to Rube and Rube sets a trap and so arranges it that the farmer is made to believe that Art is the guilty party. He is given the choice of marrying Alice, Madge's sister, or going to jail and he chooses to marry Alice. On the day of the wedding Madge and Alice change clothes and Alice is married to Rube and Madge to the man of her choice and when Rube sees the face of his bride he faints away.

Two Slips and a Miss—Beauty—July 12.—Featuring John Sheehan, Carol Halloway and John Steppling. Noah Goode, a clubman when his wife isn't around, spends most of his time and money on Midgi, an actress. Mrs. Goode wonders where hubby spends his evenings and resolves to find out. She goes to hubby's office and is told that he just went out to lunch. She follows him and finally discovers him at the beach with Midgi, but he cleverly evades her and gets rid of Midgi. And of course Mrs. Goode is easily satisfied when Noah calls Midgi a worthless thing and embraces her hubby who promises "Never Again."

Quicksands of Deceit—(Three Reels)—American—July 13.—Featuring Vivian Rich and Alfred Vosburgh. A review appears elsewhere in this issue.

The Hero of E. Z. Ranch—Cub—July 14.—Featuring George Ovey. Louise, in order to make an investigation at her ranch, arrives at the place disguised as a maid, while her maid is disguised as the ranch owner. As a result the maid, Elsie, is made much over and Louise is neglected. After many troubles about the ranch, most of which are indirectly caused by Jerry, Louise reveals herself, discharges all the employees and takes Jerry in as her partner.

Nuggett Jim's Partner—(Two Reels)—Mustang—July 14.—Featuring Frank Borzage, Anna Little and Dick LeReno. Hal, the son of a wealthy business man, is driven from home by his father, and sometime later he finds himself somewhere in Arizona. Nuggett Jim, a miner, discovers Hal in his cabin and attacks him and then forces him to come to his mine and work for the food he has eaten. That night Hal tells Jim that he intends to stay with him and work his mine for him. Madge, Jim's daughter, who is an entertainer in a dance hall, begs her father to allow her to return home, but Jim refuses. Hal takes matters into his hands, however, and Madge returns home. Time passes and Hal has come to see the folly of his ways and determines to make a man of himself. Hal receives a letter from his father begging him to return home and Hal concludes that he must go but at the depot he changes his mind and goes back to the two people whose lives he has changed so much and who have incidentally made him a worth while man.

The Fool's Game—(Two Reels)—Centaur—July 15.—Featuring Crane Wilbur. Peyton Carothers and Margaret Grayton fancy themselves in love, and they plan to attain their ends by making a fool of Van Allen, a millionaire. The latter is desperately in love with Margaret, and she promises to marry him for the sum of one million dollars. Sometime after the marriage Van Allen discovers his bitter mistake. One day, after finding his wife in the arms of Carothers, Van Allen decides to administer a severe lesson to the two who have used him to meet their own ends. This he does by handcuffing them together and locking them in a deserted cabin. His plan ends very satisfactorily, for "familiarity breeds contempt." Margaret at last recognizes that her husband is more than worthy of her love.

The Rummy Act of Omar K. M.—Beauty—July 16.—Featuring Orral Humphrey. Omar K. M. disappears from his home and of course Mrs. K. M. needed her helpful husband and when she noticed the chap was gone she decided to do a little investigating. She goes to the winery and forces the clerk to tell her that her spouse had bought wine for a "chicken," and enraged she goes out to look for him. She comes across the chariot driver, and after a short conversation she gets the information she wanted and hires him to take her to the cottage in the woods, where Omar is telling the sweet "Thou" how much he loves her company. She forces her way into the cottage and the wine jug with fugitive articulation was hurled at his head and when he came to he was in his own back yard, where a blow from the broomstick set him back ages.

A Deep Sea Liar—VOGUE—JULY 16.—Featuring Paddy McQuire. Admiral Shimsky comes to St. Clair Hotel to confer with Murray Sinclair, the Moth Ball Magnate, regarding the latter's invention. Moon, a government agent, is in love with Rena, the inventor's daughter and has unsuccessfully tried to buy the invention and in an endeavor to secure it he hires two men, Bloggie and Bill, to answer an advertisement which reads that the hotel needs the services of two ex-sailors to attend to the wants of the Admiral. Employed in this capacity the bungling men finally obtain the wanted papers and also the wallet of Shimsky, which finally turns out to be filled with stage money by Shimsky. He flees and the bungling men are not long following him.

Universal Program

The Leap—(TWO REELS)—EPISODE 9 OF PEG O' THE RING.—Featuring Grace Cunard and Francis Ford. In this episode the circus plays in a town near the Mexican border where there is a threatened uprising. Mrs. Lund and Marcus bribe some Mexicans to get Peg out of the way again, and this is successfully done after a hard fight between the Mexican forces and a band of cowboys to whom Peg has applied by wire to come and help the border town.

Henry's Little Kid—NESTOR—JULY 10.—Featuring Jack Dillon and Billie Rhodes. This story deals with the familiar difficulty that arises when a father, who has promised his son a liberal sum of money in consideration of the latter's child, arrives on the scene in person to inspect the happy home. As Billie and Henry are not yet married it behooves them to put up a good deception. The latter fails, however, and it is only Billie's womanly persuasion which appeases the father's anger.

Nature Incorporated—(TWO REELS)—GOLD SEAL—JULY 11.—Featuring Herbert Rawlinson and Agnes Vernon. This story, written by Sinclair Lewis, was published in the Saturday Evening Post during the past year. It deals with what transpires after Billy, far-famed as a lover of good things to eat, to win the girl of his heart, takes up his life in a health colony where nuts are the main articles of food.

A Stranger in His Own Home—IMP—JULY 11.—With Matt Moore and Jane Gail. When William hears that his mother-in-law is coming to visit him, he leaves home intending to drown his sorrows, for he has already seen more of his wife's relatives than he can stand. Mother-in-law arrives at William's house only to find it inhabited by a drunk who has entered via the coal bin. Her mistaking the latter for William leads to curious situations which terminate with mother-in-law's expulsion from the house.

The Laugh of Scorn—REX—JULY 11.—Written by William A. Lathrop and produced by Ben Wilson. Featuring Ben Wilson and Edna Hunter. John Harding, a novelist in need of rest and change of scene, takes up school teaching in Eastern Tennessee. One of his promising pupils is Dixie Davis, daughter of an illiterate mountaineer. His kindness to her enrages Steve, who disputes Dixie's right to smile on anyone but himself. The difference between the men finally leads to Steve's death and the story closes with the happiness of Dixie and Harding.

Ignatz's Icy Injury—L-KO—JULY 12.—Featuring Billy Armstrong and Lucile Hudson. Ignatz, the Ex-Minister of Hosiery to the Siberian Monarch, has a habit of hanging around the mansions of the Four Hundred. How he is extinguished socially and how his rival gets old Rustlebuck's daughter, makes for much intense and laughable action. Some thrilling stunts atop a skyscraper are a remarkable feature of this offering.

A Conflicting Conscience—VICTOR—JULY 12.—With Bertram Grassby and Maud Emory. Marie Allen's neglect to inform her husband that before meeting him she had been a moded for Van Dusen, an artist, gives the latter a working point in attempting to force his unwelcome attentions upon her. In revenge for Marie's repulses, Van Dusen surprises Frank Allen by showing him a nude picture of Marie which he had formerly painted. But reason finally prevails over sudden anger and the wife's secrecy is finally forgiven.

Coming American Mutual dramas. From the top, "Love's Bitter Strength," "Quicksands of Deceit," and "Nugget Jim's Pardner."

The Three Brave Hunters—BIG U—JULY 13.—In this juvenile comedy, three hunters stop at the inn and take Helene's attentions away from Dave, her lover. The latter decides to discredit the hunters, and this he does with his friends by means of animal disguises. The hunters' cowardice is easily shown and they are run out of town.

No. 16 Martin Place—(TWO REELS)—LAEMMLE—JULY 13.—With Dorothy Davenport and Emory Johnson. This story tells how a noted criminologist with the help of Cleo, a singer at the Follies Cabaret, ferrets out the murderer of Mrs. Browne. The culprit proves to be no other person than Mr. Browne, her husband, who is a victim of the drug habit and of the wiles of Audrey, another drug user. After the completion of their success, Fournier, the criminologist, and Cleo become partners.

Sammy Johnsin Gets a Job—POWERS—JULY 13.—Pat Sullivan depicts his character of Sammy Johnsin in this cartoon comedy as having a curious dream in which he visits a land where cannibals abound. As is usual with dreams, Sammy wakes at the crucial point and is brought rudely to earth. On the same reel is:

Mexican Natural History.—Pictures taken under the direction of Raymond Ditmars, curator of the New York Zoological Park.

The Little Gray Mouse—(TWO REELS)—IMP—JULY 14.—Featuring Harry Benham and Edith Roberts. This story has to do with the manner in which Felice, the heroine, saves an old man from being betrayed by a woman whom he has learned to trust, and from becoming the victim of a "badger game." Felice is released from the convent to which she has been confined, by the return of her father, formerly reported dead, and thus she is able to marry the man with whom she has shared her experience.

Little Boy Blue—VICTOR—JULY 14.—Adapted from the poem by Eugene Fields and produced by Rupert Julian, who plays the part of the poet. The latter is estranged from his wife. He is harsh with his wife because he thinks she neglects their little son. After the boy's death the poet receives an inspiration from the toys which were his son's constant companions and the verse he writes reunites the remorseful husband and wife.

The Human Pendulum—(THREE REELS)—BISON—JULY 15.—Story and production by Henry McRae. This is a railroad melodrama dealing with an honest engineer's troubles in completing the construction job because of a dishonest assistant. The picture presents a thrilling rescue of a girl who is thrown over a cliff by a runaway horse. The engineer marries the girl, who is the daughter of the road president, after rescuing her three times.

The Harem Scarem Deacon—JOKER—JULY 15.—Produced by Allen Curtis, this comedy tells of a clergyman who is selected by a reform society to investigate conditions in Chinatown. His first acquaintance is a dancer named Celeste. He follows her until he arrives in an opium den. Assured that to smoke opium is a harmless diversion he makes the attempt. In his dreams he is the Pasha and the head of a great harem. He awakes to find his former associates in the reform party busy in bringing him back to consciousness. He is reproached by them but he cares little about that, for Celeste takes his part. Gale Henry, Wm. Franey and Lillian Peacock are in the cast.

Two Seats at the Opera—IMP—JULY 16.—A comedy involving an Irish plumber, a maid of all work and her employers. The head of the house is given tickets to the opera by the physician who advises some relaxation. These tickets cause a series of complications and out of the rapid action, some of it of the slapstick variety, comes happiness for the plumber and the cook.

Flirting With Marriage—No. 2 OF BASEBALL BILL SERIES—LAEMMLE—JULY 16.—Featuring Billy Mason. Bill and Penpoints, out of work, notice a sign outside of a Swedish restaurant reading "Dining Room Girl and Chambermaid Wanted." Penpoints appropriates some clothes from a line, dresses Bill as a maid and induces him to apply for the job. Bill gets it and becomes the proprietor's favorite. The latter takes Bill to a ball game and when he (the proprietor) is forced to absent himself from the game, Bill steps in, pitches perfect ball and wins the game. Later on the proprietor makes Bill a proposal of marriage and gives him fifty dollars to purchase a new dress. The fifty is used to pay a fine which Penpoints has incurred, and the story ends with both pals again out of cash.

The Crimson Yoke—(TWO REELS)—REX—JULY 16.—Produced by Cleo Madison and W. V. Mong. Miss Madison plays the part of a freeborn Octoroon girl who is in love with the son of her mistress, a woman of fine family connections. The young Casimir gambles heavily and signs a note against his mother's possessions. The note is held by a slave dealer and to save the man she loves from utter disgrace Nina offers herself to the slave dealer to be sold into slavery. The dealer is in love with Nina and he accepts her offer. He forces his affections upon the girl but she spurns him. His attempt to entirely break her spirit is frustrated by the Octoroon youth who later marries her.

Blue Bird

The Love Girl—(Five Reels)—Bluebird—July 10.—Featuring Ella Hall in this drama portraying the powerful influence of a child's love. Adele Farrington, Betty Schade, Harry Depp, Kingsley Benedict, Grace Marvin and Wadsworth Harris. Robert Leonard directed the production.

Fox

The Man From Bitter Roots—(Five Reels)—William Fox.—July 10.—Featuring William Farnum. The picture tells the story of the efforts of Bruce Burt to get justice for himself, and for the sister of his mining partner, "Slim" Naudain. Bruce has been forced to kill Naudain in self-defense because of "Slim's" avarice for their joint pile of gold dust. Before Bruce can set out for the girl to give her half of his own gold, Victor Sprudell, of Indiana, who is on a hunting trip, is driven into the miner's cabin by a snowstorm. Sprudell hears Bruce's story and receives the gold in trust while the miner goes out into the storm to help a Chinese cook, who is ill. Bruce fails to return, so Sprudell himself prepares to start the Bitter Roots Mining Co. in Indiana. In an interview with him, Helen Dunbar, a reporter, finds that Naudain was her half-brother, but Sprudell gives her $500, telling her that was all "Slim" left. Bruce comes to Indiana penniless but eventually obtains control of his mine, which Sprudell has been running and finds happiness with Helen Dunbar. Betty Schade and H. A. Barrows support Mr. Farnum.

Red Feather

The Heart of a Child—(Five Reels)—Red Feather—July 10.—Sally Snape, a child of the slums, is thrown on her own resources after her mother is killed by her drunken father. Sally makes the acquaintance of Mary, and she secures a position for Sally at a jam factory and here Sally meets Mr. Peastone, who meeting Sally on the street one day offers to drive her home in his newly acquired trap. The trap is overturned by a carelessly driven automobile and Lord Kidderminster, one of the occupants has Sally cared for until she is better. Later through the efforts of Joe Aaron, under whose guidance Sally has been living since her accident, she gets into a musical comedy company and quickly becomes a favorite. On the night of Sally's triumph Gilbert takes Sally to the door of the flat he has furnished for her and later enters with a second latchkey to take his reward, but the pure child-heart conquers and he leaves. The next morning he asks Sally to be his wife and the girl's greatest ordeal has to be faced for Gilbert's parents are stately representatives of the old school. Sally, who is given the option of going to Mary's wedding, as promised, or giving up Gilbert, defies him and chooses the former. Unobserved, Gilbert's father witnesses what happens and upbraids his son for letting Sally go. They go to Mary's home, where after drinking to the health of Mary, Lord Fortive proposes another toast "To the future Lady Kidderminster." Edna Flugrath featured.

Fathers of Men—(Five Reels)—Vitagraph—July 10.—Featuring Robert Edeson in a dual role. John Howland's life is embittered when Blake, a trader, runs away with his wife while he is at a nearby hospital having his son treated for a spinal ailment. He vows vengeance, but it is not until twenty years later that he next meets his enemy. This time, it is under conditions favorable to his revenge, for he finds him by the body of a murdered man, and, though he knows that Blake did not commit the murder, he succeeds in having him convicted. Robert, Howland's son, implores his father to halt this terrible thing but Howland remains firm. When, in trying to escape, Blake is shot and killed, his three sons avenge their father's death by killing Howland. Robert sets out after them to settle his score, but after many thrilling adventures, in which the Blakes prove themselves his friends, the feud is peacefully ended.

Miscellaneous

The Woman Who Dared—(Five Reels)—California.—Featuring Beatriz Michelena. A review appears elsewhere in this issue.

Love Wins—(Five Reels)—Raths-Seavolt—July 15.—Featuring William Rainsford and Mabel Olson Leads. Burke Sheppard, a wealthy clubman, determines to marry Hope Randolph, a young society girl, and he believes that by getting her father at his mercy financially, Hope will marry him to save her father. Sheppard's attempt in this is blocked by Richard Haddon, a young lawyer, who knows something of former shady transactions of Sheppard's. Sheppard proposes to Hope, who tells him that she will only marry the winner of the motor boat regatta. Her interest in Richard Haddon grows rapidly. His feelings for her are unmistakable. Haddon also asks Hope to marry him, and she tells him that she will do so if he wins the great cup race. Sheppard, who now bitterly hates his more favored rival, overhears Haddon's proposal to Hope, and determines that Haddon must lose the race no matter how nor at what cost. Sheppard kidnaps Haddon the night before the race. The great race is called. Haddon cannot be found. Hope volunteers to run Haddon's boat in the race. Haddon is discovered bound and gagged in a deserted building, by a tramp looking for a place to rest, is released and arrives on the scene just as Hope returns victorious from the race.

THE SUBMARINE HEROINE.

JUANITA HANSEN, the beautiful blonde heroine who is making such a hit in the American serial, "The Secret of a Submarine," just "came along," as it were. She went to a studio one day with a friend and the director, nothing in the way of screen possibilities escaping him, noted her photographic qualities and asked her to become a part of his "atmosphere."

Juanita Hansen, featured personage in American-Mutual's "The Secret of the Submarine," on her stage with George L. Sargent, the man who pilots her and Thomas Chatterton through the mazes of scenes, close-ups and retakes.

She did, and after that the "atmosphere" faded and she took small parts, then better ones and finally, and in an incredibly short time, she played leads. The step to stardom was made when S. S. Hutchinson engaged her to take her present part.

Juanita Hansen was with the Favorite Players and the Fine Arts concerns before going to the Keystone company, where she made quite a hit. A serious illness interferred and then came the offer from the American.

She is a striking beauty, a blonde with expressive blue eyes. She has talent and pluck aplenty, and is very ambitious.

In private life she is an affectionate daughter and an altogether charming personality. She is a general favorite and her many friends love her for her geniality and thoughtfulness.

ANNA LITTLE GIVES ADVICE

Anna Little, well known horsewoman-actress, who plays leads in "Mustang" photoplays for the American Film Company, Inc., is an industrious and busy young woman. She does not grant herself the relaxation which could easily be hers when not before the camera.

She writes for publication, and her advice to women, young and old, through the printed page, is well worth the careful study of all who would stay youthful and healthy.

One of the best features about it is, she practices the theories she preaches. She is young, graceful, good-looking and enjoys perfect health.

Anna's logic is that one of the greatest health tonics is forgetfulness of self through busy hands and mind, with proper regard for fresh air, good food and enough refreshing sleep. Above all things, Anna says, "Don't worry."

Miss Little has just completed a hazardous role in "The Pilgrim," a two-part "Mustang" drama, and she came through weeks of strenuous work, feeling fit and fine.

MUSTANG COWBOY STAR HURT

Thrown while driving his mount down a steep slope alive with boulders and underbrush, during the filming of the important exterior scenes for "Sandy, Reformer," a Mustang-Mutual Western drama, Arthur Acord, famous cowboy-actor was so seriously injured that for a time is was thought he might have been fatally hurt. The Mustang-Mutual Company, of which Acord is the principal player, was working in one of the wildest regions of the Santa Ynez range at the time of the accident. Art's part called for him to ride down the slope at a semi-gallop. His mount, one of the most sure footed creatures attached to the studios, and one that Acord has ridden in various pictures and rodeos, had gone but a few feet when it suddenly lost its footing. Feeling the horse "going," Acord tried to spring off, but one of his spurs caught in a worn cinch and he was dragged for a number of feet and then thrown.

Then the animal stumbled again and fell and in rolling over hit the rider, inflicting severe internal injuries.

Margaret Gibson, the charming and vivacious little star of the David Horsley productions, will be seen in a new line of work with the presentation of the two-reel Centaur feature, "The Good-for-Nothin' Brat," with William Clifford as co-star, among the Horsley-Mutual releases for the week of July 8.

PHOTOGRAPHING A BEE

Walter Pritchard, cameraman for Gaumont's "Reel Life," the Mutual Film Magazine, recently went to Brunswick, New Jersey, to get pictures of agricultural students at work. One series of pictures shows the fertilization of plants by hand to develop a new type. Pritchard decided that he would also show how bees carry pollen.

As the college had no trained bees, the cameraman departed for a neighboring field and searched for some. After an hour's pursuit, he managed to trap one of the winged reptiles, and his scientific ardor was dampened by having the ungrateful beast attack him with his heavy artillery. After the bee sat down for an instant, Pritchard felt like he had been short circuited by a stroke of lightning.

However, he carefully deposited the exhausted bee upon a flower, and cranked his camera with his left hand. His reward was a picture showing plainly just how a bee is a first aid to nature in the fertilization of flowers.

BILLIE BURKE KNOCKS MAN OVER

Whoever it was that first said a woman couldn't throw straight, certainly didn't know Billie Burke, star of the "Gloria's Romance" production—the big motion picture novel in twenty chapters, being released through the George Kleine exchanges.

The Titian-haired Billie was out on the location with her director one day last week, on the shores of the Hudson. A scene was being taken aboard a barge and Dr. Royce (Henry Kolker), the hero of the story, was supposed to be struck by a barge hand and knocked into the water. He was supposed to be rescued when Billie, as Gloria Stafford, hurled him a life preserver from the shore. Kolker poised carefuly on the barge ready to be knocked overboard by the deckhand. The bargeman prepared to strike Kolker with an axe as the scenario demanded. Billie held the big life preserver ready to throw to Kolker the moment he should hit the water. Through some misunderstanding Billie heaved the life preserver a moment too soon. It went straight as a die for the head of the bargeman, struck the latter on the forehead, caused him to drop his axe and as the latter fell from his hand, it was noted the life preserver had cut a deep gash in his forehead.

What's that? It proves nothing? Miss Burke was supposed to be throwing at the water and she hit the man? Nonsense. Billie herself says she threw at the man because she thought Mr. Kolker was really going to be hurt. Nuff sed!

Convention on at Full Tilt

HUNDREDS POUR INTO EXPOSITION CITY—DETAILS OF FIRST DAYS

THE Sixth National Convention is on at full tilt. The Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America has organized and carried through a convention and exposition second to none in the history of the industry.

The lion's share of real success of the big meeting and show belongs to the League itself; the rest belongs to Chicago. For the hundreds of exhibitors, manufacturers, and exchange men; the noted stars and all the others interested in the Fifth Estate—all those who poured into the western metropolis proved beyond the shadow of a doubt that Chicago is the convention city.

By noon of the first day, Monday, July 10, nearly 300 had registered at the headquarters in the Sherman Hotel. Singly and in delegations and special trains the promoters of the art-business of the screen continued to gravitate to the convention city until the very last day of the exposition, on Tuesday, July 18. There was not a man with whom MOTOGRAPHY talked but that felt that he could return home feeling more than repaid for the huge get-together of the big show with its big questions and its important bearing on the future progress of the entire industry.

Big Questions Tackled

The convention tackled some big questions. Perhaps the most important of these to exhibitors was the consideration of the state rights and "pay what it's worth" method of renting films. Another was the question of ratifying the proposed charter and by-laws of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, newly organized by a committee of twelve in New York to supplant the more or less obsolete Board of Trade. The plan of the new association was presented to the Chicago convention by a committee especially appointed for the purpose by the New York body which formulated the organization. In connection with the new association the proposed expansion of the League to include all branches of the industry was also considered.

A third important question was the determination upon a location for the permanent headquarters of the League. The tide of sentiment in this regard swung decidedly in favor of Chicago, in view of the vital consideration of its central location and the fact that it is fast becoming the film-distributing center of the United States, just as it has become the distributing center of many other lines of trade. A fourth big question mark to be eliminated from the program was that of officers to pilot the destinies of the League for the coming year. The three candidates for president are Frank J. Rembusch, of Shelbyville, Indiana; Lee A. Ochs, of New York City, and Frederick J. Herrington, of Pittsburgh. The characteristics, claims and backing of these candidates were thoroughly presented in the last issue of MOTOGRAPHY.

At numerous meetings of the convention the above questions were discussed but at the time of going to press no definite actions had been taken. The final crystalizing of the official decisions will take place in the closing days of the show and will be given in full next week.

Governor Dunne of Illinois was the star performer of the opening session of the convention on Monday. President Fred J. Herrington called the meeting to order and made a short address. Samuel H. Trigger expressed greetings to the convention and the governor on behalf of the New York delegation. Governor Dunne was then introduced amid rousing cheers and spoke in part as follows:

In behalf of the state of Illinois and of Chicago, which is the center of the nervous system of the continent, I welcome you. Yours is a great industry. The newspapers reach every man and woman in the United States. You men reach every man, woman and child, because parents take their children to the picture shows. (Applause.)

Your industry is new and vastly powerful; powerful for good or for evil. In the hands of wise, clean and prudent men who have the welfare of the country at heart, yours is a truly wonderful medium for the propagation of good. In one hour I can witness pictures that will give me more knowledge about a foreign country, for instance, than I could get from newspapers and magazines in one week. The important thing is that this great educational factor be kept in the hands of clean-minded men.

That is what is going to decide whether or not your great industry is to be censored. There has been little complaint from conditions in Illinois. All you men want is what is right and fair for all concerned. Upon you depends whether or not your industry shall be censored. The fewer restrictions upon a clean, sound and legitimately conducted business the better. That's why I vetoed the state censorship bill when it came up in Illinois. (Applause.)

Judge A. P. Tugwell, of Los Angeles, second vice-president of the League, made a few remarks and the first meeting of the convention was adjourned. In the afternoon registration continued at a rapid rate and the Illinois delegation held a meeting at which various matters in connection with the convention and exposition arrangements were discussed.

The big Chicago Coliseum, recently the scene of the Republican National convention, is filled to the brim with exhibits. Every manufacturer of any importance is represented, stars are receiving at booths, dancing is going on, picture shows are being given, films are being taken, developed and projected before the eyes of the public and every phase of the fifth estate is on display at the big show.

President Herrington opened the convention on Tuesday with a brief appeal to the exhibitors to understand themselves and their own beliefs and thus be better able to understand others. He said he desired the slogan of all the meetings to be peace and harmony and he exhorted exhibitors to keep in mind the fact that it was the good of the industry as a whole for which they were working.

The following credentials committee was appointed: Thomas Furniss of Minnesota, chairman; W. J. Slimm, Cleveland, Ohio; A. J. Moeller, Michigan; A. S. Jones, Tulsa, Oklahoma, and George Henry, Chicago. The committee immediately went into session and it was later announced that all delegates must show their credentials to the committee during the course of the day or before the session tomorrow to be admitted to the hall. This led to a heated discussion participated in by many of the delegates as to who should be allowed in the meetings. Some believed that all visitors should be welcome, including the public and all reformers interested in motion picture work. The controversy ended in a statement by the president that besides the regular delegates all exhibitors would be welcome, whether members of the League or not, and all manufacturers, and the representatives of the various trade papers.

An invitation was given to all trade papers to be represented on the convention floor. W. Stephen Bush was called for the Moving Picture World; W. A. Johnston of the Motion Picture News, and Ed J. Mock of Motography. Mr. Mock was not present. Mr. Johnston simply thanked the members for their courtesy and their co-operation with the trade papers.

Mr. Bush gave a very interesting talk on the power of the exhibitor. "As the exhibitor has come to the fore in the past and obtained power," he said, "that power is going to increase and grow even greater in the future and the more it grows the better it will be for the whole industry."

President Herrington then invited Sam Spedon of the Vitagraph Company of America to take the floor. Mr. Spedon expressed his appreciation of the privilege of being allowed to speak in behalf of one part of the motion picture industry—the producer. "In speaking of the relationship of the manufacturer and the exhibitor, the producer has to leave the exhibitor to do many things which he would like to do for himself. The producer makes the picture that the exhibitor might have it to show to the public, but it is up to the exhibitor to carry out that end of the industry. The trinity of unity in the film business is the producer, the exhibitor, the public. These are the three people most vitally concerned, and one of them cannot get along without the other two. There are many subjects to be discussed and settled at this convention which the manufacturer cannot settle for himself. Therefore we would appeal to the exhibitor to use the power which Mr. Bush mentioned, not as a power but as a trust which has been given into your hands and to think wisely and well on these subjects before making a final decision. The producer has gone more than half way to meet the exhibitor and is willing to share the burden with him. Do not use this power so that it will create feeling against yourself but ponder each question thoughtfully and deliberately. Remember that if the exhibitors accept this trust it must be with equal advantages to the whole industry or else there will be some other way planned to accomplish the end which you have a chance to accomplish now. Handle the question wisely and in the future this convention of exhibitors will be able to meet all questions in co-operation with the producers."

At the conclusion of Mr. Spedon's talk President Herrington called for Joe Brandt of Universal. In the latter's absence P. A. Powers of that company took the floor. "I have been in the film business long enough to own an automobile, a yacht, a summer home and a home on Riverside drive but I am still looking for all these luxuries," he said. "The public has a wrong impression as to the great amount of money the film people are making. I am interested in this power which the exhibitors have acquired and am anxious to know what they are going to do with it. I hope they are going to exert it to regulate the business of motion pictures. That business is very different today from what it was a few years ago. You hear of the fabulous sums paid to noted stars to get them to pose for the screen, and many believe that these are just publicity stories, simply advertising, but such is not the case. Those salaries are paid to some few players. Perhaps it is not right but nevertheless it is done. They command that price and the producer is forced to pay it. This increase in the salaries of the players, the increase in the cost of production, means that the exhibitor has to pay for them by an increase in the cost of the films. We all went into this business because we thought it was the best business we could go into. We went into it for the money we could make out of it, but the person who thinks it is easy money is very much mistaken, for it is not. And it constantly takes more and more money. If you have put a million into it you are soon forced to put in another million to save the first. The producer may make a film with the understanding that it will be sold at one dollar a seat but it is not, and he has to exhibit it for ten cents, which means that although he has made a production the cost of which would warrant the dollar price he is only getting ten cents and is, therefore, getting not even ten cents on a dollar for his investment. The fault of this is not entirely on the producers' end—the exhibitor can help if he so desires by creating the interest and demand of the public. The exhibitor and producer can help each other and what is needed is closer co-operation between these two ends of the industry."

"There are a great many difficulties which beset both the exhibitor and the producer, and they must of necessity both help to shoulder the burden. Any extra expense which the producer undergoes is felt by the exhibitor because it is added to the cost of the negative. The renting of exhibiting space at the convention, the sending of the stars to the exposition, a special feature, a state rights concession, all these unusual things are a part of the overhead expense and are charged against the negative, they create a false overhead which the exhibitor must bear in the added cost of the film.

"Not long ago I decided I must have an automobile. Everyone around the office was riding up in a car each day, and I had just received an increase in salary, so I decided I must have an automobile. I knew what I wanted so went after it but the company said it would be six months before they could deliver it to me. That was no good, I must have a machine right away, so I went to look at the next best machine and they could get one for me in about eight weeks. Then I went to another concern who could sell me one right away and bought a machine which was not worth much and I had to sell soon after. I could not get what I wanted so I had to take what I could get. And just this condition now exists in regard to the exhibitor—he cannot get what he wants so he has to take what he can get whether it is up to quality or not. One cause of this is that there is no concerted action on the part of the fellow who buys and until this is remedied the exhibitor will have to continue to take not what he wants but what he can get."

Bennie Ziedman appeared to represent David Wark Griffith of the Fine Arts Film Company. He said Mr. Griffith had commissioned him to state his opposition to all forms of censorship and to exhort the manufacturers to avoid putting into their plays any scenes which could call for censoring, and to ask the co-operation of the exhibitors in abolishing all forms of censorship.

Paul Cromelin of the Cosmofotofilm said he had no intention of making a speech but he believed that the industry is confronted with a very serious question—a question which should be settled by the industry from the interior, not the exterior, and settled by a combination of the exhibitor and manufacturer. The industry should present a solid front to anything which effects the moving picture world and it makes no difference whether the exhibitor or the producer leads.

President Adolph Zukor of the Famous Players Company was called but he had not yet arrived, so a short intermission was taken. The motion was made and seconded during this time that each of the candidates be allowed five minutes to set their platform before the exhibitors, and an amendment was offered that they be allowed fifteen minutes apiece. This brought forth a heated argument between those who desired to hear the candidates, and those who thought it was not the time nor place to give them this opportunity. The arrival of Mr. Zukor at last put an end to the controversy.

Mr. Zukor said: "The interests of the exhibitor and manufacturer are identical and in my opinion they are both in the same boat. If the exhibitor does not support the manufacturer the manufacturer cannot do his best. And in return the producer should be willing to give nothing but his best to the exhibitor for the exhibitor appreciates good productions, good stories and good actors. There should be a two-sided co-operation. The Famous Players was formed with the idea of making productions not only for money but productions which would elevate the industry. It was the first to conceive the idea of taking legitimate plays and putting them into the films and now every manufacturer has followed its lead. The reason for the combination of the Famous Players and the Jesse L. Lasky Company was to further elevate the film business and improve the productions. The Famous Players-Lasky Company feels that it has no right to take the money of the exhibitors unless it gives worthy subjects in return. The distribution of the new company will be made through Paramount.

"The big subject before the convention is the getting together of the exhibitor and the manufacturer and when you consider this question I hope you will approach it calmly and judiciously, from the standpoint that the ideals and burdens of the manufacturer and exhibitor are identical. The manufacturer wants to co-operate with the exhibitor and welcomes suggestions and criticisms from the exhibitor. The producer will do anything in his power to satisfy the exhibitor and is willing to show in every way his spirit of co-operation."

"To show how much interest the manufacturers have in this exposition, they are taking their highest priced players, who are all working hard because of the summer weather and the opportunity for getting exteriors, away from their studios to appear at this exposition and the Famous Players will send Mary Pickford and Pauline Fredericks here on Saturday to greet all their friends."

Mr. Zukor closed with wishes of success to the exhibitors as individuals and to the exhibitors as a League.

The motion was then made to adjourn and the meeting closed, to be opened at ten o'clock Wednesday morning.

Four hundred delegates, wives and sweethearts, alternates and one reporter spent a part of Tuesday afternoon at the Essanay plant on Argyle street. The pangs of hunger somewhat hurried their departure from the plant.

Six jammed elevated carloads left for the studios after considerable delay. Marching over to the plant, two by two, a-la-ark, the visitors swung into the plant's grounds. An exterior set was being shot, and with breathless awe and admiration it saw a loving sweetheart deprived of her fond lover by an irate papa. Some were so busy hunting eats that their pathos outdid that of the players—Ethel Price, Harry Dunkinson, Royal Douglas and others, directed by Mr. Ashely. "Lady Bountiful," Nell Craig, took a crowd for a spin and refreshments.

After everyone had acquired a vacation tan and a wilted collar in the sun as the different studio celebrities were introduced to the multitude, they were carefully hand picked and assorted and shot through the picture factory with efficient speed and alacrity. However well they enjoyed it, they missed a finished piece of picture art in the arrival of Marguerite Clayton and Dick Travers.

The principal business before the convention on Wednesday morning was the appointment of the various committees, as follows:

Committee on Resolutions—Sam Bullock, Ohio; A. P. Tugwell, Cal.; Dr. J. M. Rhodes, Ind.; Louis J. Blumenthal, N. J.; Alfred Hamburger, Ill.

Committee on Constitution and By-Laws—Charles H. Phillips, Wis.; Lee Ochs, N. Y.; Fred J. Rembusch, Ind.; Charles McGowan, O.; J. Choyinski, Ill.

Committee on Ways and Means—Charles McGowan, O.; Sam Trigger, N. Y.; A. H. Frank, Ill.; Louis J. Blumenthal, N. J.; A. J. Bartelle, Penn.

Press Committee—George Laing, Ill.; Sam Bullock, Ohio; George Fisher, Wis.; E. J. O'Donnell, N. Y.; Ben H. Zerr, Penna.

The preliminary report of the Committee on Credentials accorded the states representation as follows: Illinois, 17 delegates; Indiana, 8; Ohio, 8; Pennsylvania, 9; Wisconsin, 8; Michigan, 8; California, 7; New York, 25; Mississippi, 1; Florida, 2; Oklahoma, 7; Missouri, 7; Massachusetts, 8.

Massachusetts, whose state organization was not in accord with the national League, had applied for a national charter and was allowed eight delegates, provided that these were exhibitors only and not in any way connected with any other phase of the industry. Florida presented another question since its charter was five years old and had not been renewed or dues paid for the past two years, but its exhibitors were allowed to come in as individual members paying a membership fee.

The report was referred back to the committee and further representation allowed as follows: Kansas, 1; Missouri, 1; Iowa, 8. The committee will remain in session throughout the convention to decide further questions of delegation which may arise.

After the appointing of the committees President Herrington extended to the members an invitation for an open discussion of any matters of interest to the exhibitors.

Mr. Horstmann, of Massachusetts, spoke of the efforts of Granville S. MacFarland of Boston in behalf of the moving picture industry in getting a hearing with the federal government on the question of censorship and moved that a rising vote of thanks be extended to Mr. MacFarland by the convention.

W. Stephen Bush of the Moving Picture World, and Attorney Seabury of New York, also spoke in commendation of the work of Mr. MacFarland. The motion was seconded and the rising vote was given.

It was also moved and seconded that a rising vote of thanks be extended by the convention to Governor Dunne of Illinois and Governor Whitman of New York for their championship of the motion picture industry displayed in the vetoing of the censorship bills in their respective states.

It was also moved and seconded that two sessions a day and a night session if necessary be held until the business before the convention was completed.

A motion was made and seconded that the entertainment committee be notified that at future conventions all entertainment and visiting of the delegates should be postponed until after convention hours.

A motion was made and seconded that all speeches from the convention floor be limited to five minutes and was passed by unanimous consent.

The meeting was then adjourned to meet again at 2 p. m.

Afternoon of Third Day

The afternoon session on Wednesday was opened with a roll call of all the delegates.

The Committee on Resolutions then made a partial report, submitting two resolutions to the convention for consideration. These resolutions were adopted by the league.

First, That we consider it injurious to our business as exhibitors to permit the general public to visit the studios of the motion picture production companies; that we deem it injurious to demonstrate on the screen the methods of construction of pictures; that we condemn the practice of trade papers in providing their readers with detailed information regarding any matter which results in dispelling the illusion of theater patrons, thus spoiling the effect intended by the producer. We recommend that this condition be changed to co-operation between the trade journals, the lay newspapers and the producing companies.

Second, That the exchanges and manufacturers shall not be permitted to rent films to churches, schools and other places aside from the legitimate picture theaters without first consulting the managers of the picture theaters in the neighborhood.

This second resolution brought out a great deal of comment from the floor. It was contended that such action might interfere with the friendship between the exhibitor and the church. Many called attention to the fact that the exhibitor paid a license to run his theater for commercial purposes while the schools and churches pay no license and only have to pay for the films, and even these are sometimes donated. The exhibitor is in the business and paying for the privilege of showing pictures while others are allowed to show them at no expense whatever. They do not even pay taxes because churches and schools are exempt from taxation. Incidents were mentioned of several churches which ran regular shows on certain nights in the week and charged ten cents admission. One specific example was given of a church which gave picture shows regularly on Wednesday and Saturday nights at which a silver offering was taken at the door, which meant that the lowest price paid was ten cents, and a member of the church stated that they took in from fifty to seventy-five dollars on these nights. This church put out of business two theaters in the neighborhood who were paying for a United States license, a city license, paying taxes, paying for their films and all the other legitimate expenses, and adhering to all the city ordinances. Other incidents were cited of hotels which ran motion pictures in their cafes and paid no attention to any city ordinances pertaining to the running of such pictures. The point was brought out that if these pictures were being shown for a charitable purpose the exhibitors had no objection whatever, but they did object to the screen entertainments being given in opposition to their own business when they were simply to raise funds for the church or the school.

A motion was then made from the floor that W. Stephen Bush be made an honorary member of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America. This motion was seconded and carried.

E. J. Mock of MOTOGRAPHY was called upon for a speech but said he did not believe this was the time for the publisher to talk to the exhibitors as they had too much business before them to act upon.

The Committee on Constitution and By-Laws and the Press Committee reported that they would be unable to present a finished report until Thursday morning.

It was moved and seconded that the Committee on Constitution and By-Laws have enough copies of their report made so that each state could have a copy.

As there was no further business to come before the convention it adjourned until Thursday morning at ten o'clock.

Contributors to Exposition Fund

Among the Chicago concerns and individuals that contributed to the exposition exchequer and kept things moving toward success are the following:

Essanay Film Company, George K. Spoor, president; Selig Polyscope Company, William N. Selig, president; Sherman Hotel, Brevoort Hotel, Congress Hotel, Metropole Hotel; Lexington Hotel, Auditorium Hotel, Blackstone Hotel, Lakota Hotel, Eastman Kodak Company, Jones, Linick & Schaefer, Alfred Hamburger, Lubliner & Trinz, M. A. Choynski, Louis H. Frank, Fred Schaefer, Hyman & Katz, Robert Levy, Ascher Bros., Balaban Bros., J. Alcock, A. Zilligen, F. W. Hartmann, H. Lieberthal, Geo. Henry, Geo. M. Laing.

Convention Flash Backs

A telegram was read before the convention from William A. Brady saying he would be with the members on Saturday.

Mary Pickford sent a letter to the convention thanking them for their invitation to attend the exposition and stating that she would be pleased to accept.

Someone slipped over a good one when the telegrams were being read by President Herrington before the convention, and before he knew it he had read off a nice little press notice of the crowded houses which the film "America Preparing" was drawing in New York. More than one way of getting films before the notice of the exhibitors.

The former treasurer of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League certainly was an honest man—should be spelled in all caps—for he traveled all the way from Covington, Kentucky, to Detroit, Michigan, to turn over to the newly-elected treasurer the contents of the league's strong box. It contained one cent.

It was all right for Lee Ochs to exploit himself by passing around pins showing his smiling countenance, but rather unkind of him to put one of these in each chair where the delegates were to be seated—but it was not so bad as it sounds, for they were clasp pins.

Exposition Opens Doors

CHICAGO'S VAST COLISEUM THRONGED—MANY STARS SCINTILLATE

WHILE the crowd at the convention was working a smaller but more energetic crew was whipping the Coliseum into shape and when the doors opened at seven on "Essanay Night"—Wednesday, the place presented an attractive sight.

As one came in the main doors the Bluebird booth on the right and the Universal on the left attracted one's attention first, both of which were presided over by Joe Brandt. The blue decorations and flowers on the trellis and pergola marked the one while the same stone benches on the other side provided a resting place in brighter hues. As one walked to the rear the General Film Company in rose and gold splendor and rich oriental rugs with easy chairs and profusion of flowers in vases came next on the right, in charge of Walter Scates. C. J. Meegan of New York was also receiving visitors.

Across the aisle toward the rear Mutual Film Corporation held down all the space to the next aisle supervised by the efficient B. N. Judell. He expects Richard Bennett, Charles Chaplin, Mary Miles Minter and others here in person before the end of the convention. Among the stunts planned is a Chaplin contest for youngsters with ten five-dollar prizes. . The souvenirs were vanitabs and photos of the Mutual stars, Charlie Chaplin cutouts and the Reel-Life magazine. Among those expected before the end of the week are John S. Freuler, president; J. C. Graham, his assistant; S. S. Hutchinson, ,from the coast, and T. H. Cochrane, of Portage, one of the directors.

The last big space to the right was that of the International Film, where William W. Johnston of New York and John F. Bowman of Chicago pointed with pride to the large map in the rear which they affirmed was the world's largest. showing the United States had 26,700,000 readers of Hearst publications. The booth was arranged mostly in the nature of a rest room for exhibitors. Large full-sized pictures of the firm's stars distinguished the booth and very often they were in danger of being tipped over in the rush for the souvenir buttons and mystery boards.

On the left, next aisle over from the Universal, was the Vitagraph booth, in charge of Sam Spedon and John B. Rock, attractively decorated and with the name in large letters over the booth. Next to the north was the Essanay booth with its cool-looking wickerwork furniture, in which V. R. Day and Ben W. Beadell gave away carnations and introduced the entire galaxy of Essanay stars, which captured the entire exhibition for the evening.

The Pathé booth with its finely molded, mahogany Adam style furniture, contrasted strangely with the rugged plaster casts showing the world in the grip of a giant horny hand. Small pictures of the Pathé stars on easels with pink roses about them were pointed to with just pride by M. Adolphe Werkmeister, who had charge of the arrangements. Five young ladies assisted Mr. Werkmeister. Pearl White is expected by Friday with Mr. Berst, the vice-president of the firm.

The big space of Paramount Pictures was taken up by an Italian garden to the north and east of the center aisle. Here one saw tiny gold fish swimming about in pools, which with the natural live boxwood hedge about it with its stone seats and benches gave a true outdoor effect. Heroic sized portraits of Pallas, Morosco, Lasky and other Paramount stars framed the wall. Fans, book markers and 48,000 pictures, booklets and magazines formed the souvenirs. Smiling John A. Stevenson superintended the booth. All the officers, including Messrs. Steele, Abrams, Sherry, Zukor, Lasky, Goldfish and others are present for the big Mary Pickford dinner on Saturday night.

The north central aisle was marked by the large Fotoplayer finished in oak, played by N. B. Jacobus, who played several splendid new scenario scores. Mr. Eddington, the president of the firm, was in charge. Motography's booth is directly across the aisle.

The next booth on the north central aisle on the east side was the Clara Kimball Young booth in charge of the Central Film Corporation. It was simply furnished and embellished by a large oil painting.

The American Theatrical Hospital had a booth in shape of a large brown hospital tent in charge of Mrs. Dr. Thork and nurses.

At the north end of the east aisle an oriental scene of green sod and bamboo trellises and a miniature Japanese garden with four almond-eyed Japanese tea room girls upheld the name of Metro and sustained Metro's friends with tea. Lovely fresh oriental potted flowers lent fragrance to the scene, while a Hawaiian orchestra strummed on their ukeleles and hula dancers glided to and fro. Mr. Skirboll, the general manager, and Mr. Proctor, the Chicago manager, certainly provided a large scoop on the rest of the crowd, and two parrots who said nothing but "Metro—Metro—Metro" capped it all. Friday night is Metro night, and Mr. Clark will take his first trip west since the formation of the company to be present. Messrs. Rowland, James and Engel are also expected. Viola Dana, Mme. Olga Petrova, and the famed Taliaferro will be present Friday.

Opposite the Metro booths were those of the Precision Machinery Company and the booth of the Chicago American.

At the north end of the Coliseum were Menger, Ring and Hamburger exhibiting lobby frames, J. P. Seeburg showing playhouse pianos, the Mid-West Theater Supply Company, the Welch Grape Juice Company, Cahill-Igoe Company, printers, and the Morning Telegraph.

Other exhibitors on the north end were the Chicago Herald and Luella O. Parsons, two trade papers, Patriot Films, in charge of Mr. Greet, Al Lichtman, and other booths which had not been finished.

The east division of the south end of the hall was divided up by World films in charge of E. C. Jensen and five young ladies distributing flowers, and Westinghouse. Alice Brady and Mr. Brady will be present later at the World booth.

In the section headed by Mutual on one end and Motiograph projection machines at the other, was the National Cash Register automatic ticket vender, with N. L. Whitney in charge, and the League's headquarters.

In the section headed by the General Film Company was the Automatic Ticket Selling Company, the National Carbon Company on the east side, and George Kleine, Alfred Hamburger, the only exhibitor present in charge of Mr. Hamburger and E. A. Hopson, and "Diana" Film, with the Bartola in charge of Dan Barton, bringing up the other end. Here souvenirs in the form of Bartola fox-trot scores were given away.

George Kleine is promising excitement, or, rather, W. H. Jenner and Walter Green are so doing. They state their star, Harry Watson, and his entire "Musty Suffer" comedy company, will be here on July 17 and 18, when he will deliver his letter from Mayor Mitchel of New York to Mayor Thompson of Chicago and incidentally film the mayor; then stage a three-round prize fight, give a five-piece German band a workout every hour and generally make things hum. Historical exhibits of projection apparatus from 1896 to date was the booth feature, while the pictures of Billie Burke lined the wall.

In the west section of the south end of the convention quarters was the Bluebird film already mentioned, the Amusement Supply Company, the E. E. Fulton Company, showing General Electric apparatus and Nicholas Power. The others were Sosman-Landis Company, showing ten miniature stage settings fully lighted. These were in charge of B. L. Landis, M. S. Mayer and George Feinberg. The Decorators' Supply Company and a few other booths not yet finished brought up the total.

A fuller and more extensive report of the exposition and late arrivals will be given in our next issue.

Gives Dance After Every Show

By A. R. M. Sutton.

P. T. Renninger, manager of Port Gamble Hall, Port Gamble, Washington, has found a method of making his house pay, in spite of the fact that it is in a sparsely settled district.

Port Gamble is one of the lumber manufacturing settlements on Puget Sound, and the natives, few in number, are all connected in some way with the great mills there. Mr. Renninger opens his house one night every two weeks. The admission is twenty-five cents, and after the show there is a dance.

The manager says that eighteen or twenty couples always stay for the dance, a charge for which amounts to seventy-five cents. Those wearing calked boots are not allowed on the floor, so the loggers come equipped with an extra pair of shoes which they change after the show in order to dance.

John B. Glavey, who has for sometime been associated with the scenario department of the Keystone studio, has been appointed secretary and general assistant to Hampton Del Ruth, managing editor, and assistant manager of production at the big Sennett fun factory.

Twelve New Picture Concerns

Thirteen newly formed theatrical and motion picture concerns filed articles of incorporation in New York state last week. These concerns have a total capital of $420,000 and in all cases but one the motion picture industry in one or more of its branches is involved. The incorporations are as follows:

The Nanuet Holding Corporation, New York City. To manufacture and deal in motion picture films and engage in the realty and construction business. Capital, $250,000. Directors, Harry Davis, Clifford G. Ludvigh and Ralph A. Kohn, 31 Nassau street, New York City.

Jane O'Day From Broadway Company, New York City. To produce and exploit plays, operas and other stage productions. Capital, $5,000. Directors, Helen White, Meyer Klein and Alexander Werner, 817 West End avenue, New York City.

The Viking Program, Inc., New York City. To conduct a general motion picture business. Capital, $1,000. Directors, W. L. Wicklander, D. L. Russell and William J. Jones, 340 West Forty-fifth street, New York City.

Pathephone Distributors Company of New York City. To construct and operate theaters and other places of amusement. Capital, $50,000. Directors, Luigi Ricca, Eitienne I. Ricca and Hugo F. Ricca, 938 St. Nicholas avenue, New York City.

The Q. Corporation, New York City. To erect and deal in motion picture theaters; also produce films of all kinds. Capital, $500. Directors, Charles A. Birchfield, Oliver Hoffman and Thomas P. Degraffenried, 110 West Fortieth street, New York City.

Associated Art Films, Inc., New York City. Motion picture films. Capital, $100,000. Directors, Louis J. Beck, Mort M. Berger and Lucille Le Stewart, Flatiron building, New York City.

The Cleveland Amusement Company, Brooklyn, N. Y. Theatrical and motion pictures. Capital, $500. Directors, B. M. Wisch, Samuel Rinzler and Max Schmitber, 645 Georgia avenue, Brooklyn, N. Y.

The S. & R. Movies, Inc., New York City. Motion picture business in all its branches. Capital, $3,000. Directors, Albert Sadacca, Henchel E. Levy and Anna K. Ott, 1745 Madison avenue, New York City.

Town & Country Films, Inc., New York City. Theatrical and motion pictures. Capital, $500. Directors, Jack S. Eaton, Eltinge F. Werner and Arthur W. Sutton, 51 East Forty-second street, New York City.

Pittston Amusement Company, New York City. Motion pictures and theatricals. Capital, $2,000. Directors, George Botsford, M. E. Hauver and John L. Gorman, 1564 Broadway, New York City.

Thor Amusement Company, New York City. Proprietors and managers of theaters and to produce and present stage productions of all kinds. Capital, $500. Directors, Murray Fiel, Herbert Terry and Thor Michelson, 1493 Broadway, New York City.

Olcott Amusement Company, Olcott, N. Y. To conduct theaters, parks and amusement resorts. Capital, $2,000. Directors, Frank W. Teal and William F. Kruger, Olcott, N. Y.

Sports Film Corporation, New York City. To manufacture motion picture films, operate theaters and maintain a booking agency. Capital, $5,000. Directors, John P. McDonnell, Frank Davis and G. Kuck, 248 Sherman avenue, New York City.

Light Doesn't "Get Tired"

Many expert operators and even some manufacturers will argue that a more powerful light is needed to "throw" a picture from a properly designed and adjusted lantern 40 feet away than is needed for the same size picture with a proper lantern 20 feet away—as though the light become "tired" along the way.

In both cases the same flux of light is passed by the slide, directed toward the screen and spread over the same area.

Unless the room is full of smoke, which is never true in a picture house, absorption of light in these distances is negligible. A demonstration with two pictures side by side or photometric readings on the two pictures should (but does not always) end the argument.

Successor to Board of Trade Projected

NATIONAL ASSOCIATION MOTION PICTURE INDUSTRY INCLUDES ALL BRANCHES

THE "National Association of the Motion Picture Industry" has been announced.

This organization, representing every branch of the field and exhibitors in particular, is designed to take the place of the former, less comprehensive body known as the Motion Picture Board of Trade.

The charter and by-laws of the new film organization will be brought before the national convention now assembled at Chicago and the ratification by that assemblage may place the new organization upon its feet as a real, working body to act for the mutual benefit of every phase of the business.

At a meeting of the heads of every branch of the film business, held at the Hotel Astor, New York, on July 6, the report of a sub-committee of twelve appointed at a luncheon held at Delmonico's on June 6 last to propose a plan of organization for an association comprised of the interests of the motion picture industry was unanimously approved.

At the same time the charter and by-laws of the new organization were adopted. Walter W. Irwin, general manager of the Vitagraph-Lubin-Selig-Essanay, Inc., and chairman of the Commmittee-at-Large on organization and of the sub-committee, was authorized to appoint a subsidiary committee to present these by-laws and charter to the Sixth National Convention of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America, convening in Chicago. One of the purposes of the new organization is to present a united front in the fight which the industry is waging against the agitation for legalized censorship of the screen. It will also take up all questions having to do with the relations of one branch of the industry with the others.

At the meeting on July 6 subscriptions were invited toward a $40,000 fund for the preliminary budget of the new organization, these subscriptions not to become due until the entire $40,000 has been pledged.

The alacrity with which moving picture manufacturers, supply men and others in the industry pledged their support, to the extent of sums running into four figures, presages an organization built along lines that make for strength and permanency.

The exhibitors would become members of the organization by reason of their affiliation with the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America.

The National Association of the Motion Picture Industry would supplant the Motion Picture Board of Trade, which was formed last September and which was recently disbanded to give way to the newer association which, it is believed, has been projected along lines that will insure the fullest harmony in the entire industry.

Believing that a thorough understanding of the work of the organization committee will mean greater sympathy with the new body we give here in part the report of the committee of twelve, of which Walter W. Irwin is chairman:

The committee does not claim to present for ratification a perfect organization. That would be impossible. But it believes that it has for your consideration a plan or instrument which meets the fundamental requirements, and which is broad enough to take care of most situations, provided the intentions of its provisions are interpreted by the Board of Directors at all times in a spirit of absolute fairness, and devoid of jealousy or politics.

In the first place, the committee considered that in order to give this organization its greatest effectiveness, that it must be confined in its actual operations to questions affecting the industry as a whole, and that incidentally to these purposes, the association ought to be a means by which each branch of the industry shall have, through the association, full opportunity to know each of the other branches of the industry, and the personnel of each, and to know the viewpoints of the other side to any question that may arise within the industry, it being believed that the majority of disputes and misunderstandings within the industry are due to a lack of acquaintance, and therefore to a lack of fair consideration of the viewpoints and equities of both sides of a question on which there is a difference of opinion.

Membership is confined to five classes.

First, manufacturers or importers of motion pictures.

Second, the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America. Membership in good standing in the Exhibitors' League shall carry with it membership in the association, but no exhibitor may join the association unless he be a member of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America, it being the opinion of this committee that the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America should be properly encouraged to develop, so that, through it, the industry may gain the tremendous influence of the great body of exhibitors, and that when this National Association of the whole industry develops its strength, each exhibitor, big and little, will feel that he desires to become a member of it, but he shall only become a member through first joining his own association, and through it, exerting his power for the benefit of all.

To the third class, any person or firm, engaged in manufacturing or dealing in, or importing supplies, equipment and materials, in any branch of the motion picture industry, shall be eligible. This class includes not only motion picture equipment, such as projection machines, screens, etc., as we generally understand it, but likewise builders, electricians, contractors, decorators, ventilating equipment and all branches of business which are a part of this industry, because they make money out of it, and by reason of it. In other words, we want these firms and individuals who are making money because of this industry, in the building of theaters, studios, and in the furnishing of equipment to recognize that their own personal welfare is at stake with this industry, and that we look to them to recognize that they are a part of us.

Class four is confined to distributors of motion pictures.

Class five is composed of all persons or firms engaged in any other work, relating to any branch of the industry, including trade papers, actors, directors, agencies, and every employee in any branch of the motion picture industry, or in any industry allied with the motion picture industry.

But in order to prevent the producers, exhibitors or exchangemen from joining this class as individuals and controlling it, for their own benefit, in other words, to prevent any class from controlling the election of the directors of this class and thus getting a representation on the Board larger than that to which they are entitled, it is provided that no person or firm who is a member of any other class, or who is entitled to membership in any other class, or whose firm or corporation is entitled to membership in any other class, shall join this miscellaneous class, class five, unless he has joined one of the other classes to which he is entitled, and that, if having joined as a producer or distributor or as an exhibitor, classes one, two or four, and he thereafter joins class five, he may not be elected as a director to the Board of Directors in class five, and where a corporation joins this association under any of the classes, it must designate a representative to represent its membership.

The by-laws also provide that each branch of the industry shall at the annual meeting elect a Branch Committee of such size as it deems proper. If there are fifty producing companies which are members, they may make their Branch Committee consist of 10 or 50, as they see fit. The same with enchangemen; with the equipment manufacturers and with the miscellaneous class. But the Branch Committee of class two shall consist solely of those designated by the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America, and shall be the sole means of electing a Branch Committee of the exhibitors. This Branch Committee may consist of twenty, forty, one hundred or one thousand, in the discretion of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America. Each Branch Committee then elects directors to the Board of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, the producers having five directors, the manufacturers of equipment and materials having five, the exchangemen having five, the miscellaneous class having five and the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America having ten.

It was considered equitable that the Exhibitors' League should have ten in order to make their representation on the Board equal the total representation of the manufacturers and distributors, for in all cases the manufacturers are either controlled by the distributors or the distributors by the manufacturers, and that at any meeting of the association, not a directors' meeting—a meeting, for instance, to amend the by-laws—it is provided that the vote of class five, the miscellaneous class, shall only be cast by members who are not members of some other class, and likewise that class two shall always have a total vote equal to the total vote of the classes of the producers and distributors, classes one and four, such vote to be cast by some one designated by the Branch Committee of exhibitors, and that if there be a division in the Branch Committee of exhibitors, the vote shall be cast in the relation that the majority and minority of the Branch Committee of exhibitors bears to the total number of votes cast by the producers and distributors.

Now, gentlemen, with the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League as a member and with the exhibitors as a principal purchasing power in the industry, we feel that this organization can become such an influence that we will be able to get within our ranks every one directly interested in the industry and every one doing business with the industry. There will be no restrictions so that a member will be at liberty to do business with whomever he chooses. But we feel that each member, all things being equal, would naturally prefer to do business with a fellow member of this association. We feel that the people who are furnishing us with supplies, constructing our theaters and studios, ought to recognize that they are a part of this industry, and that our welfare means their welfare. And, while there will be no obligation, on the contrary, everyone will be left with the utmost freedom to choose with whom he will have his dealings; nevertheless, it would seem to be consistent with human nature that everyone doing business would prefer, all things being equal, to select the one who has the welfare of the industry at heart sufficiently to become a member of this organization.

There is one point, gentlemen, and that is the method of raising the dues. The provision is on page 4. The board of directors shall determine the annual dues to be paid by the members of this association, but in fixing such dues, the board shall apply the same method or unit to all who are similarly situated.

At least thirty days prior to the determination provided for in the preceding paragraph, the board of directors shall in writing request each branch committee hereinafter provided for to submit to the board suggestions and recommendations as to the amount of the dues to be paid by the members of that class, the method of fixing and collecting the same, and the time or times at which such dues are to be paid.

You will notice the entrance fee and the proposed list of members. We have made that as large as possible, and have fixed the entrance fee at what we believed that particular branch of the industry could afford to pay. Undoubtedly we have overlooked many industries that are connected with the motion picture industry, and which ought to be included in this list. We have calculated from records the number that there are engaged in these businesses, and we believe that with a substantial membership, we will have from the membership fees alone a budget sufficient to carry on the affairs of the association until such time as the board of directors can intelligently work out the proper method of taxation upon an equitable basis to each branch of the industry.

The tentative charter and by-laws of the new National Association of the Motion Picture Industry will be found on another page in this issue of MOTOGRAPHY.

New York Strand's Bill

During the week of July 9 the Strand Theater, New York, ran Wallace Reid and Cleo Ridgley in Lasky's "The Selfish Woman." As an added feature the Strand ran Charlie Chaplin in "The Vagabond." The musical program will consist of an overture by the Strand Concert Orchestra, incidental music and three soloists.

Frank Daniels, Vitagraph's famous comedian, is now working on a one-part comedy by Cyrus Townsend Brady.

BUSINESS O. K. NEAR BORDER

Exhibitors in Southwestern States Report Business Still Good in Spite of Mobilization—Soldiers Attend in Numbers

From a number of sources comes the information that the "war" on the Mexican border, rather than injuring business as was the first report, has brought increased patronage to most of the picture houses affected by the mobilization of troops, the entrance of American refugees from Mexico and the general excitement attendant upon the preparation for possible war.

One Texas exhibitor near the Rio Grande states that the "soldier boys" fill his house to overflowing practically every night. They demand, of course, films of war, and become very boisterous at times when real fighting is shown on the screen. The southern exchanges have revived all the war news films and war features of the past in order to supply the current demand for subjects of that sort.

Adolph Schutz, manager of the Elks Theater, pictures and vaudeville, and the Princess, of Silver City, New Mexico, writes MOTOGRAPHY that, contrary to the report first made, business is good and that no houses in that section—one hundred miles from the border—have closed their doors. Silver City and Santa Rica, which is near by, are good examples of the enterprising little cities growing up the southwest and developing good business for pictures. Mr. Schutz's two houses seat 600 and 336.

Even Columbus, the town situated three miles from the Rio Grande and the scene of the now noted raid by Villa and his Mexican bandits some time ago, has two film houses running seven days a week to good business.

Evidently, and fortunately, what Sherman said about war does not yet apply to exhibiting in the southwest.

President Laemmle Feted at Chicago

When Carl Laemmle, president of the Universal Film Company, arrived in Chicago to attend the convention he was met at the station by the entire New York state delegation and the Universal brass band and escorted to the Sherman House at the head of a parade of automobiles.

Mr. Laemmle later gathered a party of his friends for an evening of celebration. They started with a dinner at the Bismarck Restaurant, from there proceeded by automobiles to the Wayside Inn and ended up the evening at the Bismarck Garden. Among the guests were Morris Fleckles, manager of the Chicago branch of the Laemmle exchange; I. Van Ronkel, Chicago manager of the Bluebird exchange, and wife; Joe Laemmle, Louis Laemmle and wife; F. J. Flaherty and wife; I. L. Leeshim, general solicitor of the Chicago Laemmle exchange, and wife; H. H. Van Loan, Morris Hallman, M. J. Watkins, secretary of the Reel Fellows Club; Alfred Hamburger and wife; Miss S. Webber of the Mutual Company; Mr. L. Ohnstin and Miss Ida Ohnstin; C. L. Plaugh, manager of the Chicago Universal exchange; Joe Brandt, manager of the New York Universal office, and H. H. Van Loan of New York.

William Wolbert, Vitagraph, recently had his principals working at Catalina Island for a week.

Feeling the Convention's Pulse

RED-BLOODED NEWS FROM THE HEART OF THE BIG NATIONAL SHOW

THE "Bluegrass Boys" from Louisville are representing the good old state of Kentucky in good shape. Henry Peltier, H. B. Strube, Fred Dolle, L. J. Dittmar and several others form the convention delegation from just below the Mason-Dixon line.

The official delegation of the Mutual Film Corporation to the exposition includes President Freuler, John C. Graham, assistant to the president, and a large number of western exchange managers, representing practically every one of the states west of the Father of Waters.

The committee appointed by the Illinois state branch of the M. P. E. L. of America to name the official delegates to the Chicago convention was composed of William J. Sweeney, national vice-president, M. P. E. L.; Charles J. Law, New Palace Theater, Pana, Illinois; Harry Hyman, Chicago; Louis Frank, Halsted Theater, Chicago, and E. Kunz, Princess Theater, Springfield. The delegates appointed are named elsewhere in this issue.

They're boosting the convention in England, too. The London Bioscope has carried several stories about the big Chicago show and prominent exhibitors and film men were urged to take the trip over. Boy, page the Britains.

If you want to take a "specially conducted tour" of Vitagraph's studios in Brooklyn all you have to do is to visit the company's attractive booth at the exposition. The incubators where the sunshine dramas are hatched are all mapped out and all the processes are explained and illustrated.

Paramount is having a convention all by itself. Paramount officials, publicity and advertising men from New York are holding a three-day session at their headquarters at the Blackstone hotel with the publicity men from 22 Paramount exchanges located in all parts of the country. A big publicity campaign is the piece de resistance of the discussion. Highup Paramount officials were at the Paramount booth on Friday and Saturday, including President Abrams, Vice-President Sherry, Jesse L. Lasky and Samuel Goldfish.

There is a first class cigar stand down below, according to Sam H. Trigger, of New York. Sam is passing out daintily monogramed cigarettes bearing the following pointed inscription (pointed downward): "If anybody at the Chicago convention does not like this brand he can go to hell and buy his own."

Producer Thomas H. Ince, who was in Chicago the week preceding the Fourth of July, overseeing the presentation of "Civilization" at Cohen's Grand Opera House, has returned from New York to the Windy City for the exposition.

"Bluebird" Flaherty believes in preparedness. He is distributing hundreds of tiny toy guns that crack when you squeeze 'em. Of course they bear an inscription—"See Bluebird plays and be happy."

Joliet, Illinois, was put on the convention map by M. M. Rubens, who is the only representative from the prison city. Mr. Rubens is booker for the Rubens houses, of which there are ten—the Princess, Lincoln, Crystal and Colonial in Joliet, the American in Davenport, Iowa, and five screen houses in Aurora, Illinois.

Harry L. Reichenbach of New York, publicity director of the World-Brady Corporation, and his wife, are not only present at the convention but they are taking in Chicago's fine boulevard system via motor. Reichenbach had the machine shipped over for the occasion.

Lee A. Ochs, Sam Spedon, Ben Title, E. J. O'Donnell, and the rest of the live crowd from New York and Brooklyn, are making their headquarters at room 102 at the Sherman House, convention headquarters. The Brooklyn exhibitors are particularly interested just at present in their activities to secure the abolition of the maximum electric light charge in all Brooklyn theatres. This will mean that the houses pay only for the current that is actually consumed, a saving of hundreds of dollars for each house each season.

A dozen early birds blew into the convention from Pittsburgh on the first morning. Among these were Fred J. Herrington, national president, M. P. E. L. of America; James Delves, national secretary and treasurer of the Perrysville Amusement Company of Perryville, Pa.; J. E. Smith of Smith Theater, and his sister, Gertrude, and J. W. Shearer of the Wilburt Theater. Twenty-five Pittsburghers are expected to be present before the exposition closes its doors.

Exhibitors, exchange men and manufacturers to the number of over 300 were registered at the convention headquarters in the Sherman House before noon of July 10, the opening day.

The first arrivals from the Swedish city were James Bryson, president of the Northwestern Motion Picture Equipment Company, and James Gilosky, a prominent exhibitor, and his wife. Twenty-five exhibitors and film men from Minneapolis have signified their intention of taking in the big show before it's all over.

Mr. Phillips of Wisconsin got right up in meeting and stated he wanted to register a kick at the way in which the Badger State delegation was abused. He said Wisconsin was always noted for its large attendance at all meetings and he found that only one row of chairs in the convention hall had been assigned to them, whereas they would easily fill two. President Herrington assured him that at the next session, he would find two rows alloted to his state.

The mechanics of the business are well represented in the persons of William Smith, assistant general manager; Herbert Griffin, R. W. Horn and M. W. Lewis, representatives of the Nicholas Power Company, the w. k. manufacturers of projectors.

Cancelled pay checks that show that Charlie Chaplin has been paid $250,000 of his $670,000 salary for this year are on exhibition at the Mutual booth. Benjamin Judell, Mutual's western representative, has the valuable souvenirs in charge.

The "Universal Movie Ball" was held Thursday night, July 13, in the Louis XVI room of the Hotel Sherman. Although the weather was warm a big crowd trotted and tripped over the wax. The dance lasted "from ten p. m. till the morning after," following out the announcements of the event. Several Universal stars were present.

EXHIBITOR NOW PRODUCER

William H. Kemble, Prominent Exhibitor and Film Man of Brooklyn, Distributes "Zeppelin Raid" and "America Preparing."

William H. Kemble, a prominent exhibitor in the east, has emerged as a producer and a distributor of film with the "Zeppelin Raid on London and the Siege of Verdun," in five parts, and "America Preparing," a ten-part spectacle. Mr. Kemble acquired the "Zeppelin Raid on London" after a successful run at the Park Theater in New York.

Mr. Kemble enters the producing field after many successful years as an exhibitor and exchange man in and about New York. His most successful ventures are the Triangle Theater, Brooklyn, Big "T" Film Corporation, and later the Kemble Film Corporation.

Kemble controls twenty-five per cent of the motion picture service in Brooklyn. At the time of acquiring the Triangle, Kemble took over the old Crescent Theater, Brooklyn. In fourteen days he transformed it into one of the handsomest houses in the country. Mr. Kemble's Triangle Theater seats close to two thousand, has a symphony orchestra of forty, is devoted entirely to photoplays and music, and is one of the few theaters in the United States where admissions ranging from twenty-five cents to two dollars is successful.

Associated with Mr. Kemble are J. O. Miller, as treasurer, and H. Clark Mooney, as secretary and director of advertising, and the policies of all Kemble interests.

Mr. Kemble says that his concern, in entering actively in the producing and distributing of film, would limit its effort to such films as would prove of vital interest in public life at the time.

"The 'Zeppelin Raids on London' and 'America Preparing' are each what I consider a film should be, in order to prove sufficient interest to a real showman," says Mr. Kemble. "The 'Zeppelin Raids on London and Siege of Verdun' deals with the air raids on London. It shows the giant Zeppelin leaving its base at Kiel and a night attack somewhere in England. It shows vividly the destruction of life and property. The world's war's greatest battle is shown in all its horror at Verdun."

"America Preparing," a ten-reel production, is timed to the present crisis in this country's affairs and is bound to arouse the old Star Spangled Banner enthusiasm in an audience. The production in itself is a revelation of the peerless quality of the U. S. Army and Navy, carrying to the heart of every true American the realization of his duty to strive with all his might toward the increase of our means for defense. "America Preparing" opened Monday evening, July 10, at the Lyric Theater, 42nd street, New York, to a distinguished audience of American Army and Navy officials and military officials of several foreign governments. The opening address was delivered by the Hon. John Purroy Mitchel, mayor of New York City.

Arrangements are under way to show "America Preparing" in several of the larger cities.

The "Zeppelin Raids on London and the Siege of Verdun" is being state righted and offers for "America Preparing" will be entertained. Address all communications to Kemble Film Corporation, Brooklyn, N. Y.

Bert Williams Bookings Hum

Biograph's special representative has completed a tour of the General Film exchanges and is en route to New York. Everywhere he reports exhibitors have been very glad to make pre-release bookings on Bert Williams, his Ziegfeld Follies reputation making him a big box office possibility.

Special advertising has made it possible to have every representative newspaper in the country with their hundreds of correspondents print announcements of Bert Williams' entrance to the films which has resulted in the July 24 release, "A Natural Born Gambler" in two reels being booked solid. Announcement of the second Bert Williams comedy and the advertising in connection therewith will be made as rapidly as it can be prepared. Exhibitors are looking forward to these comedies to bolster up their summer business.

Pictures Fight Impure Milk

The State of New York will conduct a crusade against impure milk by the use of motion pictures and Thomas A. Edison, Inc., is now making a one-reel film entitled "The Trump Card" for the use of the New York State Board of Health in the proposed campaign. While the picture will show the process of pasteurization by which germ life in the lacteal fluid is completely destroyed and any danger of infection eliminated, it will not emphasize the technical process. It is designed to call attention to the danger of unpasteurized milk and to show the method by which milk can be purified, but it does this through the medium of a little human interest story of much intrinsic value.

Actors in Army

When the Southern California regiments left for Sacramento preparatory to service against Mexico, six Universal City actors were among the men carrying arms. They are Lester Phillips, Battery A; George Lackie, Charles De Francis, Abe Mundon, A. Cessena and Hans Whippern and Marshal J. Hageman. In addition, Victor Goss, B. L. Fiegley and E. W. Fiegley, also of the film capital, have volunteered in the naval militia.

It is very probable that a good many more from the Pacific Coast studios will enlist in either the army or navy branch of the service.

The Billie Burke serial picture, "Gloria's Romance," in process of filming at the George Kleine studios for the past six months, had its New York opening at the Globe Theater some time ago.

Stronger Organization Means Surer Profits

YESTERDAY morning we heard a coal operator remark gloomily that there was no money in coal mining. He would not, he said, take as a gift one of those rich Illinois mining properties with hundreds of thousands of dollars invested in it. He represented one industry of hundreds about which the same thing is being said every day. The commonest thing you hear about any line of business is that there is no money in it.

These apparent pessimists are right, of course. Somebody in every business is losing money in spite of all the brains and ability that can be exercised. The motion picture business is fast getting into the same class. If you canvass all the film manufacturers and all the exhibitors, only a comparatively small percentage will claim to be making money.

A philosopher will regard that as a good sign—a healthy indication. It shows that the motion picture business has settled down to a practical basis, where men must work hard for what they get and exercise all the business brains they have, and where the weakest must go to the wall. That condition is true of all the old lines, and is bound to be true of the new ones as they mature through evolution. They used to pick gold out of the earth with their fingers for a while, but gold mining, like everything else, soon got down to a hard-working, fighting and sweating branch of labor.

It is easy enough to sit at a desk and tell film producers and theater managers and other workers why they are losing money while somebody else is making it. It is even easy to tell them how to change their luck by certain well known efficiency methods, and so forth. We could write it all down here with little effort, and enjoy the pleasant idea that we had turned the tide of fortune for somebody.

But our readers would have little patience with us if we persisted in telling them that following our directions would insure success. Out in the field, up against severe competition and a more and more exacting public, they know that all the ingenuity and efficiency in the world will not make a profit when there is not enough money to go around.

In one of our recent issues a well known exhibitor declares there is only a certain limited number of dimes and nickels that will ever go into a picture show box office. If his theory is correct it is impossible to conduct successfully more than a certain definite number of picture theaters in the world. We would be mathematically more correct if we said it is impossible to fill more than a certain definite number of seats at so much per seat. When enterprising but ignorant new exhibitors build theaters beyond the limit specified by a law of nature, there will be some empty chairs. And common sense tells us that this theory must be correct.

Efficiency methods, ingenuity in picture presentation, care in program selection, courtesy, all the things that make a theater attractive are of no avail if there are more efficient, ingenious, careful, courteous exhibitors than there are patrons to occupy their seats. And the fellow who has none of those attributes will try to make up for it by giving the people more than their money's worth. Then he loses money; his competitors lose money; commercial warfare starts and the cut-throat condition ends only when the weakest have gone down and the strongest are staggering.

Viewed from an editorial desk, this kind of destruction looks as foolish and unnecessary as the big war looks from Henry Ford's factory windows. And it is foolish; but putting a stop to it is as big a problem as stopping the European conflict, if not bigger. Blind, cut-throat competitive methods have been the order ever since business started, and probably always will be. Only the wiser industries that combine into strong associations have any hope of even modifying the condition.

There is no way that one exhibitor can prevent another from opening a new house, if he insists on doing so against advice. But there are ways that the manufacturers and distributors of film can prevent it, and ways that the exhibitors can persuade the manufacturers and distributors to prevent it. Those ways lie through the fellow membership of everybody in a single organization. That, and that only, offers any hope of maintaining the motion picture business on a sane, reasonable and profitable basis.

Put the League First

BY the time you read this, the convention probably will have disposed of its subject. At the time we write it, nothing has been said about it. Therefore the report of the Board of Trade sub-committee of twelve submitted July 6 to the committee-at-large on organization, with proposed charter and by-laws of a National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, is a document we discuss from an awkward position.

There is one point about it we wish to mention, however, even if our comment serves no purpose. Whether the new organization be completed in its present form, or be merged into a continuation of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America, the exhibitors should form Class 1 of the association.

The League will necessarily and naturally be the nucleus and foundation and heart of any general trade organization that is formed, whatever its name and however broad its scope.

The League is a going concern; the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry as yet is not. The exhibitors constitute the purchasing power and represent the ultimate consumer; for business as well as ethical reasons they should head the list of classes of members.

We are confident the manufacturers will have no objection to paying this compliment to the paramount importance of the exhibitor. Put the League first.

The Convention Marches On

IT is encouraging to observe that the visiting delegates are very much in earnest about the conduct of the convention and of the League. Whatever may be said about those who did not come, there is apparent among those present none of that indifference and ennui characteristic of so many trade conventions.

More than the representatives of any other industry, the motion picture men are in responsible charge of the thing that is of greatest interest to the world. They control the recreation habits of millions; and it is that responsibility that quickens them to a sense of the importance of what they do.

That the public is interested in more than the picture on the screen, in more than the offerings of its favorite theaters, is demonstrated by the evident popularity of the exposition at the Coliseum. The mysteries of the business side of picture making are quite as fascinating as the eternal promise of the program.

It is no task at all for the picture people to keep close to the public; the public will not let them get away. Everything they do and say is invested with a magic significance. They are the kings of the empire of entertainment.

And so the motion picture men take their sessions seriously, as befits their position, and move deliberately to studied ends. We know that the balance of this convention will see the accomplishment of many great things.

The 1916 Motion Picture Convention

F. J. REMBUSCH'S PLAN FOR ORGANIZATION OF EXHIBITORS AND MANUFACTURERS

IT is an old saying that it is easier to write history than prophesy. No one knows what a convention of motion picture exhibitors will resolve into. Going back into history we must all admit that the motion picture conventions and meetings of the manufacturer and exhibitor have up to the present time failed to do many of the big things which a representative organization should do.

When the League was organized in Cleveland years ago it lived and thrived upon the idea of battle with the General Film Company. What a change when we consider the General Film Company today.

As a matter of fact, the organization of the General Film Company and the distribution of film at that time was in many respects superior to the present conditions. General, on account of its large organized distributing plant, was able to give us better service at a lower price. The company had offices all over the United States and by having a great number of prints of each subject, together with their wide distribution, the cost in producing and rental overhead was much less and the profits larger to the film company while the prices to the exhibitor were at least one-half less.

Frank J. Rembusch, president F. J. Rembusch Enterprises and Rembusch Amusement Company, Shelbyville, Indiana, and candidate for the presidency, M. P. E. L. of America.

It seems strange that in those states where the League was the strongest we now have censorship. It would seem that in Illinois, Ohio, Pennsylvania, New York, where the League had always been active, there should now be no censorship while these states are notorious for their legalized censorship conditions.

Expositions

The great bone of contention of the manufacturer and exhibitor has been the running of expositions of motion picture art. At first we had conventions and expositions about every month. Manufacturers were dragged from city to city; spent their good money for space and program and there were no exhibitors to buy. I remember one convention that was advertised very extensively had seven manufacturers and three out of town exhibitors present. An agreement between the exhibitor and manufacturer as to a set time for exposition would be a great help.

Many big exhibitors have never identified themselves with the League because there has always been too much politics. Exhibitors who came to conventions and expositions for the purpose of learning something were disgusted with the political wars, forever the paramount issue. Exhibitors have not shown themselves ready or willing to organize in the right spirit. Whether it is from environment or his advocation I do not know, but Mr. Exhibitor is ever a law unto himself.

The Big Idea

Conventions should be an expression of the progress of a business. There should be a series of conferences, round table talks, lectures by the best men in the business. We might well follow the Chautauqua idea and arrange a set program in which we would talk shop and not politics.

Reviewing the past, I want to say what I said before the Board of Trade and before the motion picture exhibitors' meeting of the executive committee in January: No organization of motion picture interests will do the trade in general any good until that organization is made up of the two principal parts of the industry—the producer and the exhibitor. Furthermore, no organization will be effective that does not have for a basis certain specific agreements between the exhibitor and the manufacturer and I desire to present a plan of organization that would cure most of the evils of silly business policies, senseless competition, censorship, and other evils from which we are suffering. I do not believe that there has been any plan of organization offered by anyone and I do not claim this to be infallible but it would work no hardship to either manufacturer or exhibitor that I can see and therefore I offer it for consideration:

ORGANIZATION

The exhibitor and manufacturer to organize as an association, corporation, or chamber of commerce with a name appropriately expressing its object. The exhibitors and manufacturers shall have equal power and voice. All things being equal its members shall give preference to those belonging to the organization. The association shall collect information for the benefit of the trade and perform all of those acts which naturally come to an organization representing the whole industry.

It shall standardize prices, terms and agreements in the trade; establish credit lists and adjust differences between the manufacturer and exhibitor.

It shall take up questions such as legalized censorship, etc., and secure united effort on the part of the manufacturer and exhibitor to combat all outside evils against the industry.

MEMBERSHIP

Each and every theater, film exchange, film company, or anyone in the allied trade shall take out membership. Dues and admission fees shall be on a basis proportionate to the amount of interest involved and value of the organization to them.

CONTROL

An executive committee of three members shall direct the affairs, adjust differences, etc. It shall be composed of a managing director, executive secretary and credit secretary, elected at the national convention. Each shall serve for three years and shall be elected each year for various periods so that there is always someone in who understands the previous work.

The control of the organization shall be in the hands of twelve directors composed of six exhibitors and six manufacturers, which board shall meet monthly to transact business.

There shall be twelve alternates elected who will take the place of directors when anyone of them is forced to be absent, in order to insure a full meeting at all times. These shall also be elected so as to retire from office at different times.

The executive committee shall decide all questions if possible within one week after being presented. Anyone dissatisfied with the decision of the executive committee may appeal to the board of directors, whose decision will be final.

It shall be the object of the Association to standardize and commercialize everything pertaining to the business and create terms, prices and agreements, which shall be made a matter of contract between the exhibitors and manufacturers.

FILM SERVICE

Prices of film service shall be regulated as follows:

Current week in which a film is exhibited shall be known as service week. Service week shall extend from Sunday midnight to the following Sunday midnight.

Physical condition of the film and other considerations make the film more valuable when first released, therefore film service shall be regulated in price on the basis of certain definite periods which shall be called first run, second run, third run, etc. Each run shall be for a period of two weeks except the first run shall be for a period of two weeks plus the days in the week that it is released.

Film manufacturers shall make a definite price on first run, another price on second run, etc. On this plan exhibitors will be able to buy film better suited to their needs, requirements and ability to pay.

Great productions, such as the "Battle Cry of Peace," etc., not released in regular order, generally played on a percentage basis, unless otherwise stipulated exhibitors shall receive 40 per cent and the manufacturer 60 per cent of the box office receipts.

TERMS

All film bills are due and payable one week in advance of service week, and the billing date shall be the Monday before the service week. Money or check must be in the film exchange office on Saturday preceding service week, otherwise film service will be shipped C. O. D. until payment is made.

Exhibitors who pay their film service one full week in advance of service week shall receive a discount of 2 per cent for cash but this money must be in the office of the film company before the closing hour on Saturday preceding the Monday of date of billing.

When the exhibitor fails to pay bills or uses dishonest methods the exchange shall file a complaint with the executive committee and if it finds the exhibitor guilty he shall be listed as poor pay and no exchange shall furnish service except at an advance of 10 per cent over regular prices and all film shall be sent C. O. D.

There will be no advance deposits except when an exhibitor contracts for a serial picture he shall pay one-half of the first day's service in advance, payable at the time of the signing of the contract. This money shall be applied to the first episode. If the exhibitor cancels service before the serial starts he shall forfeit this advance deposit as liquidated damages or penalty.

The association shall compile a credit book of all exhibitors and manufacturers, which will be sold to exchanges and dealers. This book shall contain the rating and paying habits of the exhibitor and a weekly report shall be made by all exchanges of bad customers.

PROTECTION

The exhibitor and manufacturer shall in every way protect each other against senseless competition and over-production, having at all times in view the object of holding the favor of the people.

Fifty dollars per thousand inhabitants per week, or $2,500.00 per one thousand inhabitants per year, shall be recognized as a basis of the general earnings of a motion picture theater, in gross box office receipts.

Every effort shall be made to regulate the business so that where the business is well taken care of the erection of further motion picture theaters be discouraged. Every effort shall be made to conserve the business for those who are in it that they may be allowed to progress in a constructive manner on sound commercial principles instead of the wild theories practiced in the past.

It shall be recognized that 25 per cent of the gross box office receipts is a fair amount for the exhibitor to pay for film service and 40 per cent is exorbitant.

Manufacturer and exhibitor shall not be allowed to cancel film service except that one month's notice be given in advance and which shall apply immediately on present contracts whether the exhibitor is in the association or not.

All film service, express charges, paper, etc., shall as far as possible be agreed on in writing to prevent errors and dispute.

How Would It All Work Out?

The manufacturer would know of what his possible market consists.

We could fill our program much easier and eliminate the dickering and bickering of the present time.

We could select programs more suitable and better balanced; there would be more business for the exhibitor and manufacturer.

We would have a basis of credit that would encourage the paying of bills and eliminate the deadbeat.

It would put the business of buying film on a competitive market and act as a sliding scale whereby a good film would command a good price and a bad film would go to its proper level in price.

It would prevent over-buying by the exhibitor and would at the same time enable the manufacturer to keep his bookings filled.

Codes, price lists, etc., could be so arranged that an exhibitor would be able at a glance to wire or write for a program.

The conference work between the exhibitor and the manufacturer would soon place the business on a stable basis.

The business would take a new lease of life; values would increase; time, labor, worry and money be saved.

We would be decent and commercialized.

What Theater Men Are Doing

AN OPEN FORUM

This is a department of, by and for exhibitors. We want YOU represented here. Other managers and proprietors of picture theaters want to hear YOUR experiences, your opinions and your advice. Write to this department telling us your story, how you started, how you grew and all about your theater and how you manage it. Mention your advertising methods and your lobby displays. If possible send in photographs of yourself and your house. Address, The Forum, MOTOGRAPHY, Chicago.

Trials and Triumphs of a Successful Exhibitor

BY A. R. M. SUTTON.

MANAGER H. T. MOORE, of the Colonial Theater, Tacoma, Washington, has the reputation among theater men of the Northwest of being one of the keenest business men in this part of the country. Having heard of him so often I decided that the story of how this man made good would be of interest to MOTOGRAPHY's readers.

"Where and when did you first start in the business?" Mr. Moore was asked.

"I first broke into the moving picture business in the state of Kansas years ago," he replied, "and I was forced to mortgage my home to do so. I was living in a town named Pittsburg when I conceived the idea of embarking in the new industry—and motion pictures were almighty new in the year 1905."

"How large a place was Pittsburg, Kansas?" I wanted to know.

"It was a city of about 18,000 people and boasted of one nickelodeon. Together with G. C. Henning, a telegraph operator who lived next door, I became convinced that there was real money in reels. I was in the coal business (rather a fitting occupation in a place named Pittsburg) but anxious to branch out in some more congenial line.

"So the telegrapher and the coal dealer put their heads and bank books together. Many exchanges of enthusiasm were made over our back yard fences, and deep, dark plans were laid to entrap the nickels of the unwary."

"Did you have much capital to begin with?" I interrupted Mr. Moore.

"No, neither Henning nor I had much capital. Our cash in hand sufficed only to buy equipment, and I placed the mortgage on my home to furnish bonds for the pictures. At that time the film industry was a little different from what it is nowadays. For every reel of pictures shown an exhibitor had to deposit a bond of $100. It cost a man as much for bonds as for all the rest of his stuff put together.

In beauty, dignity, taste and attractiveness the architecture of the Colonial Theater in Tacoma, Washington, is one of the finest in the United States. It is this sort of house which is to bring the photoplay business up to the place it should rightfully hold.

This is the way to work with your fellow business men. Read the "Trials and Triumphs" story and see how Manager Moore of Tacoma's Colonial got his display in the window of a leading department store.

"Proving ourselves of unusually keen judgment at the start, we passed up our home town, the best location in that part of the country, with only one show, and that a poor one, even according to the flexible standards of 1905.

"My telegrapher partner and I landed in Wellington, Kansas, after scouting around a bit, and decided it would be an ideal place to make our first million. A vacant store building seemed to be the only structure obtainable, so we sought out the owner, an old gentleman named Savage. We told him what we wanted with his building.

"'You'll be wanting it about a week?' asked the old gentleman, with a cautious tug at his beard.

"'Oh, no; we want a long lease on it,' we assured him.

"'Not much you don't,' was his optimistic response. 'A week'll be all you want of it. 'You might remain in business that long.'

"From this stand he refused to budge. We could rent the place for a week or leave it. Our finances were running low, and we couldn't afford to wait; so we took the store for a week.

"Seven or eight days later the first motion picture 'palace' Wellington had ever seen threw open its doors, and I can truthfully state that the police were not called upon to handle the crowds. We called our little house 'The Nickel.' We thought the title an inspiring one, but it failed to inspire very many of its namesakes the first few days.

"I have no doubt our entry into Wellington created a holy horror in some righteous bosoms. In that town in 1905 motion pictures were classed with dice-shaking, dancing, fishing on Sunday, and other wild and wicked things. The first week or so ladies would walk by, hesitate, then come back and ask if women were ever permitted to go in. Upon being assured that it was a very respectable place of entertainment, some of them would timidly tender a nickel; and with fast beating hearts venture into the unknown terrors of the interior.

"Within two or three weeks, however, people began to like us, and the attendance came up leaps and bounds. We renewed our lease with the gloomy Mr. Savage, and things looked rosy. Then the rent began to climb. As fast as our crowds increased, the rent did likewise. It soon resolved into a merry race between the crowds and the rent. At the end of a month the rent was leading by a hundred laps or so, and we were regretfuly forced to call a halt. We didn't mind being held up, but we preferred to have it done by a regular fellow with a mask and a gun. So we departed from Wellington, and, as Horace Greeley advised, 'went West.'

"Since that time I have operated moving picture theaters in a number of Western cities and towns, bettering my business with each move. I came to Tacoma two or three years ago, and opened The Colonial. I think I will stick to Tacoma, too, for I like the climate, the people, and the general surroundings.

"I shall never forget one experience I had in a small Colorado town, which I think is the most unique of my career in the business. Unable to secure a building, I purchased a large tent, and started up my show. All went well for a few days. Then, one night, came a young and festive cyclone. I had to put a notice in the 'Lost' column of the 'Want Ad' section to find my canvas theater."

"What do you consider most instrumental in gaining your success?" Mr. Moore was asked.

"My policy of giving patrons the best I can secure," he replied. "'Clean pictures and good music' has been my slogan since entering the business. When selecting a program, I carefully consider this question: 'Is it the kind of entertainment I would wish my daughter to see?'

"More than once I have seen the other fellow pack his house with some picture that bordered on indelicacy, and sometimes the sight of his business has sorely tempted me. But I have managed to weather the storm and keep my conscience clear. In a few cases I have seen a competitor go out of business on this account. So I think if an exhibitor follows the idea that there is some good in the worst of us, and that everyone enjoys a wholesome picture with a good moral and a pleasant ending, he will find it wins out in the long run over all the morbid, sensational, and suggestive pictures with which the market is flooded.

"This is the policy I have adopted, and, after all, I think it pays best. To be sure, I have not yet accumulated that first milion. But I have paid off the mortgage some time ago which started me in the moving picture business."

Mr. Moore does a great deal more than just giving his patrons good pictures, however. He tells his patrons and those who are not his patrons about those good pictures and he impresses the goodness of them on the mind of everybody who comes within "eye-shot" of Tacoma. A sample of his original advertising is shown in the picture of the store window. It is a photograph of the show window of Rhodes Brothers, Incorporated, the largest department store in Tacoma. It was fixed up while "The Call of the Cumberlands" was running at the Colonial, and the firm ran a special advertisement on the book and had a photo and a three-column cut made at its own expense, which was run in the papers. The result was a big sale on the book, and the Colonial, which showed two slides calling attention to the window, did a big business on the picture.

Mr. Moore said that he also found a criticism contest very profitable, in which he offered a small cash prize and two ninety-day passes to the theater. The picture was "He Fell in Love with His Wife." About two hundred criticisms were received and a great deal of interest aroused. In the face of the strongest competition a splendid business resulted.

A Patron's Criticism

Following is the patron's criticism which was awarded first prize in the contest:

While the defects in this picture are greatly in the minority, still, there are a few which cannot be overlooked. In the first part of the play, it would seem that the shot Ostrom fired at his wife's brother was quite unnecessary, but having taken place it would be interesting to know what was the result, it is left to one's imagination to decide whether it was fatal or otherwise, and what punishment was meted to Ostrom.

2. Also when Alida enters the dairy room she pats the dog that has been running the churn and then immediately plunges her hands into the churn and brings out particles of the butter, without first washing her hands. Then again, at the end of a perfect day, Alida enters the house with her arm full of daisies and Jane rushes to the cupboard and brings a glass vase in which Alida arranges the flowers, without a drop of water, which is, of course, a very unnatural thing to do.

So much for the defects, indeed they are but few, whereas the good points are almost innumerable.

3. The first might be where Alida so unselfishly abandons all the comforts she had previously deemed as her right and leaves Ostrom to care for his legal wife and child. Next: Her neat attire so early in the morning as she prepares the first breakfast, and in fact, throughout the entire play her appearance and dress should teach some of our careless sisters that even on a farm a woman may be dainty and attractive. Also it might be a good moral to some to note that with just a little love and attention, even the plainest home may be glorified.

4. The fight between Ostrom and Holcroft was good, more realistic than most of the screen productions.

The scream of the play is Jane at the moment when Holcroft asks her if any young woman would be likely to care for a plain man like him, her acting is splendid, such facial expression is rare.

Taken as a whole the play is a wonderful success, one of the best I have had the pleasure of witnessing.

Respectfully yours, Mrs. R. J. Christian.

A Big Canvas Ad

E. C. Smith, manager ot the American Theater at Dayton, Washington, to advertise his recent showing of "The Great Divide," made a banner forty feet long and nine feet wide. This was the largest street banner ever hung in Dayton. The material cost $12, the banner being made of heavy canvas. Mr. Smith calls attention to the fact that the banner can be repainted ten or twelve times.

A mighty fine example of what a newspaper can do in the way of co-operation with exhibitors is seen in the Salt Lake Telegram. This enterprising sheet carries every day a page of "With the Photoplays" news and features profusely illustrated. On the same page, under the heading "New Picture Programs Announced," are given the current bills of the Paramount, Empress, Liberty, American, Broadway Salt Lake, Rex, Orpheum and Mehesy Theaters.

What the Children Want in Pictures

BY B. F. BARRETT

IN this much agitated subject of special pictures for children the manufacturers have given their views, the mothers have been consulted, the exhibitors have "said their say," the club women have voiced their sentiments—but has anyone given the children a chance to express their opinions?

The young Americans of this age and generation, personifications of the American independence, are perfectly capable of telling what they want, and generally have a very logical reason as to why they want it. As the children are the center of this discussion, why not allow them to enter into it? As the idea is to please the kiddies, why not get at the root of the matter and grant them the privilege of telling what will gratify them?

Through the courtesy of the Board of Education, MOTOGRAPHY extended to the Chicago school children in the lower grades an invitation to tell just what they liked best to see on the screen, and the four hundred replies show that as a board of censors the kiddies were certainly a success.

To the cynical adult who claims that the children themselves are not fit judges in this matter and they have no sense about what they choose, the tabulation of their desires given below will be a revelation. I challenge any person priding himself on his sagacity and judgment, be he parent, manufacturer or exhibitor, to make out a list of subjects for children's programs and choose a more sensible and at the same time more interesting array than the little folks themselves have done.

The subjects receiving the most votes certainly show that the kiddies not only appreciate good pictures but naturally ask for the better ones. They do not care for silly pictures, do not want simply to be entertained but enjoy most of all the educative travelogues.

The mothers contend that the exhibitor does not choose the proper pictures for the children, the theaterman claims the parents want to give the children only educational films and no entertainment and the manufacturer says the children do not want too childish pictures but enjoy the more dignified ones better. And the children calmly settle the matter by furnishing a list which is properly balanced between pleasure and education, between childish and more mature material—a list containing a great variety of subjects from which a program could be made up which would not only appeal to the younger members of the audience but to the older also.

Pictures They Do Not Like to See

Charlie Chaplin	12
Love stories	6
Murders or suicides	3
Serials	1
Sickness and death	1
Men who drink	3

The reasons most of the children gave for their preference for the travelogues was that they liked to see how the people in the other countries live, what they wear, also they show beautiful scenery, and the appeal of nature seems to be a very strong one.

The popularity of the serial might cause a doubt as to whether the fact that they furnish an excuse for going one night a week at least to the moving picture theater has not something to do with their being in such favor. The reason which a great many gave for their choice was that they were exciting and full of adventures and I believe it is the love for thrills and the natural adventuresome tendency of the child rather than the idea of the continued story which prompted their so general sanctioning.

The high estimate of Charlie Chaplin is rather offset by the twelve who state they do not like him—generally for the reason that he is too silly or too rough.

It is also interesting to note that while only six children in the four hundred stated emphatically that they did not like love stories none voted in favor of them.

The exhibitor who thinks it is not worth while to bother with special programs for children may experience a rapid change of mind when he realizes that out of the four hundred letters received almost every child goes to the moving picture theater in their neighborhood two or three times a week, and many of them go every night, which makes the question of a special matinee twice or even three times a week a profitable matter for consideration.

That the children are competent to tell what they like, and why, is shown in their letters.

The natural doll-love in all small girls manifests itself in Winifred Ferry's request for more dolls in the films.

There are so many different kinds of movies that it is hard to tell which I like best. I like to see pictures where dolls take the part of actors, or maybe children take the part of dolls. I think plays like that are very interesting and I think the moving picture theaters would collect large crowds if more were put on. Fairy tales taken from books I also like to see. I saw Hansel and Gretel and think it was worth the time and money spent on it. Most people like to see plays in which children take parts because it interests them and they like to see what children can do. Some of the pictures taken for children from books are nice, they always interest me and I think they interest other children. Then I like to see pictures from foreign lands and foreign plays such as in Japan.

Morris Price, our little six-year-old correspondent, knows very definitely what he does and does not like to see in the pictures.

I am a little boy six years old. I like to see Musty Suffers in the mooivies because he is so funny. I like pictchers of railroad trains and war pictchers. I do not like pictchers of men who drink.

David Ritchie is one boy who does not care for love stories.

I like western dramas with horses, animals and beautiful scenery. Also a few comedies please me. I dislike foolish love stories that have nothing exciting or interesting. I do not like pictures with sickness and deaths for I think we already have too many here to worry over we go to a movie for a good time and not to be sad.

An eight-year-old, Keith Rogers, objects to the "eternal triangle."

I like war pictures best of all. The Chocolate Soldier was fine. I like comedys like "Fatty's Plucky Pup." I do not like kissing pictures or where two fellows both want the same girl.

It isn't only the boys who like Indians and fighting, as Betty Ritchie proves.

I like to see moving pictures of little country children that live in log cabins. I like to see Indians surround the cabin. I also like to see the cowboys, Indians and soldiers fight. I don't care for "love stories." I always like to see pictures with dogs and horses and wild animals. I don't care for moving pictures when I can be out in the sunshine. I like to be out doors when it's nice but I like moving pictures other times.

Edward Seitz puts in a plea for the adaptation of familiar stories.

The kind of pictures I like best are the long ones that have three or more parts because the short ones are usually too funny. The picture I like best is Rip Van Winkle. I like the picture very much because I have read the story many times.

Mabel Prentice, a fifth grade girl, likes cartoons.

There are some kinds of movies that don't appeal to me. Those love dramas are so foolish. I like an intelligent play with a little bit of laughter in it. I also like cartoons. They are the only real funny ones I like.

Even the children desire thrills, as John Goertzkte demonstrates.

The kind of pictures I like best are the exciting, venturesome and mysterious, warlike pictures. The reason I like these pictures best is because I love excitement and mystery with sudden strange happenings. I think those kind of pictures are the best because they make you either lively or standing still with mouth wide open waiting results of different happenings.

Norman Yeretsky says Charlie is all right if he doesn't get too silly.

I like to go to movies when there are children's pictures like Rip Van Winkle. I like these pictures because they are good and I can understand them. I do not like silly pictures like Charley Chapman. I like him sometimes when he is not so silly. I like pictures like Little Lord Fountleroy.

Dwight Holcomb likes pictures with a moral.

The movies are becoming more popular as an educator. One fault though is that the common movies have so many things which a child imitates. Now if the things a child imitates are the things that makes a man or things that carry them through life, how much better would it be instead of murders, suicides and other fool stunts such as Charlie Chaplin pictures. My favorite pictures are: pictures that show a good moral, pictures that show customs and views of many countries, and pictures that show natural scenery and beauty. The plot does not interest me as much as the moral story and scenery.

Thelma Allimono, another fifth grade girl, wants thrills.

My favorite kind of pictures are detective pictures because they are so thrilling and I like pictures with little children in them. I like to see pictures taken in the mountains because the scenery is so pretty. And I like to see pictures taken in foreign countries because I can see the customs of the people. The reason I like to see detective plays is that the detective tries so many plans to get the prisoner. And the reason I like to see little children is that they are so pretty and cute.

Dorothea Davis shows how the costume plays appeal to the little girls with their innate fondness for "dressing up."

The movies I like to see are about the old time people. The hoop skirts are so pretty. The other movies I like are about real rich people that live in mansions. I do not care for the funny plays at all. They are too silly and have no interest to me. Most all children like Charles Chaplin. I like him too in some plays. Mary Pickford is my favorite actress. Whenever I know she is at a show I try to get to see her.

Irwin Fischer likes fire scenes.

I do not care much for funny pictures except Charley Chaplin comedies. I also like George Ade's Fables. I like weeklies showing beautiful scenery and fires. I like to see fire scenes. I do not however like to see plays where men murder each other. One play called Hell's Hinges, had many murders but somehow I liked it. It was kind of sad in some parts, cruel in others and some places it was funny. A man was bad at first and good in the end. I have seen several Burton Holmes Travelogues which I liked very much. I like to see cartoon comedies, that is, drawings made on films.

Robert Condon feels the appeal of the out of doors.

I like best to see a western drama, in which I can get a good view of the landscape, surface and true western life. I mention a western or out-of-door picture because in most city pictures the people are shut up in houses all the time. While in an out-of-doors picture it is more life like and the people in it act better because they are in the open.

Exhibitors Should Know This

The physiology of vision has an important bearing in connection with pictures. This is frequently overlooked.

The eye is many thousand times as sensitive after a period of darkness as at noon on a bright summer day. The Scientific American calls attention to the fact that astronomers, microscopists, photographers and x-ray workers recognize this and frequently must wait a number of minutes in almost darkness for the eye to attain the sensitive state (sometimes called "twilight vision") before being able to proceed with the work in hand.

In passing from the street with the glare of the sun from the pavement to the interior of a moving picture theater, although the click of the machine is heard, one may have difficulty in locating the screen at once. Until a whole reel has been shown the pictures will be pronounced very dim.

During the time the members of the New York police department were engaged in military training at Fort Wadsworth, perfecting themselves in the handling of the big coast defense guns, the Vitagraph Company of America has generously offered to supply a moving picture entertainment with a change of program nightly.

Gertrude Robinson, starring in Gaumont-Mutual feature productions, is to be featured in a series of plays written in a patriotic strain. Miss Robinson is strong for preparedness and requested that a series of patriotic film plays be prepared for her in order that she might do her bit in the preparedness agitation.

Mutual Has Well Balanced Program

GROUP OF ARTISTS PRONOUNCE "PURITY" BEAUTIFUL

A WELL balanced variety of offerings are listed in the Mutual Film Corporation's program for July 17. Heading the list is the second of the Florence Turner series of Mutual Star productions "Doorsteps," in which the star is supported by her own company consisting of Henry Edwards, Malcolm Cherry and Campbell Gullan.

The Gaumont-Mutual offering for the week is a three-part drama, "Gates of Divorce," in which Gertrude McCoy is featured, and an all-star cast which includes Alexander Gadsen, Iva Shepard, John Reichard, Lucille Taft, and Matilda Baring.

Three short features include "The Dancer," a two-act drama from the American studios, in which Vivian Rich and King Clark are starred; a Horsley production in two reels starring Margaret Gibson and William Clifford, "The Ostrich Tip"; and a Mustang two-part comedy-drama, "The Dyspeptic," in which Nita Davis and Ashton Dearholt appear.

The Mutual laugh provokers present George Ovey in a Cub one-reeler called "Jerry's Strategem"; Orral Humphrey in "A Studio Satire"; John Sheehan and Carol Halloway in "The Land of Tortilla," Beauty releases; and Ben Turpin in a Vogue comedy entitled "For Ten Thousand Bucks."

The Mutual weekly takes us through Mexico. Kartoon Komics that are clean and amusing, by Harry Palmer, on the same reel with the scenic series "See America First"; and "Reel Life," the Mutual Magazine in Film conclude the list of offerings.

The Mutual Film Corporation gave a special showing of the seven-reel production, "Purity," in which Audrey Munson is starred, to a number of sculptors and painters of America, including Augustus Lukeman, William L. Dodge, Piccirilli Brothers, Sherry Fry, Adolph Weinman, Daniel Chester French, Henry Hering, Scarpitta and Albert Jaegers. The artists were unanimous in their praise of the film and said it was a remarkable and true interpretation of the beauty of sculpture and the feminine form. The tropical richness of the landscapes and settings and extraordinary composition and photographic excellence of the picture called forth special attention. "Purity" is the production of an unusual staff of experts. Rea Berger, the director in charge, has been a preacher, a soldier, a photographer, actor, stage manager and director. Edward Langley, the art director in charge of the picture, is an artist, decorator, designer and expert photographer. Robert V. Phelan, the cameraman, is responsible for a large share of the beauty of the photographic effect.

Mary Miles Minter, the little Mutual star, has recently adopted a large family of orphans. A number of the scenes in her first Mutual production, "Youth's Endearing Charm," are laid in an orphanage and to get the proper atmosphere Director William C. Dowlan used more than thirty children from the St. Vincent's Asylum in Santa Barbara. A strong attachment sprung up between Mary and the love-starved kiddies and she was the center of a loving throng every minute of the days the children were working with her. Twice she gave up her luncheon hour so she could take the children for a spin along the beach in her new motor car.

Charley Chaplin's costumes on the screen are not generally such as to cause anyone to desire to pattern after them. But since his appearance in a dark gray shirt in "The Fireman" the members of the Los Angeles fire companies have discarded their regular blue shirts in favor of the dark gray ones.

Both Charles and Syd Chaplin are very much incensed at the rumor that there has been a split between them. They not only both deny it most emphatically but claim that they never have had a serious difference and are always very much interested in each other's work. Syd is negotiating with several concerns for the making of a series of comedy releases. Meanwhile he is not considerably worried, as his brother presented him with $75,000 in appreciation of his services as business adviser in the closing of the $670,000 contract with the Mutual Company.

The title of the first of Richard Bennett's series of Mutual Star productions has been changed to "The Sable Blessing."

"The Girl O'Dreams," the second of the American-Mutual productions in which Audrey Munson is featured, is nearing completion at the American studios.

Kolb and Dill have started work on the second of their five-reel comedies at the American studios. The title of the picture will be "The Three Pals." The story was written by A. Santell from a synopsis by Ritchie and Whitcomb.

George Wight, publicity man of the American Film Company, Santa Barbara, has been placed in charge of the scenario department to succeed William Pigott. Mr. Wight will also continue to direct the publicity work of the studio.

Hale An Aviator

Creighton Hale, now starring in the feature pictures of the Frank Powell Productions, Inc., is the only actor appearing on the screen or legitimate stage who has qualified and become a member of the Aero Club of America.

Mr. Hale recently addressed the Harlem Board of Trade on the adaptability of the aeroplane in modern warfare. The star has agreed to form an aviation corps among his co-workers in the motion picture industry.

Chicago Reel Fellows at Show

During the National Exposition in Chicago the Reel Fellows' Club of Chicago are maintaining a booth for the convenience and reception of all visitors.

The Reel Fellows maintain stenographic service, free of charge, at their booth and visitors are invited to use it. Secretary M. G. Watkins of the Emerald Company, is in charge, with a special club committee on duty each evening.

Arrangements for a trip of several weeks to the mountains north of Eureka, Cal., have been completed by the Helen Holmes company of the Signal Film Corporation.

Just What Kind

BY ARTHUR E. CURTIS

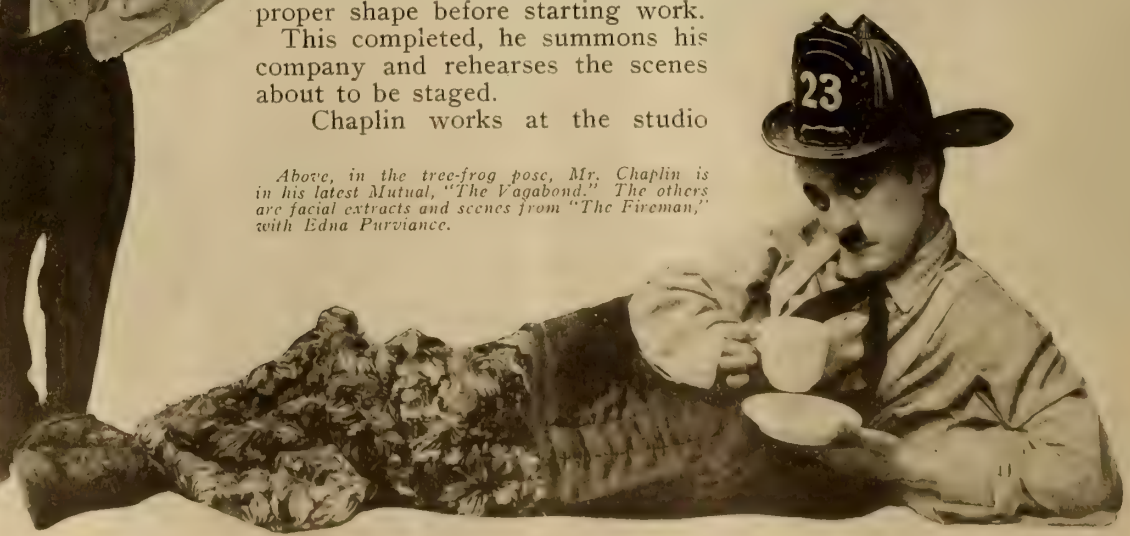
THE meanderings of Charlie Chaplin's shuffling footsteps in the sands of time are going to spell "The world's greatest comedian." And it will be a long time before anyone comes along who can kick up enough golden dust to erase those words.

Charlie is now an American institution, as MOTOGRAPHY has said before. He is not only making more people laugh than anybody else in the world, but he is reconstructing the sociology of the masses. The Reverend Cyrus Townsend Brady said, "The movies bring the world to the farmer's wife." He might also say, if he thought of it, "Charlie Chaplin supplies the laboring man with chuckles—hearty, work-forgetting chuckles."

What kind of a fellow is this great fun-maker? How does he work? How does he live? Can he do anything else but be funny and draw his measly little $12,884.60 every Saturday night? Many a good showman has wondered these wonders as he watched Charlie cavorting over his screen and convulsing the audience with some droll, solemn and subtle facial expression. Well, let's take some close-ups of Charlie, off duty and on. If you know how a fellow spends his time, you know what kind of a fellow he is.

Chaplin is an active young man. You may have noticed that. He is a systematic worker and a systematic liver. He takes his last look at the clock at 6:30 o'clock every morning. Then he gets up. And he's actually in again at ten, nearly every night.

Before seven a. m. Charlie is in his bath. This over with, he places himself in the hands of his barber, sits down to breakfast, spends a half hour with the morning papers and then a chiropodist shakes hands with Charlie's feet. All told, the comedian spends about an hour a day with his foot professor, a man of wide repute in his profession.



This visit over, Chaplin takes a whirl through the Los Angeles park in one of his cars, providing, of course, he has the time. He reaches the studio every morning, when he is working, which is practically every day in the year, at ten o'clock. Once in the studio, Chaplin confers with his studio manager, members of his company and other officials, and then doffs his street clothes for his make-up.

In the studio Chaplin is a great worker; he directs as well as acts. Every set, regardless of its size, is placed under his personal direction. He is an expert in lighting effects. He sees to it that everything is in proper shape before starting work.

This completed, he summons his company and rehearses the scenes about to be staged.

Chaplin works at the studio

Above, in the tree-frog pose, Mr. Chaplin is in his latest Mutual, "The Vagabond." The others are facial extracts and scenes from "The Fireman," with Edna Purviance.

of a Fellow is Charlie?

SOME THROUGH-THE-KEYHOLE CLOSE-UPS OF THE WORLD'S GREATEST CHUCKLE-MAKER

anywhere from eight to ten hours, depending on the importance of the production. In many respects Chaplin is a hard taskmaster. He is a great believer in details and sees to it that every member of his company from himself all the way down the line to the "extras" do their parts and do them well. His work over, the comedian is the personification of kindness. His day at the studio generally ends about four o'clock. A half hour later, in street clothes, Chaplin enters a little private office and lays out the routine for the following day.

Then he goes for a short spin in his car, generally with his studio manager or some other intimate, and winds up at the Los Angeles Athletic Club, where he is domiciled during his stay in Los Angeles. Until time to dine, Chaplin lounges about the corridors talking with friends or reading the afternoon papers. Dinner over, Chaplin goes immediately to his room, where he dons his "gym" suit and proceeds to the club's gymnasium. Here he spends an hour each evening, boxing, wrestling, tussling with the weight machines and bag punching, followed by a plunge in the pool.

Chaplin devotes almost two hours every night to his correspondence and the personal business affairs he must take care of, aside from those handled by one of his secretaries. Ten o'clock finds him ready for bed. His valet prepares his bath again and after a cold shower, Chaplin ducks in between the sheets. Within the space of a very few minutes he is fast asleep.

Chaplin does not smoke nor drink. To be exact, he smoked but one cigar in his life. He never cared to make another attempt. He is a good tennis player and a very clever dancer. Of late he has taken up golf. Motoring is one of his chief hobbies, but he prefers to let his chauffeur do the driving. He does not believe in speed, rather preferring to move along at a fair rate, and drink plenty of fresh air. When opportunity permits, Chaplin likes nothing better than to steal off for an hour or so for a little walk by himself in the park.

Like all red-blooded young men, Chaplin delights in the latest of light fiction. He is not what one might call a heavy reader, rather preferring to read slowly and thoroughly. He has read Shakespeare from beginning to end, is familiar with the works of George Eliot and other noted writers, and Charlie is actually a stickler for poetry.

At the top, two views of the real Charlie; extracts from "The Fireman," and here, shaking hands with the fair Edna Purviance in "The Floorwalker."

His chief hobby, however, is found in his violin. Every spare moment away from the studio is devoted to the vibrant strings. He does not play from notes excepting in a very few instances. He can run through selections of popular operas by ear and if in the humor can rattle off the famous Irish jig.

You always have to mention a star's wardrobe. If this $670,000 luminary were feminine it would be difficult to imagine the brain storms of description that would pour forth from the press agents in regard to her myriads of rare and priceless garments. Here's Charlie's wardrobe: Nineteen squatty derby hats, seven pairs of generous shoes, four canes, five "suits" of clothes. Total value, $2.40.

Chaplin is really a serious sort of individual, as the picture in the upper right hand corner testifies. The grinning view just below was caught just after he signed Mutual's little contract. Chaplin is what might be called a dreamer; he is a hard worker. "I have been a worker all my life," he says. "It is true that I could quit the screen and live in comfort with all the money I could ever need. But you'll find me working just as hard when I'm fifty years old as I am now. One can find more happiness in work than anything else I know of."

Here are a few final feet of Chaplin facts. He's twenty-six years old. He is tender-hearted. When his mother's sister died in England a short time ago, he broke down in the studio and work was discontinued. Not long ago he taught a class in Sunday school, and about that time Broadway has named the "Chaplin flip" after him. Between October first and June first, last, an usher in one of New York's vaudeville houses, a great admirer of Charlie, counted seventy-nine imitators of the little shuffling comedian.

Dozens of magazines have carried stories about Charlie, the latest being one in McClure's explaining how he patterned his walk after that of an old loafer whom Charlie often saw on a street in London when he was just "one of the poor little Chaplin boys."

OKLAHOMA AT CONVENTION

Exhibitors Send Uninstructed Delegates Who Favor Rembusch and Open Booking—Oklahoma Trade Show On for Fall

The directors of the M. P. E. L., Oklahoma State Branch, met in executive session at Oklahoma City on June 30. The members present were Ralph Talbot, president, of Tulsa; A. B. Moomand, first vice-president, Shawnee; S. H. Jones, second vice-president, Altus; Lee Olive, treasurer, Chickasha; L. W. Brophy, secretary, Muskogee; John E. Feeney, Okmulgee; Carl Gregg, Tulsa; Thos. H. Boland, Oklahoma City; Maurice Lowenstein, Oklahoma City; H. W. McCall, Oklahoma City; Peter Sinopoulo, Oklahoma City; O. B. Powers, Eldorado, Okla.

The Chicago convention was the one big item of discussion. It was decided that the Oklahoma delegates should go uninstructed in the matter of the election of the next national president. The principles set forth in Rembusch's platform meet the hearty approval of our members and Oklahoma exhibitors wish to go on record as favoring the "open booking system" and the putting the same in effect as far as possible at once.

As the Oklahoma branch is entitled to five delegates, it was decided that the first five of the following members to report at the Chicago convention would be given delegate's credentials: John Slocum, S. H. Jones, R. W. Wirt, H. W. McCall, W. C. Wood, M. Lowenstein, Carl Gregg.

It was agreed that the League shall put on a trade show this fall in connection with the Oklahoma State Fair, which occurs during the last of September. For this purpose a committee of five was named by the chair, as follows: L. W. Brophy, Muskogee; S. H. Boland, Empress Theater, Oklahoma City; John E. Feeney, Cozy Theater, Okmulgee; S. H. Jones, Altus; John Sinopoulo, Lyric Theater, Oklahoma City. This committee is now at the Chicago convention. They are to secure the services of prominent screen stars who will be the guests of the Oklahoma branch of the League during their trade festival. "Big George" Plummer has already been named as active manager, which goes a long way towards making this affair an assured success.

Film Men in Canadian Army

Among the great army of Canadian volunteer soldiers gathered at Camp Borden, Ontario, three Canadian picture men are very prominent, says the Canadian Universal Bulletin. These are Lieut. Jim Stubeley, formerly manager of the Princess Theater, Orillia; Lieut. Bill Duncan, for many years in charge of the Model Theater of Midland, Ontario; also Pte. Charlie Beattie, formerly of Barrie, Ontario. These three men represent many hundreds of film men who have volunteered to go overseas since the first drafting of troops began in Canada. Camp Borden, which is the largest training camp in America, is due to have two motion picture houses, which will keep these three men from getting too homesick.

Eddie Dillon has started rehearsing the inimitable Fay Tincher, who co-stars with Tully Marshall in a rollicking two-reel farce. "Stars and Stripes" is the temporary title given the production. Tully Marshall was the "dope fiend" in the Fine Arts production, "The Devil's Needle."

Co-directors C. M. and S. A. Franklin are preparing to film the "Two Waifs" at the Fine Arts studio.

The gentleman in his Japanese flivver is Charles d'Emery, who is in Cherryland making "scenic stuff" for Brown and Dawson of Stamford, Connecticut. "Dear Motography," he writes, "in my opinion Japanese women are the most beautiful in the world." We leave you to argue it out with him. Mr. d'Emery nearly lost his life in filming one of the Japanese volcanoes in action.

"Split Reel" Notes for Theater Men

HOW OTHERS ARE STEERING THE SHIP

THE Dallas, Texas, theaters have consented to aid the Texas National Guard in its campaign to support families whose breadwinners are at the front. Slides have been prepared and the moving picture houses are flashing them nightly.

"The Fall of a Nation" was withdrawn from the Liberty Theater, New York, July 15.

George H. Bond, formerly manager of the University Theater, Minneapolis, has joined the Pathe forces and will cover western Minnesota and South Dakota.

Manager E. C. Smith of the American Theater, Dayton, Washington, says Pals, recently ran three-quarters of a million feet of V-L-S-E film with but one stop.

Messrs. Dunn and Nagler, of Mabton, Wash., announce the change of name of their theater. Formerly known as the Majestic, this house is now called the Mabton Theater.

The Echo Theater, Portland, Oregon, was recently opened with its first showing of Big Four pictures. The new Fotoplayer, just installed, was of great assistance in filling the house, as the weather was extremely warm.

The Clemmer Theater, Second avenue, Seattle, has installed a gymnasium and shower bath for its employees. Crossing policemen in the neighborhood also have the privilege of the athletic apparatus and the waterfall baths.

A recent run of "The Secret of the Submarine" at the Mission, Seattle, was well advertised by driving through the business section at the noon hour a float representing a submarine, with several girls dressed in white seated on it.

J. F. Cubberly of the Zenith Feature Film Company, Minneapolis, has contracted for the exclusive handling of the E. and R. jungle comedies in Minnesota, North and South Dakota and the twenty-seven northern counties of Wisconsin.

Manny Gottleib of the Favorite Feature Films announces that he now has seven men on the road in behalf of this company. The men are J. Schuss, H. R. Harrison, C. R. Hockett, Hugh Wallace, L. H. Coen, J. E. Rosen and J. I. Sussman.

Loew's Seventh Avenue Theater, New York, issues a weekly program mailing card printed in red and black. "The Love Girl," "The Iron Claw," and "The Weakness of Man" are the features run on a recent bill in conjunction with the usual vaudeville.

The Dreamland Theater, Augusta, Georgia, runs six reels a day. Three serials, "Who's Guilty?" "The Secret of the Submarine," and "Peg o' the Ring" are now being shown. The music is furnished by an "Ideal Photoplayer." The Saturday program always includes four comedies.

Some 70 per cent of the men in the film hire offices in England have either gone or are expecting being called, and probably even a higher percentage of the staff of picture houses are liable for service. Two or three film hire offices have been closed by the war, and at least four picture halls have been shut down.

The self-styled censors in Boulder, Colorado, have grown so bold that they no longer stop at passing on the moral standards of motion pictures but are attempting to put a ban on films dealing with preparedness. "The Battle Cry of Peace" is one of the pictures to which they object. They claim it is a propaganda.

S. L. Rothapfel, of the Rialto Theater, New York, recently made a mid-week change in his program and substituted a Keystone comedy for the comedy he had been running. The reason for the change was the knowledge that the comedy presented had been shown elsewhere in contravention to the Rialto policy of pre-release presentation.

The Theater Louisiana, Baton Rouge, Louisiana, shows three novelties in its program—one is the size, 2½x6½; another is the fact that before 6 p. m. every day tickets for Rogers silverware are distributed; and the third is that all the profits on one night's special performance of George Beban in "An Alien" are to be donated to the States-Times Comfort fund for "Our Boys."

The Theater De Luxe, Los Angeles, California, has a new scale of prices in force since July 1. The program carries a diagram of the house showing just what price prevails in each section. There are 546 seats at ten cents, 210 seats at fifteen cents, and the loge seats sell for twenty-five cents. An announcement states that all children over four years of age will be subject to these prices.

J. B. Reisman, manager of the Dale Theater, St. Paul, scooped even the newspapers on the president's order calling out the militia. A friend of Reisman's on a local newspaper called him by telephone and gave him the news and he had a slide made and immediately thrown upon the screen. The result was that the audience went wild and when the morning paper played up the news Reisman's patrons noted that they had received the information even before state officials were officially notified.

The Chicago Daily News is sending out letters to residents in the neighborhood of the Clark Theater, Chicago, enclosing one of the regular programs of the theater and announcing that the program will be published each night in "Today's Feature Programs at Moving Picture Theaters" department of the paper. The Daily News also announces that it is distributing duotone photographs of picture stars free to patrons of the theaters advertising in its motion picture directory.

Mrs. J. W. Whitehouse, whose husband has been a bioscope operator at the Picturedrome at Morriston, Wales, for many years, has now taken up his position and is keeping the arc lamp burning during his absence. Under her husband's tuition she had become very proficient, and the pictures now shown are projected with the greatest skill and clearness. She is said to be the first lady bioscope operator in Wales.

Messrs. Wallace and McCurdy, managers of the Cowen Park Theater, a suburban theater of Seattle, have invented a new and very effective way of advertising their house. Every Friday night they hold a boxing contest in which all the young white hopes of the neighborhood participate. On that evening they also show one reel of the new Selig Athletic Series of famous athletes. Manager Wallace says that this proved a good business builder for them.

E. T. Atkinson, of the Dream Theater, Kent, Washington, exercised his originality and ingenuity in his recent advertising decorations for Vitagraph's "God's Country and the Woman." On the front of the theater above the Marquee he placed a landscape which he himself had done in oil and behind it he put his mercury arc rectifier, which illuminates the picture. From a distance it looks just like a lake scene at sundown. Below this on the Marquee an American flag was draped over a huge rosette with two ribbons hanging from it in imitation of the Vitagraph trademark. Mr. Atkinson also made the rosette as well as the signs which he used at the entrance.

One hundred and fifty wounded soldiers from the Roehampton Military Hospital were entertained at a special "Charlie Chaplin" matinee by the management of the Putney Bridge cinema in England. Manager Goodrich, in conjunction with the Essanay Company, was responsible for the arrangements, which included the novelty of filming the wounded soldiers as they arrived at the hall and at the end of the performance showing the soldiers on the screen the picture taken of their arrival. Each man was handed a package of Chaplin post cards and refreshments and cigerettes given by the Essanay Company were distributed by local ladies.

Douglas Fairbanks and "Charlie" Chaplin headed last week's program at the Rialto, New York. The latter will be seen in "The Vagabond," Mr. Fairbanks in "The Half-breed," with the support of a Keystone comedy, "Bathtub Perils," and the numerous musical features identified with Rialto programs. In commemoration of the twentieth anniversary of the introduction of the topical weekly, a compilation of news events of unusual interest has been arranged by Managing Director S. L. Rothapfel. A vacation trip will constitute the scenic section of the bill—a visit to "Delaware Water Gap."

James Q. Clemmer, of the Clemmer Theater, Seattle, Washington, in his recent showing of "The Snowbird," featuring Mabel Taliaferro, treated the public to another example of his originality in lobby displays. At the entrance to the Clemmer, just off the sidewalk, an animal resembling a huge, dark yellow cat walked back and forth or dozed in a cage. Above the cage a large placard informed the curious public that

> This Is a Genuine Mountain Lion.
> Come inside and see them chase > this same lion with dogs through > deep snowdrifts and catch it alive.

C. S. Jensen, of the firm of Jensen and Von Herberg, owners of a chain of moving picture theaters in Seattle, Washington, was arrested June 12 on a warrant charging him with attacking Mischa Guterson, director of the Imperial Russian orchestra, at the Coliseum Theater on June 10. To the chief deputy prosecutor Guterson said that while he was wearing his glasses he was struck in the face by Jensen. The musician claims that the assault was the culmination of a dispute over an encore on the night of June 10. Jensen says he struck Guterson because the musician used a foul epithet toward him, and he adds that he removed Guterson's glasses before striking him.

As an example of good program editorial writing, we quote the following from Paramount Pointers. The location of the house is immaterial. The point is the manner in which the writer emphasized the advantages of his house.

> The atmosphere of the Logan Theater is much like the atmosphere of the home, and that is why the reading lamp is losing much of its attractiveness. Its carefully balanced program has much to entertain every member of the family, from the youngest to the oldest, and when you consider that you can enjoy the photoplays in practically the same atmosphere as your home, the attraction is much greater. Then, again, the class of patronage is much above the average, which contributes in no small way to the pleasure of all who attend the shows.

While the subject of program writing is up a paragraph by Manager Brooks of the Y. M. C. A. Auditorium, Coatesville, Pennsylvania, is of interest. Conscientiously followed the policy suggested would be certain to develop very valuable confidence in the bills in the minds of patrons.

> We feel that our program for this week is just about perfect. We are willing to guarantee it to please you, for we know that it represents the survival of the fittest. It stands as the result of a careful selection of the finest films available. Weeks of study and careful investigation precede each issue of this little bulletin. Time and time again we omit this picture, and that picture. from our schedule. knowing that it will strengthen and build up our week's program, as a whole. You cannot afford to miss one of the six pictures outlined herein—they are the very essence of quality.

So large a part of the public is in doubt concerning the national anthem that the management of the Rialto Theater, New York, has adopted an explanatory note on the subject in its program. This course was taken after it was noticed that whenever "America" or "Columbia, the Gem of the Ocean" was played numerous persons would rise and remain standing. To correct this, Managing Director S. L. Rothapfel has prepared the following announcement for the program:

> "The Star-Spangled Banner" is the national anthem.
> The regulations of the army require it to be played at "retreat," or sundown, when the colors are lowered for the night; when the flag is half-way on its downward course the band strikes up the anthem, all stand at attention until the conclusion of the strain, when they salute.
> This recognition justifies patriotic civilians in according deference to this anthem exclusively by standing. For this reason "The Star-Spangled Banner" will be played at the conclusion of all performances, but not otherwise unless rendered absolutely necessary by the subject shown on the screen.

First Aid to Theater Men

BY S. L. ROTHAPFEL

I AM very glad that our correspondent by his question regarding the enlarging of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League has afforded me an opportunity of going on record as sanctioning this combination of the manufacturers and the exhibitors. It would seem that there could not possibly be any contention whatsoever on this question, and still here and there I have heard ugly rumors of exhibitors who were standing out against such a move—of exhibitors who were making some pretty contemptible remarks about the manufacturers and their reasons for wanting to join the League. What I have to say may be rather radical but I feel that no halfway measures are sufficient in this case. The exhibitor who is opposing this move ought to be made to see the error of his way and if the advantages of the combination are not sufficient to make him realize what he is doing in opposing them some drastic measure should be taken to bring him to his senses.

This question will be one of the many important ones taken up and thrashed out at the convention and it is to be hoped that every man who votes against this uniting of the two forces will have pondered long and thoughtfully and have looked up the matter from all angles so that he can feel perfectly justified and present good sound arguments to prove that he is taking the right step in his opposition.

45—Can you give me just one good reason why the Exhibitors' League should allow manufacturers to become members? I am an exhibitor first, last and all the time. You seem to favor a combined organization. Why? What are the manufacturers doing for you?

If all the exhibitors who are so narrow minded and selfish that they cannot see beyond their personal gain would just take the last question unto themselves—you would have one good reason why the manufacturers should be allowed to join the League. Allowed! You exhibitors ought to be the first to invite them and welcome them.

What have the manufacturers done for you? Where would the exhibitor be if it wasn't for the manufacturer? Answer if you can! Who was it that made the position of exhibitor possible? I suppose exhibitors believe that they are the only important people in the film industry, that the manufacturers are simply a side issue, the exhibitors are the main backbone. Of what use would your theater on which you have put so much thought and money be to you if you had no pictures to offer to the public in that theater?

You remind me of the starving savage who took food and drink from the Samaritan and then turned around and bit the hand which gave him life. After the manufacturer has made you an exhibitor, after the producer has fed you with the material which kept the breath of life in your business as an exhibitor you turn on him and ask why you should share with him even a corner of your League.

Is it jealousy you are manifesting? Is it that you think the manufacturers would overshadow you? Or is it that you just naturally haven't good common sense and are so blinded by your own self esteem that you cannot see the advantage it would be to every exhibitor to have this close co-operation with the manufacturer?

The theater men complain that the manufacturers do not give them what they want. They claim that they do not co-operate with them. They claim there should be a closer relationship between the manufacturer and exhibitor. And yet when the opportunity is afforded to gain this co-operation—to make one big family of these two important parts of the film industry—you step aside and say why should we share anything with them? You act like selfish children who will take everything they can get but are not willing to give anything in return.

It is high time the exhibitor ceased his classification of the manufacturer as an enemy and under a flag of truce tried to arrange an amicable settlement of all controversies. Every true exhibitor should have the good of the League at heart—should be anxious for anything which will broaden and strengthen it—and what will achieve this end quicker than the uniting of the two strong ends of the industry—the exhibitor and the manufacturer?

I am for a combined organization—for it heart and soul—and only wish I could do or say something radical enough to bring every exhibitor in the country to a realization of what it would mean to them and what it would mean to the film industry in general to have this strong and friendly unity between the producers and exhibitors. I only hope that the manufacturers will not be so disgusted by the small soul that many of the exhibitors have shown after the producers have come half way that they back out of the combine entirely.

The exhibitor needs the manufacturer and the manufacturer needs the exhibitor. It is a case of "united we stand, divided we fall"—and I hope the exhibitors fall hard who are too blind to see opportunity knocking at their door.

46—Don't you think it is too bad when a fellow knows just how to run a theater and could do it better than lots of exhibitors are doing now that he has to sit one side and see the others make a mess of it just because he hasn't the money to start out for himself? I have been running a machine in a theater for the last four years and it just makes me sick to see the fool things the manager does and how easy it would be for him to make more money if he would only use some business methods. But he hasn't any idea of what "pep" and "live wire" mean and is using the same methods they used in the ark when they showed news pictorials of Noah and his family embarking. I have told him lots of good ideas but I am nothing but an operator and he doesn't think I know anything except how to run a machine—but believe me, he can't find any fault with the way I run his old machine. I have given him two or three of my pet theories which I know would bring him lots of patronage if he would only try them out but he just laughs at me like I was a silly child and pays no attention to them. I just wish I could run his halfbaked house for a couple of months and I bet I could show him a thing or two that would make his eyes pop out. He is just pigheaded, that's what's the matter with him and thinks nobody knows anything but himself, and I can testify that he doesn't know anything. Do you happen to know of any way I could make use of these ideas of mine which come popping into my head and just have to be buried again? They are good, take my word for it, and I know there ought to be money in them. I am tired of being just an operator and want to get up in the business, and besides I am in love with a girl and want to marry her and I need the money.

The point you have brought out, of the exhibitor who is "pigheaded and thinks nobody knows anything but himself" is a good one, and should contain a message for all managers. Why should not a theater man be willing to take suggestions from his employees? Why should he not run his theater on a strictly business basis and on the theory that everyone is working for a common cause and are just as apt as he to see where improvements could be made. The scrub-woman around the theater might have an original idea, something might occur to her which would be of untold benefit to her employer, but the narrowminded man would scoff at her for even having an idea. The wise manager is the one who not only accepts suggestions from his employees but seeks them. It may be that not one idea in twenty-five is worth anything, but that one idea may be the means of creating larger box office receipts. The levelheaded man is the one who gets all the ideas which he can and then through his superior knowledge and judgment divides them into three classes, the absolutely worthless, those which contain some merit and are worthy a trial and those which are really clever. Also the plan of co-operation in any business always works to the best advantage of all concerned. The worker who feels that he has a personal interest in the business will give to it the best there is in him and the employee who knows that his opinions are valued for what they are worth will keep his eye always open to help out the manager who shows him this consideration. It is generally the little things rather than the big ones which count the most in the end and in the moving picture theater business there is much room for improvement.

While I agree with you that your suggestions should be given at least polite attention, you must take into consideration the fact that it is one thing to sit on the side and criticize and another to be right in the thick of the battle where all the responsibility rests upon your shoulders. What we think we would do and what we really would do under the various emergencies that arise in the management of a theater may be two very different things. You might do things which would appear to others just as foolish as those of your manager do to you if you really were at the helm, so do not be too severe in your criticism.

You are to be commended on your ambition to rise and not always be "just an operator," especially as the girl is to be the added reward of your better position. If you feel that the manager is never going to give you a chance to be any more than you are now—and it would seem that if you had been afforded no opportunity to rise in four years you have been patient enough—why do you not look around for a new position? Try to find a manager who is willing to give you a chance—tell him you are ambitious and that if he will give you a chance to make good and show what you are capable of doing and will promise to push you ahead as fast as he feels your work justifies, you will give him the best there is in you, you will give him the benefit of all your ideas and help him to work them out. It is probable you will have to start again as an operator but do not take the position unless you are sure that the manager also wants a partner, or a manager, at least, and will allow you the privilege of working into that position if you prove you are competent to do so. Then it will be up to you to show what you really can do when you are placed in a responsible position.

It might be that by advertising or looking around you could find a man who has the capital but not the necessary knowledge or time to devote to the management of a theater who would like to invest his money in such a project and give you a chance to furnish the experience and brains of the partnership while he advances the cash for the enterprise, and so be able to start a theater of your own. This would be a very satisfactory arrangement and I have seen it worked out a great many times to advantage. Most business men nowadays are not willing to have all their irons in one fire and like to have an interest in some side line but have not the time to devote to running it properly. Such men are always on the lookout for someone to systematize and start the business for them, and if you can get in touch with one of them and prove to him that your ideas are sound and your business methods sensible he will probably be very glad to put up the cash for a partnership of this sort. Your four years of experience as an operator ought to have made you pretty well versed in the problems to be encountered in the moving picture theater business if you have been on the alert at all—and from your letter I judge you have been absorbing all the knowledge of the business in general which was possible.

I believe by one of these two methods you will be able to find a better chance to rise. Here's wishing you luck and hoping the girl can start on her trousseau in a few months.

Metro Grows in Chicago

Exhibitors must like Metro plays and must express their appreciation in a concrete way, if expansion of the Chicago office is any measuring stick. Last January the Metro offices multiplied themselves by four when they changed their quarters from the fifth to the fourth floor of the Mallers building, and now preparations are completed for the absorption of one entire side of the fourth floor, which means that present space will be doubled.

R. O. Proctor is now Metro's Chicago manager. He was formerly with the General Film Company in both Chicago and Kansas City. Previous to his work in exchanges, Mr. Proctor was an exhibitor in Chicago, having managed for two years the Burton theater at Thirty-ninth street and Indiana avenue, and the Webster, at Lincoln and Webster.

Vitagraphs on General Film

Vitagraph will father two single part plays on the General Film Program of July 17. S. Rankin Drew is seen in a single part comedy offered on July 17. The title of the picture is "The Musical Barber." "The Fur Coat," another one-part comedy, is released on July 21.

"The Musical Barber" tells of the trouble caused by De Goat, a beard trimmer, whose chief delight is playing musical instruments between and during shaves. He is an expert at shaving with one hand while he plays the violin with the other.

William Dangman stars in "The Fur Coat." Others in the cast of "The Fur Coat" are George O'Donnell, Shirley Moore, and Ralph Whiting. Frank Currier produced the picture from Edward J. Montagne's script.

De Wolf Hopper, the erstwhile stage star, is about to start on his second Triangle comedy, a two-reel vehicle, which was conceived specially for him.

The Photoplay Scenario

CONDUCTED BY B. F. BARRETT

Former Editor of Photoplay Scenario Magazine.

NOTE—This department will appear hereafter in each issue of MOTOGRAPHY, and will treat of all subjects of interest to the photoplaywright—whether amateur or professional. You are invited to suggest any subjects you desire to have discussed, or ask questions on any matters relating to the writing of photoplays which have been puzzling you. The department is also open to you at any time for the expression of your own ideas or the submitting of ideas of others which have helped you, and will be interesting to other photoplay writers.

How I Gather Plot Material

BY MAUD MOORE-CLEMENT, INSTRUCTOR PHOTODRAMA CLUB OF CHICAGO.

A paper read before the Chicago Press Writer's Club.

THE enterprising butcher and baker and candlestick maker all keep a reserve stock of wares on hand to serve their trade upon demand. So, as plots cannot always be ordered up when we want them and as inspiration is not an everyday visitor, the writer, like the progressive tradesman, should have a stock of ideas or plots in storage to draw upon. For writing is a trade and business as well as any other vocation and to become proficient and skillful we must have a system as well as other vocations—the gathering of plot material for storage is part of the system. The question is "where" to obtain the material. If I depended upon my imagination for plots I am sure my stock would be limited, so I seek for something reliable.

To me the gathering of plot material is not difficult; in fact, it is quite easy if our eyes are open to see and our ears alert to hear. I gather plot material every day. A chance remark by a stranger in the car or on the street often gives me a good idea and I nail it promptly by recording it in my note book. Of course, my creation of a story may be as far removed from the truth of what his chance remark referred to as the north pole is from the south, but it prompts creation at least, and the more I try to create, the more I can. Constant, systematic endeavor in this direction is lubricating oil to the creative machine; makes it "run easy."

A plot is many times suggested in different things I read about. Reading is a wonderful help to the writer. The foreign countries, their manners and customs, their religion, the scenery, the legends, the folk lore, the fiesta—all serve me if I want to delve into "something different." Many of you no doubt witnessed the play "Vander Decker." It was based upon the legend of the "Flying Dutchman," as you all know, so you see so great a master as David Belasco does not despise the legend.

But I will confess that I find the daily newspapers my most profitable source for plots. I take two morning and two evening papers for this reason. I clip everything of interest from these papers, classify and file them away. Articles on science, medicine, great discoveries, modern inventions, biographical sketches and numerous other things. This collection saves many trips to the reference library. I do not scorn "weddings," "elopements," "disappearances," "accidents," "explosions"—all these notes help me to inject something novel into a plot, and very often there is in the article a suggestion for the basic plot and I weave a story from that foundation.

I will refer to a newspaper item that I used very profitably. You all remember the instance; somewhere in the south a man died of bichloride of mercury poisoning administered by mistake by his wife. His fight for life attracted worldwide attention. I kept all the data on the case and took the theme for a basic plot and developed it into a five-reel picture for fifty dollars a reel. To inject the dramatic situation into it, I caused the attending nurse to be able to accuse the wife of giving the tablet with intent to murder, for my story was that the husband and wife were very unhappily married and were on the verge of divorce because of the husband's cruelty and the nurse was aware of this. Incidentally the nurse was in need of a sum of money to aid an erring brother. She knew she could blackmail the wife, for in my story the wife believed herself guilty. Really she was innocent and I extricated her from her perilous position and she lived happily ever afterwards with her second husband. So, while the real story was not used at all, it suggested the plot that was worth two hundred and fifty dollars to me.

The "Real Love Story" column of the Chicago Tribune affords me many good ideas for an unusual story—and it is the "unusual" story that makes Mr. Editor ask you to submit more of your work. Recently I got a good idea out of one entitled "Love Overrules Judge's Decision." The story concerned a prominent judge who twenty years before the writing of the letter had married a dancer, not knowing very much of her former life. She made an excellent wife, and soon developed a taste for the study of law and in time was admitted to the bar. Their life was ideally happy. Then the judge was on a case of international interest. The prisoner, an accused murderer, was an immature youth. He had killed an accomplice who attempted to escape with funds they had extorted from a foreign nobleman by blackmail. The judge noted that the wife evinced unusual interest in the case, and he chided her for it; and, during his closing argument to the jury in a plea to spare the youth's life, the wife fainted and he forbade her to attend court any more. That night, surprising her in the library at a late hour, poring over the testimony, she confessed that the boy was her own son whom she supposed was dead. The boy was convicted—the judge divorced the wife. The letter goes on to say that after many years the couple were re-married. In that I didn't find the "big" story, but a plot is there and you can guess that I shall employ the wife's profession against her husband to save the boy.

Splendid meat for comedy situations I found in a column that ran in the Chicago Tribune for awhile under the heading "Thorns and Orange Blossoms," which summed up briefly the woes aired in the divorce court.

Usually I make a brief synopsis of the plot suggested to file away with my article, for by experience I have learned that to put the idea onto paper while it is red hot is a safety first plan. So much for what I find in the newspapers.

True "we have our heads to think out of," as the little boy says. But at that I think plots suggested by our imagination are really those stored in our subconscious mind-impressions—made by a verse we have read, a beautiful painting we have seen. I am not much of a stickler, though, for depending on the imaginative plot; I believe in the red-blood kind, the kind found in real life, the kind Jack Lait finds every day—the tragedies and comedies of the human. When we read a book or see a play upon the stage or screen and we can say "isn't it true to life," you may rest assured that the plot was founded upon a real happening. The honest-to-goodness REAL thing makes us enjoy the "Days of Real Sport," "When a Feller Needs a Friend," and "Indoor Sports," in illustration. It makes us weep a bit when we hear a song about "Mother," for "mother" is the real-est creation of God.

All hail to the great American newspaper for plot material, for real "stuff" for reel stuff.

Titles

TOM TERRIS, producer of "My Country First," is a staunch believer in the value of titles and his statement regarding this all-important part of the scenario should be remembered by every photo playwright. Mr. Terriss says, "I read hundreds of scripts every year but I never glance at one, the title of which does not indicate intelligence. A good title is the best advertisement any picture can have. Also a man or woman who cannot write a good title cannot in the nature of things write a good script."

Remember that warning—if you cannot write a good title you cannot write a good script.

What is a good title? And right here lies the root of the trouble. Too many writers have no conception of what constitutes a proper title.

The name of your photoplay should first of all be short—you want one which is easily remembered so if the fan sees an advance notice of a coming film which appeals to him he will not forget the name before the feature is shown. It must be appropriate to your play and give some idea of the story itself. If you are writing comedy the title should be light and snappy; if a melodrama, the nomenclature should hint at this. It should contain the keynote of the plot—the kernel of the nut as it were. It must be catchy—the title advertises the photoplay—then let it be one which will catch the eye as it appears on the billboards or looks out from the page of a trade journal or is flashed on the screen.

What makes you read an item in a newspaper? It is the headline which catches your eye and interests you so that you want to read further. What makes you pick out a book from a shelf when you are just casually looking along the rows? It is the title—the advertising headline. If you are considering going to the picture theater you look in the paper to see what the different houses are showing. What catches your eye the first thing? The names of the plays, of course, and if you are not familiar with the actors or actresses you will decide to go to see the film which appeals through its title.

Then—most important of all—the title must be original, and the writer should strive as earnestly for something different and out-of-the-ordinary in his title as he does in his plot. The story may hold the attention of the editor when he gets to it but it is the title which tempts him to read it.

Again and again the question is asked how can I be sure that my title is original? How can I know that it has not been used before? This is a very difficult matter. It is simple enough to keep away from the trite and the hackneyed but it is not so easy to be certain the idea and even the exact words have not already been utilized. An excellent drill for acquiring a knowledge of what constitutes a good title from the catchy standpoint and also from the angle of choosing one which has not already been used, is to select a list of films—a long list composed of pictures issued by all different companies—and study the titles. Find out what have already been used, and determine what the film companies consider catchy, advertising captions.

A peculiar thing about these titles is that it does not matter when you give your play its cognomen. Some people get their plot ideas from titles—that is a catchy line will flash into their heads and around this they build their plots. Others wait until the play is entirely completed and then decide what will best express the idea they wish to convey to the public. To still others as they are writing some one phase or incident suddenly jumps into prominence and instantly they recognize this as the keynote—this is the title of their play.

But no matter when, how, or under what conditions you write your title, do not slight it. Never think that it doesn't really matter because the director will probably change it. Perhaps he will, but the first impression should always be a good one and if the editor does not read your play it will never get to the director. The first thing the editor sees is the title and if he is immediately attracted by something fresh and clever here he will be led to believe that originality and cleverness will be displayed throughout the scenario.

Market Letter from Vitagraph

"Will you kindly announce in your photoplay market department the fact that the Vitagraph Bay Shore studios are buying good one-reel comedies. We are willing to consider anything with a novel idea, whether it be polite comedy or slapstick. In our comedies we do not feature any particular comedian, but cast up our stories according to the types called for in the scenario.

"Ralph W. Ince, supervising director at Bay Shore, will always consider a good feature, from five reels up. Miss Lucille Lee Stewart is Mr. Ince's leading woman, and Mr. Ince would like to have vehicles to star her in, but authors should not hesitate to submit other stories of merit. Mr. Ince prefers modern stories of today.

"Scenarios or synopses should be sent to Edward J. Montagne, scenario editor, Bay Shore Studios, Bay Shore, L. I."

Atlas Wants Comedies

The Atlas Motion Picture Company, 109 Smith Building, Detroit, Michigan, is in the market for clever, original, one-reel comedies with plenty of action. The work of experienced writers is desired, but Editor E. Lynn Summers states that scripts sent by novices in the art of scenario writing will also be given careful attention and quick decisions rendered in each case. The prices paid for photoplays will be according to their value.

TRIANGLE'S WHO'S WHO

Blanche Payson Doesn't Like to Be Asked Foolish Questions, and Norma Talmadge Loves Colored Photographs of Herself

The Triangle Company has been compiling a sort of "Who's Who" of its players and the answers have told them lots of things they never even guessed before regarding many of their stars. Blanche Bush Payson was typically frank in answering all the questions, stating that her hair was black and she possessed a ravishing peach-blossom complexion, after slight stimulus or exposure to the sun, even more so. In answer to the question, "Do you like public or domestic life?" Miss Payson answered, "Life before the public when feeling well; domestic life when sick, tired, sleepy, injured or unable to get about through bodily ailment or lack of clothes or money." The question, "Are you fond of outdoor life?" brought the reply, "Yes, until the cafes open."

Mack Sennett, producer of Keystone comedies, has gone to New York for a stay of several weeks. Mr. Sennett has been working on the Pacific Coast for the past year and during his trip back east several plans for forthcoming Keystone pictures will be worked out.

One of the hobbies of Norma Talmadge, the Triangle star, is having her picture taken. Upon her arrival in the east she heard of Henry Hess of Philadelphia, who is responsible for the Hess-Ivans system of color photography, and accompanied by Jewel Carmen and Corrine Parquet she made a raid on the studio. The three Triangle maidens kept the photographer busy all one afternoon taking their pictures by the new process.

J. B. Gunlach of New York was so impressed with the ingenious contrivance used in "The Mystery of the Leaping Fish," in which Douglas Fairbanks is starring, that he sent all the way to California to have one of these great stuffed fishes made for him to take to his Adirondack camp.

Mae Murray in Her Third Play

Mae Murray will appear in her third production for the Lasky Company on July 17. The play is Cecil B. De Mille's production, "The Dream Girl." This is an original story by Jennie MacPherson, and marks Miss Murray's first appearance under the direction of Mr. De Mille and under the most favorable combination of circumstances as the star in a photoplay which is the joint work of Miss MacPherson and the Lasky studio's director general, who are jointly responsible for "The Golden Chance."

As Lady Jocelyn Leigh in "To Have and to Hold," Miss Murray made her screen debut and scored a pronounced success. Again as the mischievous widow in "Sweet Kitty Bellairs" she increased her popularity and established herself as a photodramatic artist of distinction.

James Young, one of the best known directors in the motion picture industry, has resumed work at the Lasky studios, Hollywood, California, and will devote himself exclusively in the future it is said on productions for Miss Blanche Sweet.

Sessue Hayakawa, Japanese screen star who has appeared frequently in Lasky productions and was the star in the recent Paramount release, "Alien Souls," will appear soon in a feature play said to be the most elaborate in which he has appeared and is entitled "The Honorable Friend." It will be produced under the direction of Edward La Saint.

Hayakawa was well known on the stage in Japan before he came to this country several years ago and appeared on the Pacific coast with a Japanese troupe of players.

At the luncheon of the Rotary Club held at the Hotel McAlpin on Thursday last, "Vitagraph Sam" Spedon made a speech on "Moving Pictures in the Making." Everyone present was deeply interested and Sam was called upon to answer many questions. A special reel showing the workings of the various departments of the big Flatbush studio was also run off.

Pathe to Show American Fashions

BIG ADVANCE OF RELEASE SALES FOR "THE GRIP OF EVIL"

SOMETHING entirely new in fashion films will soon become a part of the regular Pathe program. Made in America gowns and fashions will be shown on beautiful figures and the women of the country will be able to see their own fashions created by their own modistes months in advance. The pictures will be directed by Florence Rose, formerly editor of L'Art de la Mode, and editor of the fashion pages of the New York Evening Mail, and be known as "The Florence Rose Fashions." Besides the advance fashions a pretty story will be woven into each reel to increase the interest of the audience. Dell Boone, Florence Reutti and Corene Uzzell will play the important roles in these fashion plays. The first release on August 7 will be entitled "A Day with a Society Girl," and will show advance styles for the fall. Besides the screen version the fashions and story will appear in all the leading newspapers every day for twelve days in advance of release date. Those already signed are Chicago Daily News, St. Paul News, Minneapolis News, Omaha News, Louisville Times, Pittsburgh Dispatch, Buffalo Enquirer, Baltimore American, Boston Traveller, Syracuse Post-Standard, Utica Observer and Cleveland News.

The titles of the first four episodes of "The Grip of Evil," the Pathe fourteen-chapter serial, have been announced as "Fate," "The Underworld," "The Upper Ten," and "The Looters." The basic idea for this masterplot was conceived by La Monte Waldron, a well-known New York newspaper man, and was picturized by Douglas Bronston.

This serial is having a record-breaking booking in advance of the release. A telegram to the Pathe executive offices from Manager Quimby of the Pathe Seattle Exchange shows how it is going in the west.

Sold "Grip of Evil" to Pantages for all his theaters in United States and Canada same as "Iron Claw." Pantages says he would not trade any episode of "Iron Claw" for any act on his bill. He considers it the best of anything he has ever seen in pictures.

Under the heading "Spends Millions to Determine If Humanity Is in the Grip of Evil," the Pathe Company has issued a letter signed by John Burton, the hero of the fourteen-chapter serial. This letter has been published in all the newspapers of the country and has aroused a great deal of interest. G. A. Smith, of the Pathe Company of New Orleans received one letter which is typical of many others, in which the writer says:

"The only question is, what am I going to do with the letters that John Burton's letter brought forth? I regret that it was necessary to continue with the stories about the picture because a great discussion could have been aroused had the Burton letter been published earlier."

Roland Bottomley, who takes the part of John Burton, in "The Grip of Evil," is a protege of Ellen Terry. When solo boy in a Roman Catholic church in London she heard him sing and asked if he would not like to go on the stage. She afterward went to see his mother and persuaded her to allow the boy to become an actor rather than a cabinet minister. Mr. Bottomley grew up on the stage, constantly rising, and at one time toured in two plays which he had written himself. He is now in moving pictures with the Balboa Company.

Pathe News has conquered Broadway in a way that has never before been accomplished by news films. Every picture theater on Broadway from the Battery to Spuyten Duyvil, excepting two, has booked the News. Also bookings have poured in from all parts of the city, and any New Yorker who wants to see the Pathe News, no matter where he lives, can find a theater near by which shows it.

Pathe Produces Leoncavallo's Opera

To the Pathe Freres Company of Paris, is given the honor of having produced the first photo-opera in their picturization of Leoncavallo's opera "Queen of Roses." This is a most gorgeous production and the cast is composed almost entirely of Italian players. This adaptation as presented at the Candler Theater was accompanied by the complete score of the composer. An orchestra of fifty pieces from the Metropolitan Opera House interpreted the score and in addition Adelgiso Barbieri and Natale Carrosio sang the two gems of the composition, "The Rose Waltz" and "Queen of the Roses." For once the relative importance of the picture and the accompaniment were reversed and while the screen visualization harmonized well with the music it was completely subordinate to the score. Although the picture is very well produced it is of but secondary moment, the score being the compelling feature of the entertainment. The "Queen of the Roses" will attract not only the devotee of the motion picture but people who enjoy fine music can find it here with the added enjoyment of sympathetic and artistic treatment on the screen.

Dave Smith, Vitagrapher, is hard at work on a one-reel comedy with Anne Schaefer and George Kunkel.

HAIL KING FOX!

Builder of a Kingdom and Ruler Over Twenty Thousand People—Jane and Katherine Lee Make Hit as Mimics

Children, with the natural spontaneity of their kind and the freshness of their immaturity, quickly become favorites in motion pictures and make a direct appeal to the hearts of the audience. Katherine Lee, six years old, and Jane, four, are no exception to this rule, and they play most important roles in "A Daughter of the Gods," the William Fox film fantasy. These two children are both mermaids and human beings in the course of the picture, and are called upon to indulge in their laughable mimicries. These little girls are natural mimics and have not been taught any false arts of gesture and grimace but have been permitted to develop in an entirely original manner. Jane Lee gives convincing imitations of Theda Bara and Valeska Suratt, while Katherine mimics Annette Kellerman in gesture, movement, walk and voice most creditably.

The story of Aladdin and his wonderful lamp, as told in "Arabian Nights," has faded into oblivion in the face of the modern Aladdin in the person of William Fox, a tremendously busy man of affairs, managing twenty-five or more theaters, arranging the affairs of a world-wide motion picture corporation and yet finding time to dream a tremendous, imaginative dream, which impressed him so forcibly that he spent over a million dollars making it become true. He became a king with 20,000 people doing his bidding. He built a kingdom and ruled it and then destroyed this great capital of a fairy city to make a dramatic climax of his tremendous story, "A Daughter of the Gods." In the beginning William Fox intended to spend $1,000,000 on this spectacle but up to the day of its first presentation it had cost its owner $1,200,000.

William Fox is musically inclined and places an extremely high valuation upon music as an accompaniment of motion pictures. He found that certain tunes stuck in his memory and refused to be banished, and it suddenly occurred to him that a composer who could so compel his attention possessed the qualities he desired embodied in the score for "A Daughter of the Gods." Therefore Robert Hood Bowers was selected to compose the music to best express the spirit of this fantasy. Mr. Bowers is a well-known composer having many popular musical productions to his credit. The writing of the score for "A Daughter of the Gods" required two and a half months of work by night and day but it is declared to be the prettiest and daintiest ever written for and played with a motion picture.

"Who's Guilty?" Star "Studied Law"

Miss Anna Nilsson, the famous Swedish actress, is one of the stars of Pathe's big photo-novel stories, "Who's Guilty?" She is an extremely well-educated young miss, who literally fought her way up the ladder of success from a start in New York as a fashion model.

Soon she had become the most noted and most-sought-after model in all the big city. And then, as a protege of Alice Joyce, Miss Nilsson got her chance in pictures, improved it, and now, in her employment with the Arrow Film Corporation, which is producing the "Who's Guilty?" series, Miss Nilsson is at the very pinnacle of fame.

When she arrived in this country seven years ago the little blonde lady knew not a word of our language. She started in with words of one syllable and read everything she could—primers, grammar-grade books, and newspapers. Then she read English translations of her own great Scandinavian authors, thereby using her knowledge of the plots to aid her in acquiring facility with our language.

Just how she acquired her English came out a few days ago. She was sitting in a corner of the Arrow studios waiting for a new set to be put up for "Beyond Recall," one of the "Who's Guilty?" series. A law book was needed for a "prop" and the beautiful star told how she studied lawyers' diction and thus familiarized herself with the "United States" language.

Coney Island Managers in Quandary

The managers of the picture shows at Coney Island are rebelling against a mandate of the Board of Health to the effect that all children shall be excluded from picture theaters whether accompanied by parents or not during the epidemic of infantile paralysis.

The managers claim that it is impossible to keep children out, as most of their shows are free and are held practically in the open air without even a curtain around them. Also they argue that the moving pictures are simply an incidental entertainment for those who sit at the tables for refreshments and they do not see how they can serve the parents and refuse to serve the children with them. Also when a shower comes up the people run to these places for shelter and it is practically impossible to keep them off of the pavilion floor.

Captain John Linden of the Coney Island police station quickly saw that the mandate was unreasonable if not quite impossible, and inasmuch as the moving picture men were willing to comply with the ordinance to the best of their ability they were given the assurance they would not be arrested except for flagrant and obvious violation of the law.

The Coney Island Business Men's Association have called a special meeting to discuss this problem.

Edward J. LeSaint has joined the Lasky company at its Hollywood studios as a director.

COAST RIGHTS TO ROSENTHAL

Western Civilization Company Formed by Isaac A. Rosenthal to Exploit "Civilization" in Ten Western States

The coast rights for "Civilization" have gone to Isaac A. Rosenthal of the Sun Photoplay Company, San Francisco, and Sutton Feature Film Company of Seattle. Mr. Rosenthal has organized the Western Civilization Company to handle this big proposition and will cover the states of California, Oregon, Washington, Idaho, Utah, Arizona, Colorado, Nevada, Wyoming and New Mexico. The membership of the new company is composed largely of New York capitalists with Duncan M. Stewart, president; Richard L. Cowan, vice-president; William J. O'Toole, secretary; and Isaac A. Rosenthal, general manager.

That the little things which appear insignificant often score more than the big scenes in a film production is demonstrated in "Civilization." Thomas H. Ince at enormous cost erected the palace and surrounding buildings in the city of Wredpryd and into this scene introduced about 8,000 soldiers. While they were marching through the streets in an imposing array four aeroplanes accidentally flew out over them and cast their shadows across the footsteps of the departing soldiers. This incident, nevertheless receives more generous applause at every performance than many of the magnificent scenes. Also the tiny toddling baby who appears two or three times for very short intervals causes more comment than the main players and Baby Lillian Read is not soon forgotten.

EAST GETS "THE FALL"

Big Dixon-Herbert Spectacle Sold to State Rights Buyers in New York and New England Offices Move.

"The Fall of a Nation" has closed its run at the Liberty Theater, New York. Numerous patriotic organizations and societies of foreign-born citizens took advantage of the closing days of the run to send large delegations to the Liberty. Friday evening's performance was given principally for the New York Society of the Order of the Founders and Patriots of America and the Swiss Maennerchor Winkelried. Numbers of New York's Danish born and members of the Holland Society of America also saw the spectacle, as did the Old Guard and the Veterans of Foreign Wars. "The Fall of a Nation" was successfully produced in Chicago last Monday, and from now until Labor Day Mr. Dixon will be busy with the preparations for the resumption of the New York engagement and the organization of numerous touring companies for the smaller cities of the country.

Many delegates to the National Educational Association spent an evening in New York witnessing the big film, "The Fall of a Nation," and hearing Victor Herbert's patriotic music.

The exploitation offices of the National Drama Corporation requiring larger quarters, were moved July 8th from 1480 Broadway, New York, to the fourth floor of the Subway Central building, 1465 Broadway. A film exchange will be established there for Greater New York and New England exhibitors. The work of distributing "The Fall of a Nation" by the state rights plan will also be actively carried on. The chiefs of staff in the enlarged offices include Ed V. Giroux, manager, Henry MacMahon, press representative, and Wayland Taylor, auditor. W. M. Powers, who has been associated with the press department, has been appointed the New England representative.

The National Drama Corporation announces that "The Fall of a Nation" will be released to Greater New York and New England exhibitors on July 24. This is in line with Thomas Dixon's recently announced policy of securing the widest possible distribution of his work whilst the military forces of the country are mobilized and America is debating the question of further preparedness. With the films now being placed in the hands of state rights purchasers by September at least fifty prints of the National Defense play will be exhibiting its enthralling story to the great American public.

"The Fall" is now running at the Illinois Theater in Chicago.

Kulee's "The Unborn" Booming

Kulee Features, Inc., caters especially to state rights buyers. For that purpose the concern is to produce twelve features a year. That this method of marketing pictures is exceedingly satisfactory to all concerned is proved beyond a doubt by the company's success with its latest production, "The Unborn," a five-reel propaganda picture.

A southern syndicate represented by W. F. Neil, manager of the Majestic theater, Birmingham, Alabama, has bought the eight southern states from Virginia to the Mississippi River for "The Unborn." Edward Lux, late of the Buckeye Film Company of Cincinnati, Ohio, but now located in Indianapolis, has bought the state rights for "The Unborn" for Indiana and Kentucky.

Over twenty telegrams, letters of inquiries and offers for this picture have been made from Detroit alone. Altogether, over three hundred letters and telegrams are on file in the office of the Kulee Company asking for a price on different territories on this picture.

Robert T. Kane, representing the Kulee Company, left for the west on Friday to close up a number of sales that are merely waiting for a screen examination. On the first of August the Kulee Company will have completed and ready for sale a new five-reel feature along unique and original lines.

Vitagraph's Service to Editors

Over six hundred newspapers in and around V. L. S. E. distribution centers are now receiving Vitagraph's latest press sheet innovation. It consists of a number of sheets of single and two-column press stories set in galleys and attached together at the top. Mats or electros go with this service.

The sheets are perforated just below the fastening so that an editor may pick out any story he desires, mark instructions for its length, position or layout in the generous white space which surrounds it, and shoot it to the composing room. Victor B. Johnson of the Vitgraph News Service Department is giving this feature his especial attention.

The Community Motion Picture Bureau of Boston, Massachusetts, makes a specialty of furnishing educational and children's societies with films. David K. Niles is director of the exchange.

FARNUM IN NEXT PALLAS

Popular Star in "Davy Crockett" for Paramount Program, July 13, Supported by Winnifred Kingston and Herbert Standing.

Closely following the release of "The American Beauty," starring Myrtle Stedman, Pallas Pictures announces as its next subject for the Paramount Program, Dustin Farnum in "Davy Crockett," the historic subject as done by Frank Mayo. The new Farnum vehicle will be released on July 13.

In this production the vast range of scenery and climate that is available for motion pictures in southern California is wonderfully shown in the raging snow storm and summer garden scenes that were taken on locations all within a day's ride from the studio. Scenes taken in the forest during a blizzard among deep snow and ice covered trees, show a southern California that few people know about. After taking these scenes the players motored down to the seashore to an old colonial estate where the summer-like warmth made the frontier costumes feel a bit heavy to the actors. Beautiful mountain and backwoods exteriors enhanced by photography of the usual Pallas excellence are among the prominent features of the photoplay. The interiors were filmed only after considerable study of the true beauty of the pure Georgian period decorations which the film offers.

As "Davy Crockett," Dustin Farnum appears in a role to which he is well adapted. As the romantic backwoodsman he is shown at his best, while his love for the out-of-doors and his proficiency with the paddle, the rifle, and his gentle art of riding a spirited horse all stand him in good stead. Supporting the star in "Davy Crockett" are Winifred Kingston as Eleanor Vaughn, the dainty miss who is carried off by her lover as was the maid of old by brave Lochinvar; Harry deVere as her father, Herbert Standing, Ogden Crane, Page Peters, who was recently drowned in California, and Lydia Yeamans Titus.

Elaborate Fashion Play

"Beauty and the Beast," a fashion playlet based on the famous old time fairy tale, and incidentally the most elaborate production of its kind ever produced, has just been finished under the direction of H. E. Hancock exclusively for release through the International Film Service, Inc.

Through his personal acquaintance with George J. Gould, Mr. Hancock was able to avail himself of the use of Georgian Court, the Gould estate in Lakewood, New Jersey, for his exterior scenes. It is well known that Georgian Court is considered to be the finest of all the millionaire estates in the east.

In order that the interior scenes would fit in well with the magnificence of the exteriors a special set of unsurpassed beauty and impressiveness was built for this playlet representing the palace of the sleeping beauty. Most of the scenes outside were taken in the sunken gardens of the Gould estate and the cast was made up of the most beautiful models obtainable. The gowns, which were furnished entirely by the firm of Maison Maurice, Fifth avenue, represented thousands of dollars.

Miss Mineta Timayo, a beautiful model in New York, who is under an exclusive contract with the International Film Service, appears in the star part as the sleeping beauty in the play. The clothes worn by Miss Timayo alone represent a retail value of over $2,000.

The film which is now being assembled by Mr. Hancock will be released in the near future in one of the special split releases that have become one of the main features of the International Film Service, Inc.

DEMAND FOR PATRIOTIC FILM

Boston Photoplay Company First to Secure State Rights on "How Britain Prepared"—Many Other Contracts Pending

The announcement last week that "How Britain Prepared" was to be exploited on the state rights basis has brought to the Patriot Film Corporation a large number of inquiries from all parts of the country. The state rights buyers, and the owners of exchanges in general, who had been seeking an attraction that would enable them to capitalize the widespread demand throughout their territories for a production that would harmonize with the preparedness campaign that is being waged at the present time, have expressed keen interest in the news that such a picture is available.

The state rights announcement of the Patriot Film Corporation was a surprise to the trade in general, as that company had expressed the intention of presenting the film as a road attraction for the larger legitimate theaters. The sudden turn in events, however, that led to the mobilization of the entire National Guard has aroused such great interest in the topic with which the picture deals that it was determined to sell the exhibition rights to the various territories, so that it might have the speediest method of distribution.

The first contract for territory to be actually signed was made by the Boston Photoplay Company for the rights to the New England states. At the present time, however, a number of other offers are under consideration and will probably be closed within the next few days.

"How Britain Prepared" is now running at the Colonial Theater, Chicago.

Chicago Theater News

"The Little Girl Next Door" enters upon its tenth week at the La Salle Opera House with the crowds still as great as ever and all records broken for long runs and capacity attendance. This exposure of Chicago's old protected vice and the illustration of how the lid was clamped on is as popular as it was two months ago.

One of the most interesting and comprehensive of war pictures exhibited in the city so far is that now showing at the Colonial Theater, "How Great Britain Prepared." One sits through the two hours' entertainment with that satisfying confidence that the pictures are sincere and not screened for purely commercial reasons. A special musical program has been arranged by Edward J. Howe.

For the first time since they have joined the World Film staff of stars, Muriel Ostriche and Carlyle Blackwell will appear in the same picture, in "Sally in Our Alley," which with Billie Burke has been the bill at the Studebaker for the last week.

V. L. S. E. Enlarges Canadian Branches

"THE BATTLE CRY OF PEACE" PROMOTES A SANE FOURTH

USING the war dramas to arouse American patriotism is becoming quite a universal practice in these uncertain times; with one day cries of war and the next statements of peace.

Colonel Hubler of the Third Regiment of Ohio in an effort to stimulate recruiting in the Ohio National Guard arranged with Val Rayburg, manager of the Lyctum Theater, to re-book the big Vitagraph feature, "The Battle Cry of Peace." The film was shown to crowded houses on July 2, 3, 4 and 5. The story of "The Battle Cry of Peace," by J. Stuart Blackton, was sold by members of the Third Regiment in conjunction with the showing of the film. The entire proceeds from the sale of the books went to the Third Regiment and great rivalry existed among the various companies as to which one would raise the largest sum for the regiment before leaving for the border.

"The Battle Cry of Peace" also did valorous duty in several other cities in connection with the growing agitation for a safe and sane Fourth, and it was found that no safer and saner Fourth could be spent than in viewing this great call to arms—for peace. The largest crowd viewing this feature was that which filled the Grand Theater, Pittsburgh. Theaters of Philadelphia and Salt Lake City also drew large crowds with the V. L. S. E. feature.

Although only six months old, the Toronto branch of the Big Four has taken such tremendous strides that it has been found necessary to enlarge the facilities of the organization to take care of its increased business in the Dominion. Walter W. Irwin, general manager of the V. L. S. E., went to Canada to study conditions and found that the sub-office at Montreal, which has done business through the Toronto branch, has also met with such success that it will hereafter be run as a regular branch exchange. The Montreal office has been almost doubled in size to take care of the increased business, and the matter of the establishment of several additional branch offices in the Canadian Dominion is now under discussion.

The high favor in which the V. L. S. E. is held in Canada is shown in the unprecedented action of the exhibitors when a committee appointed by an association representing sixty-four theaters called upon Manager Gookin to give their endorsement of the V. L. S. E. open-booking-box-office-value policy. These men stated in behalf of their association that they appreciated the endeavors of the V. L. S. E. and assured Mr. Gookin of their support.

A. W. Plues, salesman in the Dallas branch office of the V. L. S. E., while en route from Del Rio to Eagle Pass, Texas, barely escaped death recently at the hands of Mexican bandits who were raiding the village of Quemado. Mr. Plues and his fellow passengers in the auto stage between Del Rio and Eagle Pass had just pulled into Quemado for lunch when the raiders entered the village. Fortunately the chauffeur was still in his seat, and although several shots were fired at the stage, none of its occupants was hit. A wide detour was made via Poloma which brought the party into Eagle Pass sixteen hours late.

All the moving picture theaters in this territory are closing up shop, or opening only one or two nights a week. Each theater manager and owner is patiently awaiting the time when the American troops drive the marauders from the border so that they can reopen with safety. Practically every town along the Mexican border is now under martial law and newspapers are daily publishing warnings to the public to stay at home nights.

O. V. Randall, who called on the El Paso trade, reports that during his visit there were not one hundred people at any one time in any theater in that city.

The third of the Selig Athletic series, to be released through the V. L. S. E., shows Stanislaus Zbyszko, the great Polish athlete, who is a candidate for the title of world's champion wrestler, in a finish match with Marion Plestina, the Creatian heavyweight champion. The Creatian gives the Pole the fight of his life, but Zbyszko manages to win two out of three falls.

Francisco Verri and Oscar Egg, the six-day bicycle team, ride one mile against time on indoor trainers. Sherman Landers, the Oregon schoolboy wonder, appears at the interscholastic meet at Stagg Field, Chicago; and Charles Morin and August Kickhofer, champion billiard artists, play a game of three-cushion carom billiards.

Although it was booked for Alaska, a feature film of the V. L. S. E. is lying at the bottom of Puget Sound, just off the shores of Seattle. "The Island of Regeneration," "The Blindness of Virtue," "The Rosary" and "The Millionaire Baby" were on their way to Nome, Alaska, and as the steamship Victoria was being loaded at Seattle a large net, used for transferring freight to the boat, broke and one of the films went to the bottom of the sound. It was impossible to tell which one of the four was lost, so Manager Tom North of the Seattle branch wired Vitagraph, Selig and Essanay asking for another print of each film. But in each case the replies were identical: "Send divers after lost film. All duplicate prints working overtime; none to spare."

Sol L. Lesser, the young state rights magnate, who has sole rights to "The Ne'er-Do-Well," the big Selig drama released through V. L. S. E., made a flying trip to New York and Philadelphia last week. The feature has been playing to packed houses in the east, and Mr. Lesser was partincularly pleased with the manner in which William Moore Patch staged the play in the Forrest Theater of Philadelphia.

Fine Arts Charters Train

Chartering a special train to carry his entire company up into the mountains to get a realistic setting for "Hell to Pay Austin" was the experience of Director Paul Powell of the Triangle Fine Arts, who recently returned to the studio after a two weeks' absence. With twenty members of the Fine Arts Company Powell went to Fresno, California, to secure a view of a big saw mill at Huntington Lake. It was found necessary to charter a special train to make this location. This scene will consist of but fifty feet when trimmed for exhibition.

A Salvation Army band is used in one of Universal's latest dramas.

PARAMOUNT AT EXPOSITION

All the Officials and Publicity Men in Attendance and Many Noted Stars Greet Friends at Exposition on Paramount Day.

The Paramount Pictures Corporation was one of the best represented film companies at the Sixth Annual Convention of the Motion Picture Exhibitor's League of America. Adolph Zukor, president of the newly-formed Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, came first and addressed the convention on July 11. Other officials present included Hiram Abrams, president of the Paramount; William L. Sherry, vice-president; James Steele, secretary and treasurer; Jesse L. Lasky, vice-president Famous Players-Lasky Corporation; Samuel Goldfish, chairman board of directors; and Fred C. Garbutt, head of the Oliver Morosco and Pallas Pictures interests. The Paramount publicity men in attendance were Wallace Thompson, editorial director of publicity for Paramount; B. F. Schulberg, John C. Flinn and Carl H. Pierce, publicity managers for Paramount's producing companies. The headquarters of Paramount were established at the Blackstone Hotel and a three-day convention was held in which the advertising men met with the publicity men of twenty-two Paramount exchanges and discussed the launching of a most comprehensive publicity campaign.

Saturday was Paramount day at the exposition and Mary Pickford and Pauline Fredericks were present to meet all their admirers.

Five-reel Paramounts scheduled for release during the week of July 24 include the Morosco production "An International Marriage," in which Mlle. Rita Jolivet will appear, and "Little Lady Eileen," from the Famous Players studios, featuring Marguerite Clark.

Short reel subjects for the week include "The Real Bohemia," in the Burton Holmes Travel Pictures; the Bray Animated Cartoon "Bobby Bumps and the Detective Story"; and the Paramount Pictographs showing "How the Chemist Makes War," "Climbing the Rockies on a Waterfall," "Constructive Imagination" in the "Better Babies" series, "What a Tennis Ball Will Do," and "How Germs Destroy Each Other."

A number of theaters in different parts of the country have been trying the scheme of re-booking Paramount pictures once a week or sometimes twice a week, and have found that they brought crowded houses even on Monday—which is generally the poorest day.

The psychology of good salesmanship which turns prospects into satisfied customers has been made the subject of an interesting series of scenarios which are being edited by "System," the magazine of business, for Paramount Pictographs. The facts that there are more ways than one to carry samples and even a book agent may disguise himself so that an attack on the housewife will be successful, are shown on the screen in these Pictographs.

Raymond B. West, fresh from his prolonged vacation to the Hawaiian Islands, is preparing, this week, to begin work on a new Triangle-Kay Bee play in which Thomas H. Ince will present Charles Ray as star. The story is by J. C. Hawks and is said to offer Ray, for the first time in many months, a part that is not of the "weakling" variety. Ray is now engaged in appearing as leading man with Bessie Barriscale in the comedy-drama being directed by Charles Miller.

Many Vitagraph Stars at Exposition

EDITH STOREY AND ANTONIO MORENO IN SIX-REELER

THE Vitagraph Company of America was ably represented at the convention by Special Representative Sam Spedon, who addressed the exhibitors on July 11.

No picture convention would be complete without Sam and his big V smile. During the week of the exposition the Vitagraph booth was one of the centers of attraction with its special exhibition of moving pictures and the personal appearance of the Vitagraph stars. A specially conducted tour of its Studios in Brooklyn, New York, gave the visitors a comprehensive view of the Vitagraph plant and the way they do things there.

Sunday, July 16, was Vitagraph Day and Anita Stewart, Edith Storey, Antonio Moreno, Lillian Walker, Harry T. Morey and Rose Tapley received all visitors at the booth.

Anita Stewart graces "The Daring of Diana," Vitagraph's brand new Blue Ribbon.

Ex-president William Howard Taft stopped long enough to discuss moving pictures with Ralph Ince after his lecture on preparedness at Bay Shore. Mr. Taft was very much interested in Mr. Ince's plans for the future and expressed himself as grateful for the opportunity of again meeting one of the most prominent producers in the motion picture industry. Ex-Congressman William Calder of Brooklyn in introducing Mr. Taft as the lecturer of the evening gave credit to "The Battle Cry of Peace," Vitagraph's sermon for preparedness, as one of the big factors in crystallizing preparedness throughout the country.

With Mr. Ince during the impromptu reception tendered Ex-president Taft were Lucille Lee Stewart, William Courtenay, Huntly Gordon, Shirley Moore and Louis J. Beck.

The Vitagraph releases for the week of July 17 through the V. L. S. E. are headed by "The Tarantula," a six-part Vitagraph Blue Ribbon feature. The story is from the pen of George D. Baker, who also directed the action. Edith Storey and Antonio Moreno have the leads supported by Eulalia Jensen, L. Rogers Lytton, Charles Kent, Harry Hollingsworth, Emmanuel A. Turner, Raymond Walburn, Harold Foshay, Gordon Gray and Templar Saxe.

The Kernel Nutt one-part comedy "Kernel Nutt and Prince Tango," presents Frank Daniels as a ferocious cannibal. Daniels is supported in his funmaking by Nellie Anderson, Nathaniel Griswold and Olive Trevor. Charles Dickson directed the picture.

On July 24 will be released Anita Stewart's latest starring vehicle "The Daring of Diana," a Blue Ribbon feature in five parts from the pen of Charles L. Gaskill. Other Vitagraphers in the cast are Anders Randolf, Francis Morgan, Julia Swayne Gordon, Charles Wellesley, Joseph Donohue and Donald Mac Bride. S. Rankin Drew directed the production.

FOX RELEASES "THE BEAST"

Edward Cecil Makes First Appearance Under Fox Flag—Shannon Screen Club Officer—Hint of Story of "The Beast"

Edward Cecil plays the English baronet in "The Beast," the Fox photoplay released for July 24. It is his first picture under the Fox banner.

After playing in Skagway, Alaska, one summer, he left for the interior alone. He walked over White Pass to Lake Bennetty, the head waters of the Yukon, and went down the river for 500 miles, to Dawson. Here he stayed until the ice broke up at the end of the winter, then journeyed with two companions in a home-made rowboat from Dawson to St. Michaels—a 2,300 mile trip, which required travelling for 31 days. Food gave out, and the party lived for three days and nights on reindeer moss.

Among the child actors in William Fox pictures is Elizabeth Kennedy, who played Eliza with Maude Adams in "Peter Pan," last winter. Little Miss Kennedy has appeared in "Merely Mary Ann" and "A Modern Thelma," and will also be seen in the first June Caprice picture, released this week, "Caprice of the Mountains."

Herbert Bathey, scene man in the Los Angeles studios of William Fox, has answered the call of his country. He is Captain of Company F of the California Militia, and was one of the first called out when President Wilson ordered the mobilization of the militia.

Story of "The Beast"

That good old fairy tale, "Beauty and the Beast," was never half so fascinating, and certainly never had a fraction of the intense moments that characterize the powerful photodrama which Director Richard Stanton has filmed in "The Beast." The picture has a dozen points which make it one of William Fox's most notable releases. It is announced for July 24. This is Mr. Stanton's first photo-play for the Fox organization.

Anna Luther, of the glorious Titian tresses, and George Walsh, one of filmdom's handsomest and most likable stars, have the leading roles. Edward Cecil makes his bow with the Fox forces as an English Baronet and registers the Briton admirably.

Two of the best and most picturesque scenes in "The Beast" afford a remarkable contrast. The one is the Western bar-room and dance-hall in which Mildred Manning (Anna Luther), the Eastern heiress, finds herself entrapped and watches the drunken brawl of the herdsmen. The other is the magnificent masquerade setting, as expensive as any ever used in motion pictures. It is here that Mildred meets the Beast, now wealthy and reformed. The wall is artistically arranged with beautifully frescoed panels, the furnishings are rich, and a large fountain plays in the center.

The story opens with David Manning (Herschel Mayall), millionaire mine-owner, on a business trip through the West. With him are his daughter Mildred, and as guest, Sir Charles Beverly (Edward Cecil) who wants the Manning fortune. He is always at Mildred's side, but she understands and resents the reason for his affection.

The special in which the party is riding, is delayed for a few hours, and the heiress starts on a sightseeing journey around the nearby town of Gopherville. From what she thinks is a safe distance, she looks in at the festivities in "The Double Stamp" dance hall. A Mexican robs her and locks the door of the room, then escapes. We leave the rest to be told on the screen.

Screen Club Organized

The Fort Lee Screen Club has been granted a certificate of incorporation by the State of New Jersey. The club is composed of all persons concerned in the making of moving pictures within a radius of three miles of Ft. Lee. Alex K. Shannon, of the William Fox Company, is president of the organization.

Charles Giblyn, the Ince-Triangle director, is about to undertake his first visit to New York in eight years.

The very latest view of Theda Bara is seen on the left. Then follows George Walsh, one of Fox's big dramatic guns, then William Fox himself, president of the Fox Film Corporation and owner and financier of "A Daughter of the Gods," the big spectacle by Herbert Brenon, filmed by the latter in Jamaica. The other pictures glimpse William Farnum, Virginia Pearson and June Caprice, a-fishing.

at home while appearing before the camera for the second time, and the production Sidney Olcott gave it is perhaps as great an aid in making the play agreeable as a good music score would do for it were it to be produced on the stage.

Donald Brian, who dances a bit, looks quite handsome and is amusing when the opportunity comes, is admirably supported by a cast which includes Olive Tell, Cyril Chadwick, Margaret Greene, Harold Vosburg and Rita Bori. The actors are all good in their parts. Both the director and the players did everything to make "The Smugglers" as good a picture as the story would permit. The efforts proved sufficient to bring the picture within the pleasant and entertaining class.

Brian is cast as a very rich American who takes a trip to Paris. In addition to the trip he takes his wife and sister-in-law. The latter marries an Englishman who is a near nobleman. The first stop in Paris is at a jewelry shop, where Mrs. Watts sees a pearl necklace and nothing short of being its possessor will satisfy her. John Battleby Watts purchases two pearl necklaces. The genuine one and a cheap imitation.

He presents one to a chorus girl. The mistake is his. He gives the girl the real pearls and, along with a very glowing story, his wife accepts the imitation ones. On their return John is loath to pay duty on glass and his schemes to land the supposed jewels in America duty-free are successful only in so far as they may interest the spectator.

"The Iron Claw"

Pathe Serial Closes With Flourish of Melodrama and Happiness. Reviewed by Thomas C. Kennedy

"THE IRON CLAW" is completed with the release of "The Triumph of the Laughing Mask" and this the last episode of the popular serial is notable both for the amount of action contained in its two reels and the general satisfaction the ending will afford its many followers.

The mystery of the Laughing Mask is solved at last and as one of the many who have pondered the question "who is the Laughing Mask?" we must say that the unmasking of the Righter of Wrongs is a most welcome incident. We agreed with one of the detectives who in the end says "no wonder we could not find the Laughing Mask, he's a whole regiment." And so he is in the last chapter.

But the Mask himself assures the detectives that he only became a regiment "toward the end, because he was so crowded by events." In the "Triumph of the Laughing Mask" Legar after escaping from the detectives visits the house of his accomplice, a scientist. The Claw opens door after door and he is confronted by Laughing Masks at every turn. This astounding affair is explained when the detectives arrest about eight men all in the guise of the Wrong Righter. The real Mask is cleared of the crimes he was accused of and he claims Margery as his reward. Legar dies and his death is that which villains usually come to. Margery is very happy, naturally, for the Mask, her champion is the jovial Davy, her father's former secretary.

The episode presents both amusing comedy and vivid melodrama. The production is as usual excellent and Creighton Hale, Pearl White and Sheldon Lewis give performances which compare with their work all through the other nineteen episodes.

"The Selfish Woman"

Lasky-Paramount Presents Spectacular Melodrama. Reviewed by Thomas C. Kennedy

WALLACE REID and Cleo Ridgley score once more as co-stars in the latest production from the Lasky studio. Mr. Reid as an engineer whose mercenary wife develops a strong affection for him after a hasty marriage acts with spirit and sincerity. The story permits him to knock down an unscrupulous road foreman, who takes the young wife's designs too literally, and to be altogether a popular type of hero. Mr. Reid does not overdo the part and he is interesting.

Alice, who is Morley's wife, is admirably rendered by Miss Ridgley. She gives an intelligent and wholly pleasing performance. The story is by Hector Turnbull. It is a melodrama with little that is striking about it. However, it must be said for the story that it contains the elements of popular appeal, and these elements have been richly enhanced by the director, E. Mason Hopper, and the cast.

Tom Morley contracts to have the construction job entrusted to him completed within three weeks. This is very important, for the company erecting the new railroad line stands to lose the franchise, thanks to the schemes of some bankers whose numbers include Tom's wealthy father, if the road is not completed at the expiration of this time.

The elder Morley is told of his son's promise and sends him a wire advising him to return home immediately. Tom's return also interests Alice Hale and her mother, because Tom has money and social position and that is what both are looking for in a husband. The father offers his son a partnership in his business if he will desert the other company. While the matter is in suspension Tom of a sudden makes up his mind to marry Alice, and he does.

Alice then joins the father in urging Tom to quit the construction job, but he refuses. The wife then promises to hinder him in every way, for which service she is to receive a million dollars from the father. The engineer soon learns the truth.

He immediately lives apart from his wife at the camp. Then Alice has time to reflect. She is really in love with Tom and she with characteristic determination and cleverness saves the day for him, but not until the workers have burned the buildings in the camp.

The fire scenes are good. These scenes are supposed to occur at night and they have all the effect of so doing. In every sense the production is all that one expects, which is a good deal since it comes from the Lasky studio. The stars are well supported.

"Jaffery"

William J. Locke's Novel Picturized by Frohman. Reviewed by Thomas C. Kennedy.

THE somewhat difficult feat of doing justice to the work of William J. Locke in picturizing one of his novels has been accomplished by George Irving, who directed the production of "Jaffery" for the Frohman Amusement Corporation. "Jaffery" is a delightful enough novel to have become one of the most popular products from Mr. Locke's gifted pen and to succeed in imbuing a screen play with its charm is to make a motion picture of broad appeal and distinct merit.

To begin with the producers approached the rather ambitious attempt to picturize "Jaffery" judiciously, intelligently. C. Aubrey Smith was engaged for the title role, the work of scenarioizing the book was placed in the very competent hands of Anthony Kelly and Mr. Irving apparently was given a free reign to do everything he deemed necessary. The result of this is that the Frohman Amusement Corporation now offers a vastly attractive picture.

C. Aubrey Smith is ideal for the role of Jaffery. He is the type, but that is not everything by a great deal. Mr. Smith is an excellent actor. His characterization in this offering is one of the vital factors in success of the screen "Jaffery," for this story, much the same as all of Wm. J. Locke's, depends upon the main character for its very life. The plot is secondary and what dramatic situations are contained in the story are not notable in the least as strictly dramatic units. "Jaffery" is narrative, and in the place of strong situations there is the inherent human element. The character as played by Mr. Smith carries real sympathy and the picture maintains interest through this and not the plot, for as a matter of fact the plot would be unpleasantly obvious were it not built around such a fascinating character.

Jaffery is a war correspondent when we first see him. He returns from the Balkans with an Albanian girl, whose husband, Jaffery's companion, died in Scutari. He is surprised to learn that Adrian Boldero is now famous. Boldero has published a novel which caused all London to speak its author's name in words of praise.

He is engaged to marry a young woman named Doria. When Jaffery meets Doria he for the first time realizes that he is capable of love. After the untimely death of Boldero, Jaffery promises Doria that he will prepare Boldero's latest manuscript for publication. He learns that the first work was stolen but rather than have Doria suffer Jaffery writes a novel himself and turns it over to the publisher as the work of Boldero. He is madly in love with Doria but she has no feeling for him, until some time later when she discovers the truth about Boldero, but then it is too late, for Jaffery is in love with Liosha, who is in every respect the better choice for him.

C. Audrey Smith in "Jaffery."

Eleanor Woodruff plays Doria very effectively and Florence Deshon is the Albanian girl, Liosha, in her every gesture. Eric Blind, Paul Doucet and Ben Hendricks are also included in the cast, which is a remarkably capable one. The settings leave nothing to be desired and the photography is good. The scene in the hold of the ship during the storm which shifts the ballast is very realistic.

The subtitles are not up to the standard of the other departments of this offering. Numbers of them could be entirely eliminated and many of the necessary ones show room for improvement in their wording.

"Who's Guilty?"

Arrow Film Corporation's Series Being Released by Pathe. Reviewed by Thomas C. Kennedy

A ROMANCE ending tragically and a drama treating upon the intricacies of the divorce laws are two interesting though not dramatically remarkable additions to the "Who's Guilty?" series.

Tom Moore (left) and Anna Nilsson in chapter ten of "Who's Guilty?"

"A Trial of Souls" and "Branding the Innocent" are the tenth and eleventh releases in this Pathe offering which the Arrow Film Corporation is producing with such marked success.

The production of the stories all along has been of an especially fine character. Directors Howell Hansell and Lawrence McGill in producing all releases so far offered secured the utmost effect from the material presented by the scenarios and thanks to the intelligent liberality of the Arrow Film Corporation, used settings appropriate to the action and pleasing to the spectator's sense of what ought to be.

"A Trial of Souls" is the story of a young woman who elopes with the youthful son of a newspaper editor. The editor has incurred the enmity of the girl's father. The latter insists upon prosecuting the young husband for abduction, as he claims his daughter is not yet eighteen years of age. At the trial Mason learns that his wife deceived him. Rose is not his daughter, she is a foundling whom his wife adopted during his long absence from home. The girl upon learning this wanders off to the water front and takes her own life. In this case the circumstances do not seem pressing enough to embitter a healthy mind to the extent of prompting the victim to commit suicide.

"Branding the Innocent" is an interesting exposition of the weak points in the present divorce laws. A woman obtains a divorce in a neighbor state to the one in which she was married. She then marries again in her home state and her first husband, whose former actions warranted her securing a divorce, returns to charge her with bigamy. The play has the advantage of not being technical in making its point. The play, however, is not notable for the moral it draws, but it is an interesting drama.

Anna Nilsson and Tom Moore play the main roles in these two offerings with their usual effectiveness. The beginning of "A Trial of Souls" is particularly good for the atmosphere the directors instilled into it. The romance of the girl at the boarding school and her sweetheart, who attends a military academy, is pretty and appealing until the trial scenes are reached, when the story loses some of its charm in gaining dramatic properties.

"The Half Breed"

A Five-Part Triangle-Fine Arts Offering Released July 30. Reviewed by George W. Graves

DOUGLAS FAIRBANKS' latest success is "The Half Breed," written by Bret Harte. And an unalloyed success it is, viewed from all angles. The story has that vim, originality and power which exalts it as high above the numerous tedious five-reelers of the day as the sun is above the clouds. Money and time, as well as a copious amount of experienced knowledge, was expended on this film. Every scene is eloquent of this. Although we do not wish to convey the idea that the scenery is employed as a mere embellishment to a soulless story, it is truly beautiful, many captivating sets being laid in the big tree section of California. A remarkable feat in production is also embraced in this picture in the staging of a forest fire that is a real conflagration and carries with it all the awe and horror of such a catastrophe.

The coquette trifles with Lo's love.

"The Half Breed" is an exceptionally good vehicle for Douglas Fairbanks' style—the boyish manliness and sparkling good humor that has carried him on a sea of popularity from his very first picture. Mr. Fairbanks' warmth and humanness place him in the foremost ranks of actors on the screen or off of it. The presence of Jewel Carmen, however, should not be lightly overlooked. She copes very ably and convincingly with the part of a heartless coquette, and Alma Reuben as the woman who is regenerated by her first noble love, is also excellent. Others in the cast are Sam DeGrasse, Tom Wilson and Frank Brownlee.

The story deals in an intense manner with the love affairs of Lo, a half-breed, who, despite his ostracism from society, proves that Indian blood of itself makes a man no less worthy. He falls desperately in love with Nellie, the village coquette, only to be bitterly disillusioned afterwards. In his woodland home, a hollowed-out tree, Lo shelters Teresa, a refugee from justice who has wounded her former unfaithful lover as well as Sheriff Dunn.

The latter, intent on winning Nellie for himself, is convinced that she is holding clandestine meetings with the half-breed woodsman in his tree-trunk home. He sets out to kill Lo, but finds in the tree neither Lo nor Nellie, whom he has expected, but Teresa. As the latter has lifted a painful apprehension from his mind, he allows her to go free. Teresa is able to prove to Dunn that Lo is his own son. After a wild forest fire has broken out and Lo rescues both his father and the girl he has protected, the story ends with the happiness of Teresa and the half-breed who has completely regenerated her coarse nature.

"The Private Banker"

Selig Three-Reel Drama Released July 17. Reviewed by Genevieve Harris

THIS drama, which Thomas Santschi directed from a story by T. Edward Hungerford, deals with Italian immigrants and their troubles, and while the story follows conventional lines, the situation it describes, in which the unsuspecting workmen are robbed by clever members of their own race, is in many instances true. It is the story, though, that is emphasized, and advantage is taken of the opportunity of using settings out of the ordinary.

Wheeler Oakman, Leo Pierson and Edith Johnson have the leading roles. Oakman is the hero, a young Italian workman. Edith Johnson is Lucia, his sweetheart. Pierson is Tony, the villain, an Italian cook. Tony and Amato (Thomas Bates) start a private bank and succeed in inducing their countrymen to deposit their savings. Then Amato plots to rob his own bank and leave the country. Tony suspects the plot, follows Amato, kills him and takes the money. Pietro, who has been suspicious of the bankers, follows Tony and takes the money from him. Tony then accuses Pietro of the murder and robbery, and the angry workingmen turn against him.

The "thrill" of the play comes in the scene when the irate Italians, led by Tony, place the innocent Pietro in the scoop of a large steam shovel, from which he is rescued by the heroine. For Lucia, who is something of a detective, learns that Tony is the guilty one. She rushes to the scene of the riot and stops the shovel in time to save Pietro's life. Then she tells them who the real culprit is, while Pietro becomes a hero when he is able to restore the stolen cash to its rightful owners.

"The Grip of Evil"

First Three Chapters of New Pathe Serial. Reviewed by Thomas C. Kennedy

THE latest serial offered by Pathe will take its audiences through the several and various walks and stations of life ere its fourteen chapters of two reels each have been completed, judging by the impressions gleaned from the first three chapters in this continued photoplay from the studios of the Balboa Amusement Corporation. "The Grip of Evil" has as its basic theme the question of whether or not the dominating influences of modern society are evil in their nature.

This question is to be dealt with in the fourteen chapters of a continued photoplay which is a combination, somewhat, of both the serial and the series, as we have come to know them.

"The Grip of Evil" is to be a series of adventures in which a very wealthy young man, whose early life was spent among the laboring classes, grasps his every opportunity to study conditions and facts concerning men and women of the various classes which will give him light on the question he wrestles with—"is humanity in the grip of evil?" The first three chapters would lead one to suppose that each succeeding episode is connected with its predecessor only in so far as John Burton is the leading figure in a drama of social problems.

There is to be a love interest in each chapter and also there will be thrills. Jackie Saunders and Roland Bottomley are the featured players. Miss Saunders will appear in a different role in each chapter while Mr. Bottomley, whose acting in the first three releases is all of very good, will in each case be seen as John Burton.

In the first chapter we learn that Burton is the son of an English nobleman. Burton is brought up in comparative poverty. At the end of the chapter he receives his rich estate and also the title of Marquis of Castleton, though he decides to remain in America. The next episode tells of Burton's experience with a character of the underworld. Much as in the first drama in which he met people in the labor and capitalist classes Burton finds that the people he puts confidence in are governed largely by influences that might be termed evil.

The third chapter is entitled "The Upper Ten." This episode tells of a dishonest railroad magnate and his daughter. The daughter is badly injured at one of the crossings he refused to make safe. The accident is a good piece of production. It is strenuous and by the same token it will probably be termed "thrilling."

The production is satisfactory and the photography is very good. "The Grip of Evil" asks a question. This seems to be very popular with audiences, who in all instances so far have been satisfied to answer the question themselves. The story is by Louis Tracy.

"Purity"

American Six-Reel Allegorical Drama Featuring Audrey Munson. Reviewed by Genevieve

ONE of the most beautiful productions of the year is this unusual offering from the American studios. The company which has shown many examples of its skill in photography in previous releases, in this production gave its whole attention to the artistic side of picture making with results of which it may be proud. One lovely scene succeeds another throughout the six reels.

The drama is fanciful. It is poetry translated into motion pictures. And its appeal is to those who love poetry, painting, sculpture and dancing, to artists, in short, and it will not disappoint these severe critics. Audrey Munson, the "Exposition model," who posed for much of the statuary at the Exposition, is featured.

An allegorical story forms the theme of the picture. The opening scenes are a picturization of a poet's story of Virtue, who ruled the world before Pandora opened the box and allowed Virtue and her attendants, before the advent of Evil.

Evil to escape. This gives opportunity fr many beautiful dancing and posing scenes, in outdoor settings. Then the real story tells of the poet's love for a girl, Purity Worth, played by Audrey Munson. It tells of her effort to earn money to publish the poet's book by posing for artists. In this connection, there are several scenes in which Miss Munson in her poses reproduces famous paintings, as the artist sees her as the ideal model for his work. These reproductions are very cleverly done.

Later Purity poses at a garden fete, in imitation of various noted statues, among them those many for which Miss Munson was the original, a number selected from the Exposition work. The poet, when he learns of this, is greatly shocked and misjudges the girl. But later he learns that she is really "purity" personified.

Audrey Munson is ideal in the leading role, for she seems at all times the frank, clean-minded girl. Her attitude, as well as her grace and beauty, takes from the picture anything that might be offensive.

While the producers have met their problems in an excellent fashion, and have kept the picture of high artistic rank throughout, the final problem in presenting a production lies with the exhibitor. It must be remembered that there are many people who will object to the nude posing. The exhibitor will need to take his audience into consideration before booking the play. It will not be wise for him to offend the majority of his patrons, if the majority will object. This is his problem. On the other hand, if he caters to people of a class of intelligence and education, he will give them an artistic treat. For the picture is beautiful and there is nothing in the least offensive in it, unless people object to the presentation of nude pictures and paintings.

Rea Berger directed the production, assisted by Clifton Howard, who wrote the story, and Edward Langley. The dances were directed by Geneva Driscoll. The supporting cast of players includes Nigel De Brullier, Alfred Hollingsworth, William A. Carroll, and Eugenie Forde. The release date of the offering is July 17.

"Caprice of the Mountains"

William Fox Play Featuring June Caprice. Reviewed by Genevieve Harris

NEARLY everyone interested in the film industry knows that this picture is something of an experiment. Its leading lady is the subject of a test, a theory held by William Fox. The details have been published widely, and the name of June Caprice is already well known. The experiment as announced is to prove this theory: that any young girl without stage or picture experience, who is possessed of beauty of the childlike, innocent type and with the charm of simplicity, may, if given the right sort of advertising and fitting plays, rival at once those established film stars who head the list of favorites. This is a proposition which will be very interesting to every "fan," and this alone, if the exhibitor takes care to explain it, should bring the whole neighborhood into his theater when the "June Caprice" picture is shown.

Now for the little lady herself. She is beautiful; she wears her hair in tangled curls which fly about her face; she laughs and pouts and runs away. She is a perfect type of the screen ingenue, which film fans have proved that they like. While she does not reveal a great talent for acting in her first picture, still she meets the requirements of her role well and is so cleverly directed that there is little doubt about the appeal she will make.

The play, which was written by Clarence J. Harris, is well chosen. June Caprice has the role of a mountain maid, a most innocent country child, abused at home and in danger of being forced into a marriage with a farmer whom she does not like. Into this situation is brought the handsome city chap who is turned from a wild career by the innocent little beauty. Later he marries her and takes her to the city. There she loses her good influence over him, and he returns to his old manner of life. At last, Caprice runs away to her old home, where her baby is born. Her husband, repentant, follows her and they are reconciled.

It is a sugary, sentimental story, which is evidently what it is meant to be. But it is beautifully presented. The photography, especially of the lovely outdoor scenes, is excellent, and a fairy story interpolated gives opportunity for charming pictures. The story has much in it to interest children. In this connection it might be noted that the National Board of Review in its list of pictures suitable for children puts this into a class about which there is a difference of opinion. The reason for the doubt probably is due to two or three subtitles which are over-frank and to a situation which cannot be understood by children unless they have a knowledge of evil, the situation in which the father of Caprice forces the city man, at the point of a gun, to marry Caprice.

These few objectionable features might so easily have been avoided that one can only regret that the producers did not give as much thought to the interests of the children spectators as they have to the technical side of the offering.

The supporting cast of players includes Harry Hilliard, very good as the leading man, Joel Day, Lisle Leigh, Richard Hale, Albert Gran, Tom Burrough, Robert Walker, Sara Alexander and Harriet Thompson. John G. Adolfi is the director.

"Fathers of Men"

A Six-Part Vitagraph Blue Ribbon Feature. Released July 10. Reviewed by George W. Graves

ROBERT EDESON'S virile acting is the life of this picture. It adds vitality and strength to every scene. And he has plenty of opportunity to exercise his powers, for this is a story of the North, dealing with the more primitive methods in which the rough and ready denizens of the snowy wastes wreak vengeance on their enemies.

The play is a good one, but it need hardly occupy six reels. The director found some beautiful locations amid the snow and ice to set his scenes and these alone ought to help box office receipts during the dog-days. There are good situations which are developed in a satisfactory manner, but the picture's fault is the fact that the main plot does not go via direct route to its culmination, too many by-paths being taken. In a very large cast we find Bobby Connelly, Naomi Childers, Harry S. Northrup, Stanley Dunn, Kalman Matus, William Humphrey, Logan Paul, Robert Gaillard, Carolyn Birch and Betty Howe. James Oliver Curwood is the author; William Humphrey directed the picture.

The first part of the story deals at length with the manner in which the happy home of John Howland, a trapper, is broken up by Blake, an unscrupulous trader who inveigles Howland's wife, Jeanne, into eloping with him. After some time the latter tires of Jeanne and leaves her to return to her lawful husband. His own wife dead, and repentant of the way he has treated Jeanne, Blake returns to her cabin only to find that she has departed.

Years later Howland meets his old enemy and is instrumental in getting him convicted of a murder of which Blake is entirely innocent. In trying to escape the guards, Blake is fatally shot. Two of Blake's three sons, determined to do away with Howland, visit his house, but fate intervenes, and Howland is accidentally killed. Then the enmity still lives on between Robert Howland and Blake's sons. After much prolonged strife and many wild adventures, Howland's mother at last turns up and through her testimony things are straightened out, while friendship springs up between the hostile young men.

"Ambition"

Five-Reel Fox Drama Featuring Bertha Kalich. Reviewed by Genevieve Harris.

BERTHA KALICH in this picture has the role of the wife of a politician whose ambition for advancement has killed any sense of honor he may have had. Kenneth Hunter, as the husband, Robert Powers, is very good and makes the man's actions as convincing as possible. But even with this skilled playing, Powers seems too utterly bad to be true, and we are not able to sympathize with his wife, Marion, in her efforts for his advancement.

However, the situation which is built up becomes a very interesting one and gives Mme. Kalich a chance for a restrained yet sympathetic portrayal of a woman whose world crumbles about her and yet who is able to find and keep the right path. Marion was sincere and upright, although she was very blind.

Another good character sketch is that of John Moore, a political boss, played by William H. Tooker. Moore holds the power of appointing the district attorney, an office Power wishes. Urged by Grant, another politician, Power brings Moore under the influence of Marion, Powers' wife. Moore is invited to Powers' home, and through a carefully planned hunting accident, is injured and made practically a prisoner there. As planned, Moore falls in love with Marion, but before Powers obtains the appointment, Marion sees his scheme and realizes his worthlessness. Also, she has grown to love Moore, who proves himself worthy of her regard by refusing to let her sacrifice herself by going away with him, since this would mean giving up her little daughter. In the end, Marion leaves her husband and with the little girl, sets out to win her way independently.

The direction, settings and photography of the play are good. The interest is held throughout. The pranks of Little Kittens Reichert as Betty Powers adds greatly to the enjoyment of the play, and again proves her skill at acting. She is a remarkable little girl. Others in the cast are W. W. Black, Gilbert Rooney, Barnett Greenwood and May Price. The play was directed by James Vincent from a story by Mary Murillo.

"Uncle Sam's Babies"

Seven-Reel Production Showing Child Welfare Work. Reviewed by Genevieve Harris.

IN order to present forcibly to the public just what the national government can do and has done for the babies and children of the United States, the film production, "Uncle Sam's Babies," has been produced and presented. This ambitious production was shown at the Strand theater, in Chicago, under the auspices of the Woman's City Club during Baby Week, and won commendation from leading physicians, educators and social workers who viewed it. Without doubt it aroused serious thought and gave much information to casual visitors. And since the value of the film is great in a child welfare campaign, arrangements are now being made to release the picture throughout the country.

The offering, which is in seven reels, was made under the supervision of George L. Cox, who wrote the story which runs through the pictures. William Buckley has the leading role, and the account of his pranks begins the story. His uncle, a philanthropist, sends him on a tour of the country to study the various centers of welfare work, in order to impress the boy with the more serious side of life. This forms the motive for the showing of the pictures which follow, and which take the spectator from New York to San Francisco and back again.

Among the places visited are Ellis Island, Barren Island, "Little Mothers' Clubs" in the city schools, various orphans' homes and protectorates in New York City; schools in Providence, R. I., Boston and Chicago; the Hull House and other Chicago settlement houses, open air schools, and sanataria; schools and clubs in Salt Lake City, Los Angeles and San Francisco. The story in the film closes with a romance between the young explorer and a nurse in one of the social centers.

In addition to the pictures, many facts and interesting lessons are given in the subtitles, and these also contain extracts from reports and appeals for an interest in this most important of Uncle Sam's "crops," the children.

"The Secret of the Submarine"

Chapter Nine of the American Serial. Released July 17. Reviewed by Genevieve Harris

AN aeroplane figures prominently in this episode of the "Flying A" serial. Chapter nine begins when the three pairs of contestants for the secret dig themselves out of the wreckage caused by the earthquake which ended chapter eight. Cleo

Morton kidnaps Cleo.

Burke (Juanita Hansen) is still holding the book which she obtained from the doctor. As soon as she recovers consciousness, she examines the volume but the only thing unusual about it is that it contains a prescription which the doctor had placed there. Olga and Morton, the Russian adventuress and her aid, see Cleo and Hope (Thomas Chatterton) examining this, believe that it is the long sought secret and plot to get it.

After extricating themselves from the debris of the ruined building Cleo and Hope set out for San Francisco. At an aviation meet the conspirators are brought together. Morton meets the aviator who taught him to fly, and this gives him an idea. Shortly afterward he kidnaps Cleo, taking her in the machine to a hunting cabin high in the mountains. Except by aeroplane, the only way of reaching the cabin is by means of a basket over a cable across a chasm. Morton tries to make Cleo reveal the knowledge he believes she possesses and when she will not, he leaves her in the cabin, telling her he will return. While he is gone Cleo finds, on the fly leaf of one of the mountaineer's books, a notation regarding the secret code.

Cleo is able to get a note to the people in the valley below, but before the message reaches Hope, Mahlin and Satsuma, the Japanese agents, read it. They follow Hope on his trip toward the cabin. As he is crossing the chasm, they cut the cable rope, letting the basket fall. The installment ends with the hero apparently killed.

The settings and photography of the episode are, as usual, good. The suspense is well managed, and followers of the serial will not be disappointed with the "thrills," even though they may be troubled to reconcile the views of the aeroplane high in the sky with the cut-in "close-ups" of the machine against a background of mountains.

"Tom and Jerry Quarantined"

Second in Series of Ten Comedies by the Emerald Film Company. Reviewed by TOM AND JERRY, introduced to screen audiences in the first comedy as two rather irresponsible pals, whose chief trouble in life is that their wives usually break in on their fun, continue their pranks.

In this picture, they board a car, bound for their office, and on the way start a flirtation with two members of a young women's seminary. There are several scenes on the street car which contains much unhackneyed humor. Tom and Jerry follow the girls when they leave the car, and finding that two servant girls are wanted at the seminary, they go to a costumer's establishment, dress for the roles and are hired.

However, a prying maid discovers the deception and notifies the principal of the school. She recognizes the men, and for revenge telephones Mrs. Tom and Mrs. Jerry, inviting them to the school. They arrive, to the terror of their husbands. After a number of amusing incidents, mostly chases and narrow escapes, the health officer appears and notifies the school that all are under quarantine for smallpox.

But after a period of terror, the students, visitors and servants, real and counterfeit, are notified that a mistake has been made and that they are free to leave. Tom and Jerry have had enough of seminary life.

Tom Keesy and Charles Huntington are Tom and Jerry, as in the first installment, and Dolores Cassinelli and Rhea Catto Laughlin are the wives. Frederick J. Ireland is the director.

"Gloria's Romance"

Chapters Nine and Ten of the Kleine Serial. Reviewed by Genevieve Harris

THE shadow of tragedy is over these two installments of the Billie Burke serial. Gloria has changed from a carefree child to a woman touched by sorrow, and so Miss Burke's role has changed from an ingenue to a strongly emotional one. She cannot play pranks to hold the attention of her audience. She must show real feeling. And she is still as fascinating in her new role. One reason is that she does not express her grief in a conventional fashion. She makes Gloria Stafford as individual in this as in her schoolgirl experiences. There is no close-up picture of tears, no racking sobs, nothing in the manner of the conventional grief-stricken heroine. "For this relief, much thanks."

But, in her own way, Miss Burke presents a distracted, nervously overwrought girl, torn between grief, suspicion and curiosity. Especially in chapter ten, she wins our entire sympathy.

The story is told without undue haste, but in an interesting fashion. One of the pleasing features is the excellence of the players in the supporting roles. In chapter ten, Frank Belcher as Mulry, Freneau's partner, makes a decided impression, while William Roselle, as David, Gloria's brother, is very satisfactory whenever he enters the picture. William T. Carleton continues his excellent work as Pierpont Stafford, father of the heroine. David Powell as the interesting Freneau has gone from the story, except when he re-enters in a few ghostly fade-in scenes.

"The Shadow of Scandal," chapter nine, shows the manner in which Dr. Royce and Gloria's father convince Gloria that she must not report to the police the fact that she witnessed the murder of Freneau. They picture for her the unpleasant notoriety, her name in the newspaper headlines, personal letters read, et cetera, until she changes her plans. She even gives up her engagement ring and lays aside her mourning.

But her love for Freneau was very sincere, and his memory seems to demand that she bring the evil-doer to justice. So, in chapter ten, "Tangled Threads," Gloria sets out secretly to solve the mystery. Her first attempt is to communicate with the partner, Mulry. Dr. Royce, who knows more of the truth than anyone else, does not wish Gloria to be disillusioned, and he warns Mulry against disclosing Freneau's duplicity. But the fact that the mysterious letters to Gloria had come from the cities through which Mulry had traveled becomes known to the girl and arouses her suspicion. Also she becomes more and more suspicious of her sister-in-law, Lois, who shows a surprising interest in the cae. So Gloria is torn between jealousy and distrust and regret at her loss of faith. Determined at last to know the truth, she accepts her brother's invitation, at first declined because of her mourning, to visit him and Lois in the country. She wishes to learn what connection Lois may have had with the case.

Facts About Screens

Many different surfaces and fabrics have been used as screens. Of these, which should be opaque, some transmit and waste quite as much light as they reflect. Aluminum painted or other metal surfaced screens show the pictures by light which is largely specularly reflected. These appear brilliant to the observer in a favorable position, but viewed from the side there is a great unevenness.

Photometric measurements may, according to the Scientific American show as great variation as 5 or 10 to 1 and this condition is aggravated with the use of a short focus, wide angle objective. Under extreme conditions, the side of a picture away from the observer may appear almost black. Such conditions are most common with translucent screens.

ABOUT BUDDING PLAYS, AND NEWS OF THE TRADE

New Program Plan for Universal

J. Warren Kerrigan, so long associated with the Universal brand, has stated his intention of withdrawing from that company. Mr. Kerrigan has made no definite connection as yet but received a telegram from the eastern offices of a well known film company offering a tentative proposition to be accepted or rejected by the first of October, and if no better offer is made him in the meantime he will probably sign with them on October 1.

The members of the Universal company are showing their patriotism in their response to the call to arms. Six Universal City actors have left with their regiments. They include Lester Phillips, George Lackie; Charles de Francis, Abe Numdon, A. Cessena and Hans Whippern. Besides these J. Hageman is an ensign, and Victor Goss, B. L. Feigley and E. W. Feigley have volunteered in the naval militia. H. Manhaken and Edward Carey of the factory employes have gone to the front, and President Carl Laemmle announces that the salaries of his soldier employes will be paid to their families during their absence.

Beverly Griffith, of the Universal Animated Weekly staff, has returned to the Mexican border accompanied by Robert Walters, and several rolls of film already received show that Griffith and Walters lost no time in getting "close up" to the military activities below the line.

Universal announces the titles of the ness serial "Liberty," the first release of first four episodes of its new preparedwhich will be made on August 14 as "Across the Border." This will be followed by "Fangs of the Wolf," "Riding With Death," and "American Blood." Marie Walcamp is featured in this serial and is supported by Jack Holt, Neal Heart, Bertram Gassby, L. M. Wells, Maud Emery and Roy Stewart.

A new arrangement of the Universal program went into effect on July 17. After a correspondence with all the Universal Exchanges Morris Pivar, head of the program department, found that the majority of exchanges are in favor of identifying certain types of subjects with various brands rather than identifying the stars with these brands, which has been the practice in the past. Hereafter, a five-reeler will be released under the Red Feather brand each week and a three-reeler under the Gold Seal trademark; Nestor will stand for parlor comedies; Victor will be synonymous with comedy or comedy drama; the Laemmle brand will symbolize refined society dramas, the Big U mark will release rural, costume, sea, light western and juvenile dramas; novelties, such as cartoons, manikins, juvenile comedies and educationals will come under the Powers brand; melodramas, detective, mystery and underworld dramas under Imp; all refined society dramas under Rex brand; western, mountain, Indian, railroad and animal dramas under Bison brand; and slap-stick comedies under Joker and L-Ko brands.

Greater Productions for Famous-Lasky

Big Concerns in Recent Merger Lay Important Plans—Lasky to Personally Supervise Productions

THE greater productions which have been promised as a result of the merger of the Famous Players Company and the Lasky Corporation are already under way as is shown by the engagement of Robert E. MacAlarney, formerly city editor of the New York Tribune and president of the New York City News Association as editor of the Lasky scenario department, which follows closely on the heels of the engagement by the Famous Players of Shannon Fife, John A. Moroso, Izola Forrester and Forest Halsey to assist Harry R. Durant in that company's script department.

The combination of the two companies will in no way interfere with the $100,000 scenario offer of the Famous Players. Besides the material obtained in this way five new plays have been secured, "Under Cover," "Rolling Stones," "Newly Marries," and "The Woman in the Case," in which Pauline Fredericks is already being starred. Also a number of special Mary Pickford subjects are being planned.

Del Henderson, one of the best known directors in the business, has been added to the Famous Players staff and is now working on "Rolling Stones," in which Owen Moore is being starred.

The closer co-operation between the two companies is demonstrated by the moving of the west coast scenario department of the Lasky company to New York and the removal of President Zukor's offices to the Lasky offices.

One of the great advantages of the merger is the fact that the placing of the executive responsibility upon the shoulders of Adolph Zukor, Samuel Goldfish and Arthur S. Friend, respectively, president, chairman of board of directors and treasurer, will give Jesse L. Lasky opportunity to devote a far greater part of his time to the actual producing of pictures and of coming in even more frequent personal contact

Horsley to Increase Output

David Horsley, owner and director general of the David Horsley studios, announces an increase in productions at his western studios. Starting July 10 the output of film will be greater than ever before and many new faces will be seen on the screen.

Under the new system Crane Wilbur will be seen in five-reel subjects under the direction of Robert B. Broadwell and Mae Gaston will be seen in leading feminine roles.

Margaret Gibson and William Clifford will also be featured in five-reel plays, under the direction of Charles Swickard.

George Ovey, the Cub comedian, will be seen in two-reel laugh producers in the future. When the one-reel pictures are discontinued George Ovey will have completed fifty-seven stories in which he enacted the character of Jerry.

Director Broadwell and Crane Wilbur are preparing for their first five-reeler which will be a military drama.

"Destiny's Boomerang," a two-reel Centaur feature, with the co-stars Margaret Gibson and William Clifford, has been completed.

David Horsley is planning a large glass studio for his local plant in preparation for the rainy season. The stage will be 75 by 150 feet, with a height of about 60 feet.

Little Claire Alexander will play the leading feminine role in support of George Ovey in the Cub comedy, "The Masque Ball," to be released July 28.

"The Haunted Symphony," starring Crane Wilbur, will be the feature offering of the David Horsley productions for July 29. Mae Gaston plays opposite Mr. Wilbur, assisted by Frederick Montague, Claude Mortenson, John Oaker, Lloyd Holton and Jessie Burnett.

Cupid Crosses Arrows With LeVino

The marriage of Albert Shelby LeVino, of the Arrow Film Corporation, and Miss Margaret Prussing, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Eugene E. Prussing, of Chicago, took place on June 29 in New York City. W. E. Shallenberger, president of the Arrow Film Corporation, with which Mr. LeVino has been associated ever since its organization, was best man.

As Margaret Prussing, the bride has won considerable fame on the stage, in motion pictures and in literary work. After her graduation from Bryn Mawr, Miss Prussing's first stage engagement was in the Belasco production of "The Woman." She next appeared for a season with Charlotte Walker in "The Trail of the Lonesome Pine," going from that play to the part of Meg in "Little Women." She has been starred in feature pictures by Selig, Edison and Kalem.

With her marriage Miss Prussing has announced her retirement from the stage to devote herself to short story and scenario writing in collaboration with Mr. LeVino.

Big Bluebird Campaign

A very extensive and costly advertising campaign for Bluebird Photoplays has been launched by Nat G. Rothstein of the chief executive offices in New York city. $200,000 are to be expended in the Saturday Evening Post in a continuous campaign of 51 weeks. It is estimated this will mean that 10,000,000 people will read about the merits of Bluebird features.

The big gun of the series was fired June 24. It was a full page in the Post and consumed ammunition to the extent of $5,000, the regular page rate.

Mr. Rothstein has issued a large and attractive blue and white folder to exhibitors, explaining the extent and import of the big campaign, the largest ever conducted by a film enterprise with the sole idea of general publicity for the benefit of exhibitors everywhere. It will naturally tend to make "Bluebird" a household word, along with Ivory soap and the Gold Dust Twins.

Brand New Serial

Announcement is made by O. E. Goebel, president of the Consolidated Film Corp., commencing August 21, of the release through the Metro Exchanges of a sixteen-episode serial, "The Crimson Stain Mystery." Maurice Costello and Ethel Grandin are to be featured in what is said to be one of the strangest and most surprising serials yet attempted. It is to be accompanied by an extensive newspaper campaign.

It will be printed serially in all of the leading newspapers throughout the United States of which the New York Morning World will lead. The novelization of this unusual story is by Albert Peyson Terhune.

The story is that of a modern Frankenstein, a physician who discovers how to give the brain cells greater power, thereby increasing the happiness of the world in general. However, his discovery works the wrong way and a generation is produced, of the craftiest, most wicked criminals ever known, who prey upon society in general. They are, however, of the highest type mentally and socially. The arch criminal—the first of the race, is marked by a flush that appears in his eyes. This is the "Crimson Stain."

Selig Players Return West

On Thursday, July 8, a number of Selig stars left Chicago for the Pacific Coast studios of the company, at Los Angeles, Calif. Among the players were included Marshall Neilan, George Fawcett, wife and daughter, Mary Charleson, Leo Pierson, Cecil Holland and others. Gabriel Pollock, scenic artist, also accompanied the party. These players recently completed "The Prince Chap" under the direction of Marshall Neilan at the Selig studios, Chicago. "The Prince Chap" will be released as a Selig Red Seal play through V. L. S. E. on July 24.

In the Selig de luxe play, "The Crisis," to be released in twelve reels in the near future, Tom Mix performs a thrilling act that outdoes anything ever before attempted by this cowboy star who delights in taking chances. Mix, astride a horse, is supposed to be hit by a shell in battle. Horse and man plunge down a steep embankment to the lowland.

Alec Lorimore with "Civilization"

Alec Lorimore, a prominent figure in New York film circles for the past few years, is now connected with Thomas H. Ince's "Civilization." He is located in the Times Building office. During his previous services with several of the foremost film companies, Mr. Lorimore proved himself resourceful, pleasant, and a capable organizer. He has had years of experience in the commercial end of the motion picture industry and is eminently equipped for his present position.

Lasky Captures Proctor

George Dubois Proctor, well known in the motion picture industry by reason of his connection with the editorial departments of the Morning Telegraph, Reel Life and Motion Picture News, and as scenario editor of the Metro and Gaumont firms, left New York last week to join the photo-dramatic staff at the Lasky studios, Hollywood, California.

As he said goodby to his friends Mr. Proctor blushingly announced that he was going away a bridegroom. On the day he left he married Miss Eileen

Alanna Scherr, who was one of the beauties in the chorus of "Chin Chin."

Mr. Proctor was born in Danvers, Massachusetts, in 1887. He was educated at Andover Academy and Yale University and his journalistic career carried him to practically every big city in the United States from coast to coast. Five years ago he first became identified in motion picture circles.

Before leaving New York Mr. Proctor spent a week at the photo-dramatic headquarters of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation in New York. His first work for this concern will be the preparation for the screen of Paul West's story, "The Lash," in which Marie Doro will star.

Sherman Reopens with "Nation"

H. A. Sherman, the active film man of Minneapolis, and who controls seventeen of the middle western states on "The Birth of a Nation," reports most unusual success with the Griffith production. After playing it for twenty-two weeks in Minneapolis he reopened last week at the Schubert Theater for an extensive return engagement.

Mr. Sherman recently entertained Bennie Ziedman, Fine Arts publicity man, while the latter passed through the Twin Cities on his way to the Chicago convention and the east. A luncheon attended by Governor J. A. A. Burnquist formed part of the reception to Bennie.

Ben J. Johnson, owner of the Sugg and Empress Theaters, has purchased the Kozy from W. C. Blackstone and has made a contract with Mr. Blackstone to manage the house. J. L. Olive continues as manager of the Sugg, and the Kozy will be the name of the combined show, in the Empress and Kozy locations, as they are side by side.

Proposed Charter of New Association

REPORT OF COMMITTEE AND PROPOSED BY-LAWS

THE report of the Sub-Committee of Twelve with the proposed Charter and By-Laws of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, submitted in New York, July 6, 1916, to the Committee-at-Large on Organization is as follows:

To the Committee on Organization of a Proposed National Association of the Motion Picture Industry:

Your Sub-Committee of Twelve appointed on June 6, 1916, to consider and propose a plan of organization for an association comprising all of the interests of the motion picture industry, hereby submits its report to the committee at large on organization, in the form of the annexed proposed charter and by-laws.

The committee begs leave to say that in its work it has endeavored to keep in mind two thoughts which it believes to be fundamental for the success of this association if formed, and therefore for the welfare of the whole industry.

First: That the objects and actions of the association should be confined to questions affecting the motion picture industry as a whole.

Second: That this association should furnish a means by which the various branches of the industry may have the opportunity of knowing each other and the respective viewpoints of each upon all questions arising from within the industry, and thus, themselves, to adjust amicably any differences which may arise between two or more branches of the industry.

Respectfully submitted,
WALTER W. IRWIN, Chairman.

CHARTER OF THE NATIONAL ASSOCIATION OF THE MOTION PICTURE INDUSTRY, INC.

We, the undersigned, all being persons of full age and at least two-thirds being citizens of the United States, and at least one of us a resident of the state of New York, desiring to form a membership corporation pursuant to Section 180 of the Membership Corporation Law, do hereby make, sign, acknowledge and file this certificate for that purpose, as follows:

First, The name of the proposed corporation is to be the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, Inc.

Second, The particular objects for which the corporation is to be created are as follows:

To foster trade and commerce among its members and to promote the business interests of such members; to reform trade abuses in behalf of its members; to secure freedom from unjust and unlawful exactions; to diffuse among its members accurate and reliable information as to the standing and character of those engaged in any or all branches of that industry and to supply other information concerning said industry; to settle differences between its members and promote a more enlarged and friendly intercourse between those engaged in the industry and to do and perform all such acts as may tend to promote the welfare of the industry at large.

Third, Its principal office is to be situated in the Borough of Manhattan, City of New York and State of New York.

Fourth, The number of Directors is to be thirty.

Fifth, The names and places of residence of the persons to be its Directors until its first annual meeting are as follows:

Sixth, The names and places of residence of the Charter Members of this Corporation are as follows:

Seventh, The time of the holding of its annual meeting is the first Monday in June of each year hereafter.

Eighth, The duration of the Corporation is to be perpetual.

In Witness Whereof, we have hereunto signed and acknowledged this certificate in duplicate as of the.....day of..... 1916.

BY-LAWS OF THE NATIONAL ASSOCIATION OF THE MOTION PICTURE INDUSTRY, INC.

ARTICLE I.—MEMBERSHIP.

Classes.

SECTION 1. The membership of the association shall consist of five classes, viz.:

Class 1. Producers and importers of motion pictures.

Class 2. Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America; membership in good standing in the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America shall carry with it membership in this association.

Class 3. Those engaged in manufacturing, dealing in and importing motion picture supplies and equipment.

Class 4. Distributors of motion pictures.

Class 5. Miscellaneous.

Eligibility.

SECTION 2. Class 1. To this class any person, firm, association or corporation engaged in producing, manufacturing or importing motion pictures shall be eligible under such conditions as may be prescribed by the Board of Directors.

Class 2. Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America; membership in good standing in the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America shall carry with it membership in this association.

Class 3. To this class any person, firm, association or corporation engaged in the business of manufacturing, dealing in or importing supplies, equipment and material used in any branch of the motion picture industry shall be eligible under such conditions as may be prescribed by the Board of Directors.

Class 4. In this class any person, firm, association or corporation engaged in the business of distributing motion pictures shall be eligible under such conditions as may be prescribed by the Board of Directors.

Class 5. To this class any person, employee, firm, or association or corporation engaged in any other work connected with or relating to any branch of the motion picture industry, including trade and other publishers, authors, actors, directors, agencies, and every person or employee in any branch of the motion picture industry shall be eligible under such conditions as may be prescribed by the Board of Directors.

But nothing herein contained shall authorize or permit any person, firm, association or corporation, who or which is a member of any other specified class or eligible for membership therein, to join Class 5 instead of the class to which he or the firm, association or corporation is eligible. But any person, firm, association or corporation or any executive officer whose firm, association or corporation is already a member of another specified class hereof, may likewise join Class 5, but no such member may be elected as a director to represent Class 5 on the Board of Directors hereof.

Representation.

Each firm, association or corporation upon election to membership shall designate a representative in the membership.

Additional Membership.

Any person or organization eligible to membership may acquire one or more additional memberships by undertaking to pay the annual dues for such membership, and may designate a representative for each additional membership.

Limitation of Votes.

A firm, association or corporation holding more than one membership shall be entitled to cast one vote for each such membership, provided, however, that the number of votes so cast by any such firm, association or corporation shall not exceed 10 per cent of the total vote cast at such meeting.

A firm, association or corporation holding one or more memberships shall have the right at any time to change any or all of its representatives upon written notice to the association.

Annual Dues.

The Board of Directors shall determine the annual dues to be paid by the members of this association, but in fixing such dues the Board shall apply the same method or unit to all who are similarly situated.

At least thirty days prior to the determination provided for in the preceding paragraph, the Board of Directors shall in writing request each branch committee hereinafter provided for to submit to the Board suggestions and recommendations as to the amount of dues to be paid by the members of that class, the method of fixing and collecting the same, and the time or times at which such dues are to be paid. The entrance fee of the respective members of this association shall be as follows:

Voting.

Only individual members of those duly designated as the representatives of firms, associations or corporations holding membership in such organization shall be entitled to vote or hold office in the association.

Annual Dues, When Payable.

SECTION 3. The annual dues for the first year of membership shall be payable in advance immediately upon acceptance of application for membership, and shall cover a period of one year from the first of the calendar month next succeeding the date of election. Subsequent annual dues shall be payable in advance on the first of the corresponding month in each succeeding year. Such other dues as may be prescribed by the Board of Directors shall be payable as and when the Directors shall determine they shall be paid.

Resignations.

Resignations from membership shall be made in writing to the Board of Directors, but shall not relieve any member from liability from any dues accrued and unpaid at the time that such resignation was filed.

Delinquents.

SECTION 4. Any member whose dues remain unpaid 90 days after maturity shall be reported to the Executive Committee or to the Board of Directors, either of which may thereupon declare such member a delinquent.

Notification.

Thereupon, there shall be mailed to such member a bill covering the unpaid dues and a copy of this section.

Removal from Membership—Notification.

If the dues remain unpaid for a period of thirty days thereafter, the delinquent shall be dropped from membership and notice of this fact may be printed in the official publication of the association.

ARTICLE II.—AFFILIATED ORGANIZATIONS.

Certificate of Affiliation.

Any civic, social or other trade or business association or club in the United States upon application and under conditions approved by the Board of Directors of this association, may obtain a certificate of affiliation with this association whenever any of the following three conditions are complied with, namely:

How Obtained.

a. Such proportion of its members are members of this association as, in the opinion of the Board of Directors of this association, entitle it to receive such certificates of affiliation; or

b. Upon agreeing to contribute a definite sum to be prescribed by the Board of Directors of this association annually to the funds of this association; or

c. Upon such terms and conditions as the Board of Directors of this association may decide upon as proper.

Rights of Affiliation.

Such affiliation shall confer upon the affiliated organization the following rights, and such others, if any, as may be specifically authorized by the Board of Directors of this organization.

Meetings.

First: To call upon the Secretary of this association to arrange meetings of organizations interested in trade, business, civic, or legislative questions, and to assist in the conduct of such meetings.

Information.

Second: To receive on request and subject to the approval of the Executive Committee of this association information concerning current, civic or legislative matters affecting the interests of the affiliated organization.

Arbitration.

Third: To call upon this organization to appoint arbitrators or referees, in trade or business disputes in which the affiliated organization may be interested or concerned.

Revocation of Centificate.

SECTION 2. Any certificate of affiliation granted under the provisions of these By-Laws may be withdrawn at any time by the Board of Directors of this association by a majority vote of the Directors present at any meeting at which there is a quorum, for any cause which said board may deem sufficient.

ARTICLE III.—SUBSIDIARY ORGANIZATIONS.

Charter and How Obtained.

Any ten or more members of this association interested in a particular branch or part of the motion picture trade, business or other activity may apply to the Board of Directors of this association for a charter for a subsidiary organization, within and confined to the membership of this association. The Board of Directors may, at its discretion, grant such a charter, provided the objects sought and the methods to be employed thereunder are consistent with the objects and methods of the association itself. Any such subsidiary organizations shall be under the general supervision of and subject to regulations prescribed by the Board of Directors of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, which shall have the right at any time to revoke such charter.

ARTICLE IV.—MANAGEMENT AND OFFICERS.

Directors, Number and Qualifications. How Elected.

SECTION 1. The government of the association shall be vested in a Board of 30 Directors. Directors shall be elected by ballot at each annual meeting of the association. The Directors shall be divided into five classes, and shall be elected as follows:

1. Five directors shall annually be elected out of and from the branch committee of Class 1, hereinafter mentioned.
2. Ten directors shall annually be elected out of and from the branch committee of Class 2, hereinafter mentioned.
3. Five directors shall annually be elected out of and from the branch committee of Class 3, hereinafter mentioned.
4. Five directors shall annually be elected out of and from the branch committee of Class 4, hereinafter mentioned.
5. Five directors shall annually be elected out of and from the branch committee of Class 5, hereinafter mentioned.

Vacancies.

Any vacancies occurring during the year shall be filled by the branch committees of the class or classes in which the vacancy occurs.

Officers, How Elected.

SECTION 2. The officers of this association shall consist of a president, at least five vice-presidents, and a treasurer, who shall be members of the Board of Directors, and a secretary and general counsel who need not be members of the Board, all of which officers shall be elected by ballot immediately after the annual meeting of the association, by the Board of Directors.

Term of Office.

Each of such officers shall serve for the term of one year and until the election and qualification of his successor. The president may appoint one or more associate secretaries, who shall serve during the pleasure of the Board, and shall have such power and perform such duties as may be delegated to them by the Board. The secretary, assistant secretaries and the general counsel shall receive such compensation as the Board of Directors may from time to time determine. The Board may, at its discretion, elect an assistant treasurer and such associate officers and assistants as it may deem proper.

ARTICLE V.—DUTIES OF OFFICERS.

General Powers of President.

SECTION 1. The preident shall be the chief executive officer and head of the association, and (between the meetings of the Board of Directors and the Executive Committee) shall have the general control and management of its business and affairs, subject, however, to the rights of the Directors to delegate any specific power, except such as may be by the statute exclusively conferred upon the president, to any other officer or officers of the association to the exclusion, for the time being, of the president.

Annual Reports.

He shall preside at all meetings of the board of Directors and shall appoint all committees by and with the approval of the Board of Directors. He shall make annual reports showing the conditions of the affairs of the association, and shall make such recommendations as he thinks proper, and submit the same to the Board of Directors at the next meeting preceding the annual meeting of the members, and he shall from time to time bring before the Directors and the Executive Committee such information as may be required touching the business and property of the association.

The president shall appoint the chairman and shall be ex-officio member of all standing committees of the Board, and shall be custodian of the corporate seal.

Vice-President.

SECTION 2. In the absence of the president, any vice-president may act in his place.

Treasurer.

SECTION 3. The treasurer shall keep, or cause to be kept, full and accurate accounts of receipts and disbursements in books belonging to the association, and shall deposit all moneys and other valuable effects in the name and to the credit of the association in such depositories as may be designated by the Board of Directors or the Executive Committee.

Monthly Reports.

He shall disburse the funds of the association as may be ordered by the Board, taking proper vouchers for such disbursements, and shall render to the president and directors, at the regular monthly meetings of the Board, or wherever they may require it, an account of all his transactions as treasurer and of the financial condition of the association, annually, a like report of the preceding year.

Secretary.

SECTION 4. The secretary shall be secretary and actuary of the Board of Directors and the Executive Committee. He shall record, or cause to be recorded, all votes and minutes of all proceedings in books to be kept for that purpose. He shall cause proper notice to be given of all meetings of the Board of Directors, of members of the association, and of the Executive Committee. He shall be ex-officio secretary of all committees of the Board appointed by the president, have charge of the general secretarial work of the various committees of the association, and shall have the general supervision and control of the work of the members of the office staff.

General Counsel.

SECTION 5. The general counsel shall be the general legal adviser of the association. Unless otherwise ordered by the Board of Directors or the Executive Committee, he shall have supervision of all matters involving legal questions, and shall appear for the association in all actions or proceedings at law.

ARTICLE VI.—DUTIES OF OFFICERS MAY BE DELEGATED.

Delegation of Powers.

In case of the absence of the president, either of the vice-presidents, secretary or the treasurer or for any other reason that may seem sufficient to the Board, the Board of Directors or Executive Committee may delegate his powers and duties to any other officer, or to any director, for the time being.

ARTICLE VII.—MEETINGS OF DIRECTORS.

Directors' Meetings.

SECTION 1. Regular meetings of the Directors shall be held without notice on the third Thursday of each month, at the office of the association, or by the order of the Board of Directors elsewhere, on a day and at an hour to be fixed by the Board.

Quorum.

SECTION 2. Twelve members of the Board of Directors shall be necessary to constitute a quorum for the transaction of business.

Special Meetings.

SECTION 3. Special meetings of the Board may be called by the president or secretary on two days' notice to each director; special meetings shall be called in like manner on written request of a majority of the members of the Board, or a majority of the Executive Committee.

ARTICLE VIII.—POWER OF DIRECTORS AND BRANCH COMMITTEES.

Directors, General Powers.

SECTION 1. The Board of Directors shall have the management of the business of the association, and in addition to the powers and authority by these By-Laws expressly conferred upon them, may exercise all such powers and to do all such acts and things as may be exercised or done by the association, but subject, nevertheless, to the provisions of the statute and of these By-Laws, and to any regulations from time to time made by the members, provided that no regulations so made shall invalidate any prior act of the Directors, which would have been valid if such regulation had not been made.

Branch Committees.

The branch committee of Class 2 shall be elected by the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America. Each of the other classes of members heretofore named shall annually elect by ballot a branch committee to represent the class from which said committee is elected. The number of those composing each branch committee shall be not less than the number of directors elected annually to represent each of said classes.

Each branch committee, when elected, shall elect a chairman, a secretary, an executive committee, and otherwise organize for the government of its own affairs.

Each branch committee shall have the power to appoint such committees as it may deem proper.

If any member or class of members has a grievance against another member or class of members, the complainant may file a complaint with the grievance committee of the class to which he belongs for consideration and action, and thereupon the grievance committee may notify the person complained against, if he be a member of the same class as the complainant, and if he be a member of another class, then the grievance committee of the complainant may at its discretion notify the grievance committee of the class to which the member or class of members complained against belongs, and by appropriate arrangements the grievance committee shall arrange for a hearing of the matter in dispute, and its amicable adjustment.

Each branch committee shall be the exclusive representative of its own branch of the industry, and of the class of members from which it comes, in all matters affecting that branch of the industry, except those which each branch expressly delegates to the Board of Directors of the National Association of the Motion Pictures Industry, Inc., as a whole, over which matters said directors shall have exclusive jurisdiction and control.

Each branch committee of the association and each and every member hereof hereby delegates to and confers upon the Board of Directors of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, Inc., the exclusive right, power and authority in the name of the association and in its behalf, and in behalf of every branch and every individual or other members of the association, to exercise complete and exclusive jurisdiction, dominion and control over each and all of the following matters, viz.:

1. To oppose by such lawful means as the directors may deem proper all legislation, whether national, state or local, deemed by the Board of Directors to be harmful to the welfare and best interests of the motion picture industry as a whole.
2. To advocate and support by such lawful means as the directors shall deem proper all legislation, whether national, state or local, deemed by the Board of Directors to be helpful and beneficial to the welfare and best interests of the motion picture industry as a whole.
3. Such other matters as may from time to time be delegated by any one or more such branch committees to the said Board of Directors, provided, however, that any matter so delegated be not in conflict with the interests of any other branch committee, class or membership of this association.

Special Powers.

Section 2. Without prejudice to the general powers conferred by the last preceding clause, and the other powers conferred by these By-Laws, it is hereby expressly declared that the Board of Directors shall have the following powers, that is to say:

May Acquire Property.

To purchase or otherwise acquire for the association any property rights and privileges which the association is authorized to acquire, at such prices, and on such terms and conditions, and for such considerations, as they think fit.

Appointments and Removals.

To appoint, and at their discretion remove or suspend, such managers, officers, subordinate, assistant or otherwise, and clerks, agents and servants, permanently or temporarily, as they may from time to time think fit, and to determine their duties and fix them and, from time to time, change their salaries or emoluments, and to require security in such instances and in such amounts as they think fit.

To confer upon any officer of the association the right to choose, remove or suspend subordinate officers, agents or factors.

Power of Signatures.

To determine who shall be authorized to sign, on the association's behalf, notes, receipts, acceptances, endorsements, checks, releases, contracts and documents.

Delegation of Powers.

From time to time to provide for the management of the affairs of the association in such manner as they think fit, and in particular from time to time to delegate any of the powers of the Board of Directors to any committee, officer or agent, and to appoint any persons to be the agents of the association, with such powers (including the power to sub-delegate) and upon such terms as may be thought fit.

ARTICLE IX.—STANDING COMMITTEES.

Executive Committee.

Section 1. There may be an executive committee of not less than five nor more than nine directors appointed by the president, with the approval of the directors, which shall meet at regular periods upon notice to all by any of their own number, or on notice from the secretary.

Powers.

It shall have power to authorize expenditures and to audit and approve accounts and bills, and such other powers as may be delegated to it by the Board.

Section 2. The following standing committees, and such other committees as the Board may from time to time determine upon, shall be appointed by the president and with the approval of the Board of Directors, after the number of each such committees shall have been determined by the Board of Directors, and when appointed, each such standing committee shall keep records of its proceedings and report them from time to time to the Directors or to the Executive Committee. In accordance with the provisions hereof, the following standing committees shall be appointed:

1. Committee on membership.
2. Committee on finance and auditing.
3. Committee on publicity.
4. Committee on hostile legislation.
5. Committee on constructive legislation.
6. Committee on censorship.
7. Committee on taxation.
8. Campaign committee.
9. Committee on statistics and library.
10. Committee on fire prevention regulations and insurance.
11. Committee on foreign trade.
12. Transportation committee.
13. Committee on copyrights and trade marks, domestic and foreign.
14. Committee on standards.
15. Committee on labor.
16. Committee on industrial economies.
17. Committee on grievances.

The president shall also appoint one or more delegates to represent the association in the Chamber of Commerce of the United States of America.

ARTICLE X.—ORDER OF BUSINESS, DIRECTORS' MEETINGS.

Order of Business, Directors' Meetings.

The order of business at the meetings of the Board shall be as follows:

1. A quorum being present, the president shall call the Board to order.
2. The minutes of the last meeting shall be read and considered as approved, if there be no amendments.
3. Reports of officers of the association.
4. Reports of committees.
5. Unfinished business.
6. Miscellaneous business.
7. New business.

ARTICLE XI.—OUTLAYS BY SPECIAL COMMITTEES.

Whenever five or more members of this association shall certify to the Board of Directors that they desire the association to prosecute any matter within the scope of the association, and shall further certify that the said proceedings shall be at the cost and expense of said members, the Board of Directors may authorize the president to appoint a special committee to prosecute such matters in the name of the association, under the direction of the president and under the control of the Board of Directors. Such committee shall not be authorized to create any indebtedness or obligation on the part of the association, unless the same shall be specially authorized by the Board of Directors or executive committee of the association.

ARTICLE XII.—MEETINGS.

Members' Annual Meeting, When Held.

Section 1. The annual meetings of the association shall be held on the first Monday in June of each year hereafter at 2 p. m. The number of members present shall equal at least the number of directors elected from each class herein specified to constitute a quorum at all meetings.

Section 2. Special meetings of the association may be called at any time by the president, or shall be called upon the order of the Board, or on the written request of not less than fifty members, and the object of such meeting shall be stated in that notice. Regular notices of all meetings shall be forwarded to each member at least 21 days prior to such meeting.

Quorum.

At any special or regular meeting called, the number of members present shall equal at least the number of directors elected from each class herein specified to constitute a quorum, and no business shall be transacted at any special meeting other than that stated in the notice of such meeting.

At any regular or special meeting of the members hereof, the vote of members of Class 5, shall only be cast by members of that class, who are not members of any other specified class, and not eligible to membership therein, and at all such meetings the vote cast by Class 2 hereof shall be cast by some person duly designated and authorized by the Executive Committee of the Branch Committee thereof, which vote shall equal, but not exceed, the total number of votes cast in person or by proxy, by Classes 1 and 4 hereof.

If there be a division in the Executive Committee of the Branch Committee of Class 2 upon the vote cast in behalf of Class 2, the person so designated shall cast the vote of those members of the Executive Committee who vote in the affirmative and the vote of those who vote in the negative, in the proportion which the affirmative and negative vote respectively bears to the total number of votes cast by the members of Classes 1 and 4.

ARTICLE XIII.—ORDER OF BUSINESS. MOTIONS.

Order of Business, Motions.

Calling of the roll.
Reading the minutes of the previous meeting.
Reports of officers.
Reports of special committees.
Elections.
Unfinished business.

New Business.

Section 2. The order of business may be altered or suspended at any meeting by a majority vote of the members present. The usual parliamentary rules, as laid down in "Cushing's Manual of Parliamentary Law," shall govern all debates, when not in conflict with these By-Laws.

Motions.

Section 3. Every motion or resolution which shall be made or offered at any meeting shall, at the request of the secretary, be reduced to writing and furnished to the secretary before the question shall be put.

ARTICLE XIV.—NOTICE TO MEMBERS.

Notice.

Section 1. Under no circumstances shall any member of any organization affiliated under the provisions of Articles II or III be entitled to notice of any meeting, or of any proceeding in the association, unless it is specially provided herein that members of organizations so affiliated are entitled to notice.

How Given

Section 2. Whenever notice is required to be given to any member, such notice shall not be deemed to be personal notice, or personal service of a notice in writing, but such notice shall be deemed to have been given from and at the time when said notice in writing shall have been deposited in the post office, or in any regular United States mailing box in the city of New York, inclosed in a postpaid wrapper, addressed to the member at his last known place of residence or business as the same shall appear upon the books of the association, or if such address shall not appear upon the books of the association, then to such address as may appear in any directory of any municipality in which such member may reside or do business. Whenever any notice shall be given to the exhibitor members hereof, one such notice sent to the secretary of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America shall be deemed to be due notice to each exhibitor member hereof.

ARTICLE XV.—CONTRACTS AND AGREEMENTS.

Limitations of Contracts.

No agreement, contract or obligation, other than a check, involving the payment of money or the credit of the association for more than twenty-five hundred dollars ($2,500) shall be made without the order of the Board of Directors or of the Executive Committee.

ARTICLE XVI.—EXPULSION.

Expulsion.

Section 1. If any person, firm or corporation, being a member of the association, shall at any time be deemed guilty of any act which is prejudicial to this association or to the purpose for which it is formed, such person, firm or corporation shall be notified to appear personally at the next regular meeting of the Board of Directors and shall then and there be given a hearing. Any member shall have the privilege of appearing by counsel and all evidence shall be taken by a stenographer chosen by the Board. By a two-thirds vote of all the members of the Board of Directors present at a meeting thereof called for that purpose, such member may be expelled from membership in this association.

Right of Appeal.

Section 2. Any member so expelled, if he has personally appeared before the Board, and not otherwise, and who may feel aggrieved by such action, may appeal to the association, but such appeal will not operate to suspend the expulsion meanwhile. The matter shall thereupon be heard at the next regular meeting, or a special meeting may, at the option of the Board of Directors, be called for that purpose, and at such meeting the action of the Board of Directors may be reviewed upon a transcription of the stenographic notes of the evidence produced before the Board, and not otherwise. If a majority of all the members present shall vote to indorse the action of the Board of Directors in so expelling such member, such member's name shall be finally dropped from the roll.

ARTICLE XVII.—SIGNING THE ROLL.

Application for Membership.

SECTION 1. Every person, firm, association or corporation desiring to become a member of this association shall, in person, or by attorney, sign an application for membership in the association.

Right to Refuse Application.

SECTION 2. The Board of Directors, or Executive Committee, shall have the right to refuse any such application for any reason which to them shall seem sufficient, provided, however, such refusal of the Board of Directors or of the Executive Committee be by a majority vote of the directors or members of the Executive Committee present at any meeting of the Board or Executive Committee at which there shall be a quorum present.

Observance of By-Laws and Regulations.

SECTION 3. The signing of such an application for membership, unless the application be refused, as provided in Section 2 hereof, shall be and be construed to be a signature on the official roll of members of the association and an agreement on the part of said person, firm, association or corporatin to fulfill and perform all requirements herein contained; and to conform to all rules or regulations, whether expressed in the By-Laws or otherwise, which may from time to time be adopted by the Board of Directors of the association.

ARTICLE XVIII.

Amendments.

These By-Laws may be amended by a vote of three-fourths of the members present at any meeting held for the purpose of such amendment, provided a copy of such amendment together with notice of the meeting at which action is to be taken thereon shall have been mailed to the members at least 21 days prior to such meeting.

The Acorn Movie Cartoon Corporation, the new producing company with $100,000 capital which was recently organized, has for its incorporators C. L. Sudman, J. C. Casler and Clarence Linz, all of Dallas.

Sudman is the inventor of a new device, with the aid of which a four-reel cartoon may be made with only three hundred drawings, eliminating the long process which is used now. Sudman has been in the commercial art work in Dallas for several years. Messrs. Casler and Linz are prominent business men of Dallas, both of them prominent officials in the Dallas Automatic Telephone Company.

Those interested in the Sudman process are in New York negotiating with releasing organizations for their output.

"Billy" Byrd, manager of the Dallas office of the Fox Film Corporation, has gone to the Mexican border with a cameraman and several thousand feet of negative, to "shoot" interesting scenes at the front for the William Fox theaters.

American Film Company: This company has just established a record for film production—over 700,000 feet of film was turned out in one day of this week. It is reported that important dividend notices will be soon forthcoming.

Lone Star Corporation: It is reported bookings have passed the $2,000,000 mark. With the third Chaplin picture just released and the fourth nearly completed, the stock shows a constantly increasing value. Sales have been made the last week at 33 to 35, with the stock in good demand.

Mutual Film Corporation: It was reported that, at the directors' meeting on June 27, the company's earnings were shown to be at the rate of 7% on the preferred and about 24% on the common. This is probably due largely to the tremendous Lone Star bookings, of which Mutual gets 30% for the distribution of this Chaplin series.

North American Film Corporation: Bookings have exceeded $1,000,000. It is stated on very good authority that all or part of the balance of the preferred stock issue will be retired shortly. It is also reported that work on the Sequel to the "Diamond From the Sky" would begin in the next sixty days.

Vogue Films, Inc.: Two companies are now at work making three films weekly (one of them of two reels). This output is larger than originally contemplated and earnings ought to be therefore greater.

Charleson, George Fawcett, Bessie Eyton and Marshall Neilan. Neilan, who plays the title role, also directed the production.

Antoinette Walker, who was leading lady with David Warfield in "The Music Master" on the speaking stage, plays opposite Henry B. Walthall in his next Essanay feature, "The Sting of Victory," first announced as "The Little Musketeer."

Kathlyn Williams visited Chicago last week for the first time in three years. She was returning from New York to Los Angeles.

Tom Mix was another Selig visitor to Chicago recently.

Twelve companies are now at work in the Essanay studios on a strong program of two and three-reel subjects, together with two of the most pretentious feature productions ever attempted by that company.

Edward Arnold has an important role in the support of Edna Mayo in the five-act Essanay play, "The Return of Eve."

A. S. Le Vino of the Arrow Film Corporation and Miss Margaret Prussing of Chicago were married last week.

PACIFIC COAST NOTES

Eugnie Besserer was the first of the Selig company which visited Chicago and the south for scenes for "The Crisis," to return home to Los Angeles. She at once began work there in "The Old Man Who Tried to Grow Young."

Kathlyn William has thirteen picture theaters named for her.

Fritzi Brunette is studying French and Spanish.

Vivian Reed is enjoying a visit from her mother, who arrived in Los Angeles recently from El Paso, Texas.

Harry Lonsdale played on the legitimate stage with E. H. Sothern.

Lillian Gish has appeared in five Triangle plays to date, and is beginning her sixth. Her first play for this company was "The Lily and the Rose," followed by "Daphne and the Pirate," "Sold for Marriage," "The Innocent Magdalene," and a symbolic drama now being titled and assembled.

Dorothy Gish's play, to follow "The Little Schoolma'am," contains a prologue laid in Holland, in which Miss Gish wears a quaint Dutch costume. The story is by Bernard McConville and is being directed by C. M. and S. A. Franklin.

Augustin MacHugh, the author of "Officer 666," has signed with the Keystone Company as scenario writer.

Five motion picture camera men are with the army in Texas and Mexico, taking pictures.

Helene Rosson is featured in the American "Mustang" release, "Sandy, Reformer." Art Acord plays opposite.

Burton George, who recently resigned from the Edison Company, is now at work in Universal City.

Hal Cooley has concluded his engagement with the Monrovia Film Company, for which he played the juvenile lead in a ten-reel feature, "The Daughter of the Don."

George Melford, the Lasky producer, will direct "Each Pearl a Tear," by Edmund Mitchell, following "The House With the Golden Windows."

William Garwood is directing and playing the lead in "The Worm," a short Universal picture, in which he is supported by Lois Wilson.

Neva Gerber, who recently joined the Universal players, is working in a five-reel feature, "What Profiteth A Man?" under the direction of Ben Wilson.

Kolb and Dill have begun work on their second feature for the American company, "The Three Pals," a comedy drama written by Will M. Ritchey and Dan F. Whitcomb. Rea Berger is directing.

Anna Little is to be featured in a western serial to be produced by the American Company, following the completion of "The Secret of the Submarine."

William D. Taylor is completing his five-reel feature starring Edna Goodrich.

Johnny Sheehan is appearing with Kolb and Dill in their second American picture as an ex-prizefighter.

George Sargent, who has been directing "The Secret of the Submarine," gave a farewell dinner to his company last week. He is to undertake the direction of the Richard Bennett play, and Frank Thorne will finish the serial.

"A Social Buccaneer" will be the next five-reel production made by J. Warren Kerrigan and his company, of which Lois Wilson is leading lady. They have just finished "The Beckoning Trail," a five-reel Universal.

Director Joseph DeGrasse is working on "If My Country Should Call," at Universal City. The leading roles are played by Dorothy Phillips and Lon Chaney, supported by Adele Farrington, Helen Leslie, Gretchen Lederer, Frank Whitson, Jay Belasco, Albert MacQuarrie and Carl Von Schiller.

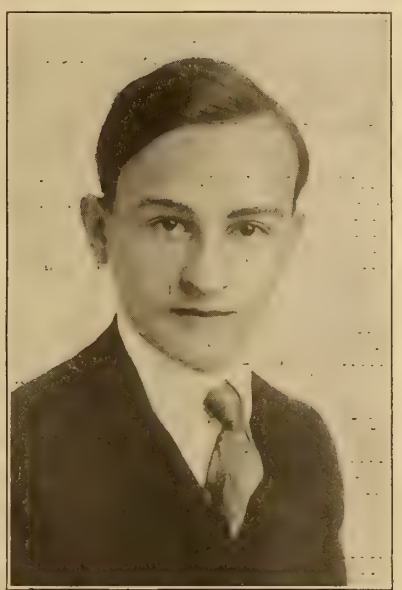
"The Heritage of Hate," a three-reeler, is being directed by Burton George from a story by Walter Woods of the Universal City staff. Roberta Wilson and Paul Byron are the featured leads.

"L'Abbe Constantin" having been finished in five reels, Director Rupert Julian is engaged in filming "The Clique of Gold," featuring Elsie Jane Wilson, with Francelia Billington and Douglas Gerrard in the supporting cast.

"Little Eve Edgerton," directed by Robert Leonard and featuring Ella Hall and Herbert Rawlinson, has been completed. It is a five-reel adaptation of the novel by the same name.

Edgar Keller's decorative playlet, "Mlle. de Juane," is soon to be released and he is already working on another little romance. Keller played the role of "Jean Croissett," the half-breed, in "God's Country and the Woman." Besides being a director, author and actor, Keller is a painter, some of his work being on exhibition at Exposition Park, Los Angeles.

Ed. J. Le Saint has joined the Lasky Company as director. He was formerly with the Universal Company, and before that with Selig. "The Three Godfathers," a Bluebird feature, is his most recent production.



As a result of a collision between two auto-trucks C. E. Lord, formerly an employe of the Signal Film corporation, is lying in a Los Angeles hospital with a fractured skull.

"Pedro Passes," is the title of a one-reel Mexican drama written by Francis Powers and being produced by him with the leads played by Agnes Vernon and A. Lowery. In this film play Miss Vernon takes the role of a Mexican girl.

Francis Ford and Grace Cunard and their company have gone to Tia Juana, Mexico, for scenes for the tenth episode of "Peg O' the Ring."

"FINE ARTS BENNIE"

Bennie Zeidman, known in the Los Angeles film colony as "Fine Arts Bennie," but identified first and always as "Bennie-of-Lubinville," is at last realizing the hope that has been his for some months, namely, to trip back to that dear old Broadway, shake hands with the boys at the Screen Club, drop in at the film offices of the Leavitt, Longacre, World's Tower and Candler Buildings, and to inspect that new film headquarters structure somewhere in the vicinity of Columbus Circle.

"Fine Arts Bennie" Ziedman, peerless publicity promoter.

Bennie arrived in Chicago in time to attend the Exhibitors' Convention in that city; he goes there laden with many messages from a large number of the west-coast film people in addition to acting as emissary for the studio of the Fine Arts. The latter capacity is also one in which he will serve in New York, where the coterie of Bennie-friends will be as large and representative a welcoming committee as has ever assembled to do honor to a film-man from out of the west. In the little more than a year that Bennie Zeidman has been at the head of the publicity department of the Fine Arts studio in Los Angeles, he has placed himself in the front rank of the industry's publicity men. He has demonstrated that "a stranger in a strange land" can make good by virtue of ambition and likeable personality. And his home-going for a month of vacation is one well earned.

Complete Record of Current Films

Believing the classification of film pictures by the nature of their subjects to be of greater importance to the exhibitor than classification by makes, MOTOGRAPHY has adopted this style in listing current films. Exhibitors are urged to make use of this convenient tabulation in making up their programs. Films will be listed as long in advance of their release dates as possible. Film manufacturers are requested to send us their bulletins as early as possible. Reasonable care is used, and the publishers cannot be responsible for errors.

Brief Stories of the Week's Film Releases

General Program

The Private Banker—(Three Reels)—Selig.—Featuring Edith Johnson and Wheeler Oakman. A review appears elsewhere in this issue.

The Informer—Biograph—July 17.—Featuring Mary Pickford. The young lover leaving home at the opening of the war to join the Confederate Army, tells his brother to take care of his fatherless sweetheart during the perilous times which are to follow. But the brother weakens and fails to be true to his trust. He permits her to believe that her lover is dead. Caught in the neighborhood, however, between the lines of the enemy, the brother appears before them at the crucial moment. In retaliation the false brother turns informer. Both forces are aroused to arms and during the attack upon the girl defending her wounded lover and family alone in the negro's cabin, retribution comes in the form of a stray bullet.

Otto's Vacation—Lubin—July 17.—Featuring Davy Don. Peck, whose wife grabs all the money he earns, when he gets two weeks vacation with pay, keeps the money and tells her he has been laid off. She orders Peck to get to work, but he makes his getaway, leaving a note telling her he is going to have two weeks' enjoyment and suffer the consequences. While at a summer resort Peck saves an heiress from drowning and through misunderstanding his picture and the heiress' get in the paper along with the announcement of their engagement. When Mrs. Peck reads the announcement she enlists the aid of the police and they have a merry time trying to locate him. Peck makes his getaway from the police, but Mrs. Peck pursues and overtakes him and then she proceeds to beat him up. Peck gives her a roll of bills he obtained from the heiress' father and after explaining matters she forgives him.

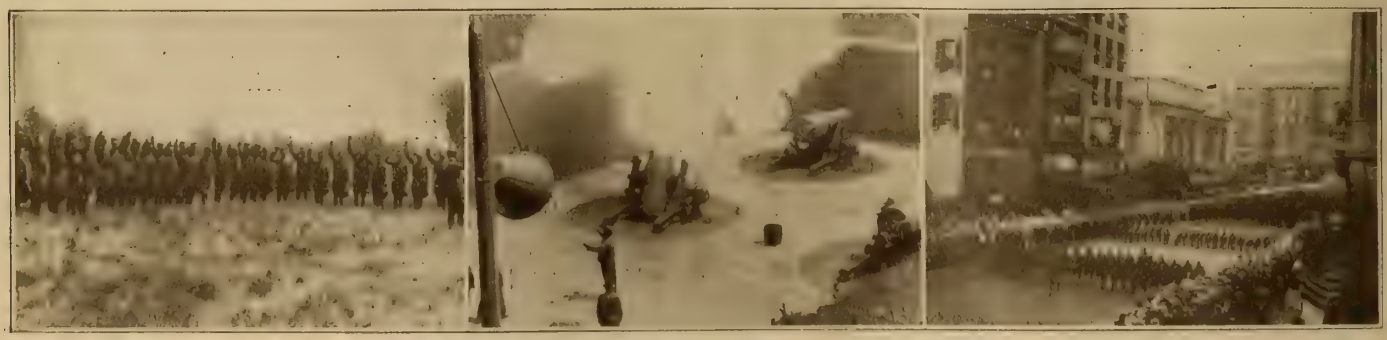
By Man's Law—(Two Reels)—Biograph—July 18.—Featuring Mae Marsh and Robert Harron. "Are the days of despotism over, when one hypocritical money god can so sway the wheels of destiny that thousands of helpless men, women and children may be thrown defenseless upon the world?" So the editorial questioned. It served only as an impetus for the magnate to turn public opinion by philanthropy, while he continued to satisfy his own lusts at the expense of other lives.

The Other Man—(Two Reels)—Essanay—July 18.—Featuring Francis X. Bushman and Lillian Drew. Harry Ross, returning from a long trip taken when his wife divorced him at her father's behest to marry Frederick Braddon, a millionaire, calls on her. She finds the old love returning and consents to fly with him. But Bleeker, the old butler, stands at the door with her child as Mildred, suitcase in hand, prepares to depart. She cannot go on. So it is Bleeker instead of Mildred who meets Ross at the hotel. Ross is given a letter, a locket and a photograph of the baby. He understands and, a broken man, leaves.

Vernon Howe Bailey's Sketch Book of New Orleans—Essanay—July 19.—These are motion drawings picturing New Orleans from the time of its earliest settlement in 1702 by the Indians. The walled city, constructed of five forts in 1769, is shown with the development which has brought it up to its present state—a great modern city, important in commerce and shipping and having a population of 350,000. In the old French quarter much of the picturesqueness and charm of its earlier days is retained and this has not escaped the pen of the sketch artist. This is a split reel release, sharing the length with western scenic.

The Connecting Bath—Vim—July 19.—Featuring Rosemary Theby and Harry Meyers. Hubby and Wifey part company and their divorce suit comes off. They arrive in the city and, unconsciously, put up at the same hotel. There is only one bath left, connecting between two rooms, and they are assigned to these rooms. Wifey goes to take a bath and is scared away by Hubby's sneezing. Hubby enters the bath room and locks the communicating door. Wifey, indignant, beats on the door. Hubby sniffs the perfume she has left behind, and thinks of his wife. He writes a note of apology and retires. Wifey sniffs the cigarette butt he has left and thinks of her husband. She also writes a note. The house detective, his suspicions aroused by the constant slamming of doors, enters and arrests Hubby for playing Bo-peep under the door. Then he goes to arrest Wifey. Each gets into the other's room and sees his or her photograph on the dressing table. With a cry of joy they clinch as they meet in the bathroom, and when the detective interferes they drown him in the tub.

It is our aim to make this department as complete as possible, although to do this, we must have the co-operation of all the manufacturers of film in the United States. If brief stories of the films you are releasing this week are not contained in this department, it must be due to the fact that you have not supplied us with synopsis sheets. In that case please see that we are advised of your film titles and release dates, and furnished with a brief synopsis of the story. This department is intended for every film manufacturer, whether he uses our advertising pages or not.



The Roughneck—(Three Reels)—Lubin—July 20.—Featuring George Routh and Evelyn Page. Larry Grady, a roughneck, is willed by his former employer a steam yacht on condition he use it to make his own living by chartering it. John Calkins, a manufacturer of firearms, hears that Luis Fernandez, a Santa Bana revolutionist, is in this country to buy arms and through Mary, his daughter, Calkins manages to meet Fernandez and lands his order for the firearms. On account of the embargo they decide to charter a yacht to carry the guns to Santa Bana and accordingly they arrange terms with Larry, explaining to him that they want to use his yacht for a pleasure cruise and telling him that Mary, who he some time before rescued from drowning, is going. Larry discovers that Fernandez has the firearms on the boat and tells him that they are going to turn around and go back. Larry is thrown overboard by Fernandez's crew and swims to shore, where he sights an American warship in the bay and signals them that the Americans in that city are in danger. Fernandez is trying to force Mary to marry him when the Americans arrive and rescue both Mary and her father.

Aunt Bill—Vim—July 20.—Featuring Babe Hardy and Billy Ruge. Plump receives a letter stating that his wife's unknown and wealthy aunt is to pay them a visit. Plump tells his friends at the club of the good things to come and they plan that one of them shall dress up and pose as the wealthy aunt. Plump's best friend overhears the plot and informs Plump of the impending deception. The real aunt appears sooner than expected and Plump and Runt, thinking she is the impersonator, lead her the life of a dog and at last, driven wild by her relatives' unexplainable conduct, aunty gathers her clothes and steals out and meets the bogus aunt. Explanations ensue, but to no avail, for the now thoroughly disgusted lady tears up the $10,000 check and departs, leaving her would-be heirs frozen with disappointment.

Sibyl's Scenario—(Three Reels)—Knickerbocker—July 21.—Featuring Marie Empress, Philo McCullough and Lucile Piets. Mercedes Gonzales, a Spanish cabaret dancer, learns by telephone that her daughter, Bernice, has been kidnaped by James Harper, a wealthy clubman. The information is given out by an old nurse, named Mary, who has reared the girl in ignorance of her mother. Harper's accomplice repents and brings the girl back. She overhears enough to send her to the city in search of her mother. Meanwhile Mercedes, disguised as a boy, breaks into Harper's apartments and is captured by his Oriental servant, Carib. Carib confesses that he, too, hates his master, and they plot to have him shanghaied. All goes well with the exception that Harper is drowned. Mercedes and her daughter are united.

Help! Help!—Vim—July 21.—Featuring Robert Burns and Walter Stull. Pokes becomes a hero in the eyes of Ethel when he frightens Robin away from her side and he is getting away with a great amount of cheap talk concerning his ability as a fighter when Jabbs strolls along and walks away with Ethel. Pokes, thirsting for revenge, secures the services of a professional strong arm to give Jabbs a well-deserved beating and not knowing Jabbs' name merely tells the agent to beat up the man with the mustache sitting on Ethel's porch. Robin has also hired a man to give Pokes a beating, also giving him the same instructions as to the man with the musache. Jabbs, who is a member of the Strong Arm Club, is sent out on the second order, little knowing that he is looking for himself. When Norton, who is Robin's agent, and Jabbs arrive at Ethel's house they find Pokes and as he has a mustache they go after him, but Pokes turns and routs both of the thugs only to find that after all his strenuous fighting Ethel now thinks him too rough and gives her affections to gentle-hearted Robin.

The Grouch—(Three Reels)—Essanay—July 22.—Featuring Harry Beaumont, Harry Dunkinson and Virginia Bowker. Dr. Bradley has been trying without success to amputate Peter Dixon's grouch. Peter is the original hard shell crab, and his contracting business suffers. When Jimmie Bradley, the doctor's son, comes home from college with a commercial education, friends try to get him the position of office manager for Dixon. On the mayor's recommendation Dixon gives him a trial. He effects a complete change in the office and in Dixon. The grouch permits himself to be taught golf and startles his wife and daughter by his change in demeanor and attire. Suspicious, they follow him to the country club and find him gaily chatting with a number of girls. There is a scene and Jimmie is discharged in front of everybody. But Mrs. Dixon, Helen and Jimmie are contented, nevertheless, the latter two for more than one reason.

The "war" in the news films. The first picture, from the Pathe Weekly, shows the Illinois militia pledging their allegiance to the country as they were mustered in to the regular service; the second shows Pathe's view of one of Uncle Sam's Connecticut coast batteries at practice. On the right the Mutual Weekly shows New York's seventh regiment on their way down Broadway to entrain for the border.

Americans After All—LUBIN—JULY 22.—Featuring an all-star cast. Four members of a German street band in a small town are married to women of other nationalities. Wurst is married to an Irishwoman, Kleine to an Irishwoman, Muller to a Frenchwoman and Keller to an Italian. When it becomes known that Ireland has espoused the cause of England in the war of the nations and that Italy has declared war, the disputes that follow lead to a fight and the members of the band make their getaway and find temporary lodgings in boxes and barrels away from their irate wives. Later, however, the wives come to the conclusion that, base as these German husbands are, they are, after all, their husbands and they appeal to the police to assist them in finding them. The police, fearful that they are German spies, arrest them and matters are at a crisis when Marie Wurst and Peter Kleine solve the problem, the four Germans shall become American citizens and the entire party proceed to the City Hall, where the first papers are taken out.

Shooting Up the Movies—SELIG—JULY 22.—Featuring Tom Mix and Victoria Forde. Tom Travis, a bad man, comes to Mexico and sees Vicky, the sheriff's daughter, playing a part for a motion picture company and when the action calls for Vicky to be overcome by the villain and thrown on a horse, Tom blazes away at the villain and the horse upon which Vicky is riding becomes frightened and runs away. Tom rescues her and they fall in love. The sheriff, upon learning that Tom is a bad man, orders him away and in rage Tom shoots up part of the town known as Hell's Half Acre. The sheriff and posse pursue Tom, but on second thought the sheriff decides to make Tom a deputy because of his good work in clearing up the neighborhood; he also decides to make the best of the love match and permits the couple to plight their troth.

Mutual dramas on the way. Top to bottom, "The Land of the Tortilla," "The Taming of Wild Bill" and "The Dancer."

Mutual Pictures

Secret of the Submarine, No. 9—(TWO REELS)—AMERICAN.—Featuring Tom Chatterton and Juanita Hansen. A review appears elsewhere in this issue.

The Dancer—(TWO REELS)—AMERICAN—JULY 17.—Featuring Anna Little and King Clark. Johnny Madden, son of a wealthy farmer, comes to the city to seek his fortune, much against his mother's and sweetheart's wish. He meets and falls in love with Capella, a popular dancer, and soon after they are married. Johnny's mother and sweetheart, Daisy Brown, are not satisfied with his marriage and beg Capella to give him up and, yielding at last to their importunities, Capella leads Johnny to believe she has deserted him and he goes back home. Months pass and his mother, noting his continued despondency, reveals the plot and they immediately start a search for Capella, whom they find in a hospital with a little baby, and in their new joys the past is forgotten.

Jealousy a la Carte—VOGUE—JULY 18.—Featuring Rube Miller. Art and Rube, both employed in the same cafe, are in love with Alice, a Spanish dancer, who is an entertainer in the cafe. They are bitter rivals for her favor and come to blows about her, much to the detriment of the service of the cafe. Madge comes to the cafe as a cashier, and Art and Rube fall for her, and Madge being a flirt, encourages them both. They have a bitter quarrel about her, which winds up in a duel between them with meat cleavers as the weapons. As a climax to their struggles to win her favor, Madge is attracted by the brass buttons of a policeman, and falls in love with him. Alice, too, is charmed with brass buttons, so Madge and Alice leave Art and Rube and go with a couple of strange policemen who happen to come on the scene. Art is so disgusted that he polishes a frying pan, hands it to Rube. Rube then hits Art and himself on the head and they both pass away.

In the Land of the Tortilla—BEAUTY—JULY 19.—Featuring John Gough, John Steppling, John Sheehan and Carol Halloway. Karl Kerner, camera man for the Associated Press, learns that Veeha has been captured by Caperanza and is about to be executed and desiring to get pictures of the execution he goes to the consul in Mexico and through his efforts he gains entrance, but when the Mexican general sees the funny little box with the crank on it he refuses to let him go further, but Karl was determined on getting pictures so with the help of Francisco Caperanza he secures pictures and when the Mexicans spy him they open fire and give chase. But the timely arrival of the Americans save poor Karl and his execution pictures.

Dyspeptic—(TWO REELS)—AMERICAN—JULY 21. Ashton Deerholt and Nita Davis. A review appears elsewhere in this issue.

Jerry's Stratagem—CUB—JULY 21.—Featuring George Ovey. Jerry's persistence wins for him a millionaire's daughter in this comedy. After getting the best of both the police and father, Jerry and his girl ride off on the road to happiness in the stolen patrol wagon.

The Ostrich Tip—(TWO REELS)—CENTAUR—JULY 22.—Featuring William Clifford and Margaret Gibson. The plot of this drama hinges on the vengeful attitude which the deposed head dyer of an ostrich farm takes toward his successor, John Williams. By torture he tries to extract from the latter some valuable dye formulas, but, failing in this, he drags Williams' daughter off to the ostrich pens, where she will be kicked to death. The timely arrival of help saves the girl from this end and the story comes to a happy close, with the girl held fast in her lover's arms.

A Studio Satire—BEAUTY—JULY 23.—Featuring Orral Humphrey. The director and author are talking over the coming film-flam while the actors and actorines patiently wait for their parts. One of the characters purchases a box of Dremo-Pills, every color advertised to produce a different dream. Yellow was for the vampire stuff and one of the actors drops a yellow pill into each of the glasses of grape juice which the director and author are sipping, and while Morpheus takes a hand in it the bunch depart for the beach. The director and author both have funny dreams all about a vampire who captured the director in the face of her lover. When the bunch return from the beach the director and author are still sleeping. They awaken with a start and again the question of a story is broached and the director and author find that they have dreamed fairly good ones and the writer starts banging his typewriter.

For Ten Thousand Bucks—(TWO REELS)—VOGUE—JULY 23.—Featuring Paddy McQuire and Ben Turpin. Bungling Bill and Bloggie steal a letter and Ford machine from the owner and after a series of adventures the two men take refuge in the apartment of Carmen Sapho, an adventuress, who holds them up and searches them. Upon finding the letter and reading the contents she learns that ten thousand is to be shipped from Canarsie station on the limited train that afternoon. She hires the two to go to the station and steal the money, but arriving at Canarsie they are arrested and forced to act as strike-breakerrs during the strike which is now in progress on the road. The events that follow are fast and furious, which finally results in the round-up of the culprits who have stolen the money.

Universal Program

Kill the Umpire—NESTOR—JULY 17.—A baseball comedy with Eddie Lyons and Lee Moran. Mr. Fan has no love for umpires and even the impressive proportions of a new one named Bull Dugan fail to keep him from protesting loudly at decisions. Bull notices Mr. Fan and determines to remember him. After the game they meet face to face in a saloon and as Mr. Fan is a fleet runner he arrives home safely. He accompanies his wife to the home of her school friend only to find that said friend is Bull's wife. Matters are rather strained at first but diplomacy wins, and Mr. Fan is now an ardent admirer of the umpire.

The Crystal's Warning—(Three Reels)—Gold Seal—July 18.—A mystery story laid in Washington and concerning a young man in the diplomatic service. Chadwick is accused of a murder and is about to sign his resignation when the Baron Haddad Haig enters and explains. Hobart Henley, Sydell Dowling, Clara Beyers and Sydney Bracey are in the cast.

The Gentle Art of Burglary—Victor—July 18.—Martin Ellis pays a visit to his friend, Neil Spencer. Spencer has been called out of town, but he leaves a note asking Ellis to enter by the window. That night a burglar and a society girl who is being initiated into a girl's club enter by the same window. Footsteps are heard in the hall and all three take refuge in bed. Ellis and the girl are found in a compromising position, more or less, and to stop all talk Ellis and the girl marry, which they are happy to do, regardless of circumstances. William Garwood and Violet Mersereau are featured.

The Garden of Shadows—(Two Reels)—Laemmle—July 19.—Mary Fuller is featured as the wife who separated from her husband because of her infatuation for another man. After a year they are reunited by the child. Niles Welsh is the father and Violet Axtell the little daughter.

A Bold Bad Breeze—L-Ko—July 19.—Billie Ritchie is here seen as an interloper. His love for the wife of a hot-tempered man is not tempered with discretion and the result is sad for him. A chase over roofs and up and down elevators furnishes most of the excitement and humor.

His Own Story—Big U—July 20.—King Baggot recounts one of his adventures and the visualized story occupies the main portion of this release, which begins with a motion picture director's offer of fifty dollars for a scenario. At the close of the exciting account King Baggot receives the prize.

Dr. Dorsey's Travel Pictures—Powers—July 20.—The second release in this educational series gives many interesting views of India. The Devil Dancers of India is the title of the release and in addition to showing these men practicing their religious service pictures of native animals are given.

The Belle and the Bellhop—(Two Reels)—Victor—July 20.—A comedy playing in a metropolitan hotel which introduces amusing characters and situations. The bellhop is in love with the cigar counter girl and finally he wins her. Pat Rooney is the bellhop.

Lee Blount Goes Home—(Two Reels)—Imp—July 21.—Herbert Rawlinson is seen as a convict serving a long term in prison for another's crime. He receives a letter from his wife, who, with their child, is now reduced to dire poverty. He reviews his past life in a dream that reaches a tragic pitch. Upon awakening he learns that the guilty man has confessed and he is released.

The Come On—Nestor—July 21.—With Jane Gail as a very clever crook who outwits three other crooks. They think her a simple girl from the country and their mistake costs them $5,000. The fact that Mary is a crook comes as a surprise at the end of the picture. Matt Moore, who produced the picture, plays opposite Miss Gail.

The Phone Message—Rex—July 21.—Cast with Ruth Stonehouse, Allen Holubar and Jack Hold, this modern melodrama tells of a rejected suitor who stealthily enters the home of the newly married couple during the husband's absence. Daphne flees to her room and locks the door. This gives her time to 'phone to her husband, who hurries from his office. By the time Lourelton has broken down the door Daphne has escaped to another room. Laurelton is about to break down the door again when the husband arrives. He is accidentally shot by Daphne but the wound is not serious. Laurelton is taken by the police.

She Was Some Vampire—Joker—July 22.—Gale Henry is the dangerous lady of the title. She has two admirers. One sells peanuts and the other is a vender of shoestrings. Detective Binks displays a huge bank-roll in her presence and then the vampire sets her cap for him. Jealousy on the part of the two lovers and bungling on the part of Binks put an end to the vampire's plans and teach him the nobility of loyalty to one's wife.

Midwinter Madness—(Two Reels)—Bison—July 22.—This melodrama is laid in the Northwest. Rosalie is the wife of Jean Lenormand and though she rejected Pierre to marry him, Jean is jealous and fears that Rosalie is still in love with Pierre. The two men fight and Jean is wounded. His condition renders him very irritable and his continued taunts to Rosalie drive her out of the house. She is about to give herself to Pierre when the cries of a baby in a room of the dance hall awaken her to her duty to her own child. She escapes from Pierre and returns to her cabin, where a reconciliation with Jean takes place.

Mutual chuckle-growers soon to appear. From the top, "Art Buys a Chicken," "A Studio Satire," and "For Ten Thousand Bucks."

The Social Slave—Laemmle—July 22.—Written and produced by Jacques Jaccard, this is a modern drama concerning a man whose wife is absorbed with the business of enjoying herself at social affairs. The neglected husband soon grows to love his stenographer, but he will not divorce his wife and realizes that the best way is for him to leave on an extended journey. He tells the stenographer that some day their long denied love will be fulfilled.

Branscombe's Pal—(Two Reels)—Rex—July 23.—This drama tells of a young man whose love for a girl prompts him to prevent a scandal implicating her brother. His sacrifice is misunderstood by the girl and they are not reconciled until his dog carries a letter received from the erstwhile worthless brother, who has now made a man of himself, to Helen. Harold Shaw produced the picture.

Spring Fever—L-Ko—July 23.—Billy Armstrong is the poet whose love for the girl brings down upon him many trials and woes. He engages his rival in combat and even the aid of a sympathetic girl does not put an end to his troubles, for another person appears and there is a duel which furnishes excitement. Gertrude Selby is the girl.

Blue Bird

The Grasp of Greed—(Five Reels)—Bluebird—July 17.—Featuring Louise Lovely. John Meeson, a millionaire publisher, makes a contract with Alice Gordon that she shall submit to his firm all her writings to be paid for at the firm's own estimate. Eustace, his nephew, comes into the office while the old miser is driving his bargain with Alice and when she leaves the nephew upbraids his uncle for his grasping greed and tears up the contract, and for this action old Meeson disinherits the boy. Alice receives an offer from a firm in Australia and old Meeson, learning this sails on the same boat for the antipodes for the purpose of buying out the firm. The ship is wrecked and old Meeson, Alice, a child and two sailors are cast away upon a barren island. Exposure and the miser's advanced age brings him close to death. His conscience smites him and he desires to make a new will, but writing material is not to be had, and Alice allows his last testament to be tattooed on her back. Soon after the old man's death the party is rescued and upon arriving in New York Alice is kidnaped by the publisher's partners, who have learned that Alice possesses old Meeson's last will. Eustace comes to her rescue and because of her love for him Alice undergoes the humiliation of baring her back before a law court, deciding the legality of the will and having come into his inheritance Eustace marries Alice.

Red Feather

The Seekers—(Five Reels)—Red Feather—July 17.—Featuring Flora Parker De Haven. Ruth Heck's brother, Lemuel, is accused of robbing the town's bank and imprisoned and Ruth goes to work as a nurse for an aged minister, whose son John is sheriff. Lemuel escapes from prison and jumps from the train at the very neighborhood where Ruth is employed. He finds her and she aids him to a hiding place in the barn. An old gossip of the village happens to see Ruth and Lemuel and spreads the news that Ruth is entertaining a lover and John, who loves Ruth, becomes jealous and watches her closely. Later he sees her take a bundle to the barn and follows and surprises the pair and recognizes Lemuel as the man wanted by the police. Ruth, however, fells him with a blow and her brother makes good his escape. Later the Seekers have a custom of selecting each year a young man and woman to be married and sent forth to establish a new colony and it happens that John and Ruth are the couple selected. They are married, he still suspecting that she had an affair with the convict. On the way to their new abode Ruth tells John that the convict was her brother and he folds her in his embrace. Paul Byron, Charles Mailes and Edward Hearn support Miss De Haven and Otis Turner directed the picture.

Industry's Biggest Convention Over

M. P. E. L. JOINS NATIONAL ASSOCIATION—COMPLETE STORY OF SESSIONS

THE biggest and most important convention in the history of the motion picture industry has come to a close.

Quite aside from the significant actions that were taken, the big get-together of exhibitors from the length and breadth of the nation was of the utmost importance in its representative attendance and its strong desire to thoroughly organize and to place the industry upon a sound basis. The stabilizing results of the convention just passed will be felt throughout the exhibiting branches of the motion picture business.

Lee A. Ochs, of New York, the League's new president.

"It is the biggest convention and exposition ever held," said Secretary William J. Sweeney, and everyone is agreed with him. Hundreds of prominent exhibitors were present.

Probably the most important single step taken by the League was its amalgamation with the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry newly organized in New York. The election of new officers was also, of course, of the utmost importance. The current opinion is that with Lee A. Ochs at its head the League should take some big strides during the coming year.

Chicago has again proved itself to be the convention city, for the national convention will be held there again in 1917. The permanent headquarters of the League, so far as that has been determined will also be in Chicago, at the office of Executive Secretary William J. Sweeney.

The last issue of MOTOGRAPHY gave a complete report of the actions of the convention up to Thursday morning of the first week—July 13. Following is the story of the remaining days of the big meeting.

The first business to come before the convention on Thursday was the presenting of the report of the Committee on Resolutions offered by Frank J. Rembusch of Indiana. The resolution read as follows:

Uniform Rental Standard

Whereas the motion picture industry as a whole is overreaching, over-producing, and a lack of standards and universally recognized terms, agreements and prices in the buying and rental methods and regulations between the manufacturers and exchange men and the motion picture exhibitors; and furthermore to create a general business basis and general recognized estimate of the possible earnings of the business and to cure the present senseless and ruinous competition which we believe to be caused by a lack of understanding of the true economic basis of this business, and to create a departure of credit, therefore

William J. Sweeney, elected executive secretary.

Be it resolved, That the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America in convention assembled shall create a system, agreement or understanding with the manufacturers of films and other trades whereby a universal standard of the price for film service, the terms and agreements thereof, and a system of credit for the protection of both the exhibitor and manufacturer shall be established. Furthermore to create a plan whereby the program offered to the public will be made more diversified and suitable so that there will be greater interest stimulated in the moving picture business by greater attendance on the part of the public, thereby creating a greater market and larger earnings to the manufacturers, exchange and exhibitor of films. Terms and agreements shall be brought about by a conference between the exhibitor and manufacturer, which committee shall be of such character as this convention shall designate, and act upon the power invested in them by the convention.

The report was adopted as presented.

Constitutional Changes

The report of the Committee on Constitution and By-Laws was then made by Chairman Charles S. Phillips of Wisconsin. It follows in part:

ARTICLE III. OFFICERS.

Eliminate all of Section 3 in Article III and add thereto a new section to read as follows:

Section 3. There shall be a laws and legislative committee composed of five (5) members who shall be elected by the convention.

ARTICLE V. MEETINGS AND VACANCIES.

Section 3. After all expenses of conducting the convention and exposition have been deducted the net profit is to be divided as follows: Sixty per cent to the National League and forty per cent to the state organization conducting the convention.

ARTICLE III. ADMISSION FEES AND DUES.

Section 2. Strike out the words "Two" ($2) and insert in lieu thereof "One" ($1).

ARTICLE IV. COMMITTEES.

Section 1. The committee on credentials and resolutions shall be one member from each state selected by the state delegation.

Committees on ways and means, good and welfare, press and auditing, shall be elected by the delegates in convention assembled.

ARTICLE V. DELEGATES AND ALTERNATES.

Section 1 A is to be eliminated entirely.

Section 2. At the top of page 12 strike out the words "National Vice-President" and add a new section as follows:

Section 2 A. All delegates' credentials shall be sent to the National Secretary of the League at least thirty days prior to the meeting of the National Convention and all delegates' names must be certified by the State President and Secretary.

ARTICLE X. NOMINATIONS AND ELECTION OF OFFICERS.

Insert in the fourth line between the word "convention" and "at" the following: "On the 3rd day of the Annual Convention."

New National Association Presented

It was awfully hot, but a good-sized attendance settled down to business—nearly—on Thursday afternoon.

The first speaker who was given the floor, and with acclaim, was Walter W. Irwin, general manager of V-L-S-E, who was chairman of the New York committee of twelve who drafted the organization of the new National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, created by mutual consent of all concerned to succeed the Motion Picture Board of Trade. Mr. Irwin was also chairman of the committee sent from New York to present the new organization at Chicago for the Convention's sanction. The new association was also planned to give exhibitors a prominent position in the organization and in view of this fact it was expected that the M. P. E. L. would decide to come into the general association of all film interests. This was, by the way, accomplished on Friday.

In his speech Mr. Irwin dwelt on the vital points of the new organization, pointing out its spirit of harmony and consideration for the interests of every phase of the motion picture industry and the necessity for closer organization. He made a strong appeal for the adoption of the new federation. He said, in part:

W. W. Irwin's "Keynote" Speech

I address you solely as a representative of upwards of one hundred and twenty gentlemen from all of the branches of the great art and business of motion pictures, who desire to seek the welfare of the whole industry, and who believe that its protection and promotion can only be brought about through proper and equitable organization.

At a luncheon held in New York on June 8, largely attended by representatives of all branches of the industry, including your national secretary, Mr. Delves, and the officers of various state and local exhibitor organizations, a resolution was unanimously passed in support of the principle of organization.

Remarks and discussion that preceded the passage of this resolution clearly demonstrated that everyone connected with the industry is of one mind upon the proposition that the time has now arrived when an industry so important to the public, so large in the number of its employes, and with such extensive investments can no longer afford to continue devoid of organization for protection and promotion; but, on the contrary, must organize for the purpose of permitting us to present a solid front to our common enemies and to gain the benefit of our combined influence.

In fact, it was recognized that the industry not only owes this duty to itself but to the public in order that the chief means of public amusement and education shall not be hampered or stinted in its development.

Our domestic disputes and trials ought to be settled within the family circle instead of being displayed to those who would take advantage of them. Wherever a question arises which affects the entire industry, our attitude towards it ought to be determined by a majority vote.

It must be self-evident to the exhibitors that neither their national association, nor their state or local associations can be as effective in matters pertaining to the industry as a whole, as they would be if we were working in conjunction with all of the other members of the motion picture family. In any event it has become perfectly apparent to the other branches of the industry that they cannot produce the desired results in behalf of the whole industry, except by the co-operation of every branch, including the exhibitors with their tremendous influence extending over the entire country.

Plan Aids League

The plan instead of attempting to destroy or weaken any existing organization such as the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America, has for its foundation the fostering and strengthening of your organization and of any similar organizations that may come into existence, for it was the belief of the committee that such an organization as yours ought to be aided and encouraged.

This plan proposes that no exhibitor shall become a member of the associated branches of the industry except by joining the Motion Picture League of America, and it is believed that if this association of the branches, this federation, is brought to its proper strength and influence, that there will be no exhibitor, big or little, who will not want to have a voice in the affairs of the whole industry, and who therefore will be compelled to join the Exhibitors' League of America in order to give expression to his views and exert his influence. The plan as outlined by the sub-committee is as follows:

The industry is divided into five classes:

First. The producers.

Second. Your organization. The membership of your organization carries with it membership in the federation for every one of your members who is in good standing with you.

Third. All the equipment and material manufacturers—every one that has to do with the building of our theaters and studios, decorating, upholstering, and furnishing of chairs, and the contractors and architects.

Fourth. The distributors of pictures.

Fifth. Miscellaneous—all those who are not included in the other four classes.

Exhibitors Have Most Directors

It is proposed to have thirty directors, five to each class, excepting the class of your organization, which is to have ten directors.

The reason why it was thought proper and equitable that your association should have ten directors was because it was pointed out as sound logic that, in almost every instance, the purchasers and exchange men are one and the same, and it was thought proper that the exhibitors should have a total representation on the board equal to the combined number representing exchange men and producers.

It is further provided that, in any meeting of this federation, whether the exhibitors have one man present or fifty, that your representatives shall have, on all occasions, votes equal to the total vote of the producers and exchanges.

These directors, five from each class, excepting that of the exhibitors which has ten directors, will be elected from branch committees. It is proposed that you gentlemen may appoint a branch committee of ten, fifty, five hundred or a thousand exhibitors; whatever number you decide upon; that the producers, if there be thirty-five of them in this federation, may have a committee of five, ten, or thirty-five, and the same with other classes. These branch committees shall elect the directors to the federation.

William Isenberg, second vice president.

Peter J. Jeup, treasurer.

It is further proposed that this federation shall only operate or act upon questions affecting the industry as a whole; that is, to keep the federation free from politics; that all questions affecting any branch, your branch for instance, shall be determined within your own branch. Yours shall be your own governing board, and your branch will be controlled absolutely by your own association.

Of the 30 directors, 12 constitute a quorum, and at a meeting of the association, 30 is a quorum. In other words, there is no quorum unless there be in attendance a number equal to the directors provided for in this federation.

It is also proposed that we ask that all of the people who make money from us, and who are a direct part of the industry, such as those who build our theaters and studios, and furnish our chairs, shall recognize that our welfare is their welfare, and that we cannot be injured nor stunted in our development without it being an injury to them, and that they therefore join our federation to prove to us that they are interested in our welfare.

I have merely outlined the fundamentals of this proposition. The work of this committee is not perfect. We do not pretend that it is perfect. The greatest committee that ever worked on a document, the committee which formulated the constitution of the United States was not perfect. The United States constitutition was amended time and again, as you know.

No one can clearly see the future of this industry except along general lines. Let us form a federation of each branch without weakening the other branch, but on the contrary strengthening all. Let us have a federation where we can look each other in the eye and deal with each other as men, with the cards on the table. It has been my good fortune, within the last year, to have come into personal contact with your president, and with the presidents and other officers of state and local organizations, and it is not flattery when I state as a fact that it has been a pleasure to negotiate and deal with them because their cards are always on the table.

They state what they want; moreover, they think what they mean. There are some people who do not think what they mean. Your representatives not only think it but they say it. Now, touching upon the disposition and character of those gentlemen, it is perfectly safe to assume that the character and disposition of the vast majority of exhibitors are the same, or you would not have elected men of that character as officers of your organization. Now, let me say to you that, in the other branches of the industry, there are also men who are honest in their intentions, who do not resort to any fine worded diplomacy, who are not afraid to lay the cards on the table and deal with men as men. And I say, gentlemen, bring this organization to its greatest power and influence, not alone so that you can help yourself, but so that you can be of benefit to the whole industry. Let us bring this federation to such a large membership that there will be no exhibitor who does not want to belong to the federation, who does not want to have a voice and influence in the industry as a whole, but let him gain that voice and influence by joining the organization of his branch and asserting that voice. If all of us are big enough to bury personal animosity and the suspicion that others may have some ulterior motive, see to it that we have the right fundamentals, then, on the presentation of amendments, we can start with the assumption that most men are honest and therefore, such amendments, when made, will be just and fair to all alike.

Seabury Speaks

W. N. Seabury, the prominent New York attorney who formerly represented the Motion Picture Board of Trade and who was one of the organizers of the new association, also made a powerful speech in behalf of federation for the purpose of protection against outside invaders.

I want to warn every exhibitor here and every exhibitor in the United States against the so-called social reformers who are in many localities interfering with the motion picture industry without just cause. They are over zealous, many times. Many of these reformers are serious-minded, honest people who do not wish to injure yours or anyone's business. They are working for what they consider the good of the whole community. These people are all right. The reformers I wish to put you on your guard against are those who do not use reason in their investigations or their demands. Resist their attacks with their own weapons—with clean films and upright methods of conducting your business, with the welfare of the community in which you live at heart.

And in the future, beware particularly of political schemers who are bound to make bold attempts to use the power of the screen to their own advantage, just as they now use some portions of the press. The only way in which you can protect yourselves from these outside influences is to organize yourselves into an efficient, closely knit army. Get together. Show them you are "prepared," that you have a powerful organization and your rights will be respected. Organization is the one thing that will put the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America upon its feet and make it the powerful force it deserves to be and is bound to be in the film world and in the world of industry in general.

Mr. Seabury also emphasized among other needs which the national federation meets, the need for a definite budget for the League and for the national film organization itself. He explained how the constitution of the new associataion provides for this important matter.

Lewis J. Selznick spoke briefly regarding the merits of all the forthcoming Clara Kimball Young films.

Marcus Loew, the prominent theater man and exhibitor of New York, was called upon and spoke informally of the dark ages of the industry. He told how the mayor of New York once closed all the picture houses because he saw a few which were unclean. He also strongly favored a close affiliation of all branches of the industry.

Louis Levine, another prominent New York film man, said: "What we need is a constructive plan to place the exhibitors where they belong in reference to the rest of the industry. It is true that the exhibitor must co-operate with the manufacturer if he is to hope for the best."

W. Stephen Bush then paid a tribute to Mr. Irwin and to the open booking policy. Hiram Abrams, president of Paramount, was given "the courtesy of the floor" and displayed rare good judgment in his simple, quiet statement that Paramount was in Chicago forty strong to help the exhibitors.

The convention then decided to name a committee of twenty for the purpose of considering the constitution and by-laws of the new National Association of the Motion Picture Industry and the relations with the other phases of the business which the new association had provided for the Exhibitors' League. The committee, named by President Herrington, was as follows:

Samuel Bullock, Cleveland, chairman; Judge A. P. Tugwell, California; Samuel Trigger, New York; Lee A. Ochs, New York; F. J. Rembusch, Indiana; Chas. Phillips, Wisconsin; Tom Furniss, Minnesota; Wm. J. Sweeney, Illinois; Peter J. Jeup, Michigan; McMillan of Ohio; S. H. Jones of Oklahoma; Bartell of Pennsylvania; Osgood of Massachusetts; O. H. Blank, of Iowa; Isenberg of Mississippi, and Kepper of Florida.

The convention then adjourned for the fourth day and the above committee retired into a session which was destined to endure eight strenuous hours.

Upon the fourth day the resolutions committee was also appointed, as follows: Samuel Bullock, Cleveland, chairman; Judge A. P. Tugwell, Los Angeles; Louis F. Blumenthal, New York; Alfred Hamburger, Chicago, and Dr. S. T. Rhodes of Indiana.

Tax Reduced to One Dollar

On Friday at ten-thirty the "Big League" boys again took their places in Convention field for the fifth "game" of the national series against those persistent opponents, Loose Organization, Business Tobedone and Eagerto Speakers.

President Herrington gaveled the meeting to order and discussion of League constitutional amendments was begun. The per capita tax was reduced from two dollars to one dollar. A gusset was made in the constitution to provide for the entrance of the League into the new National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, formed in New York to supplant the old Motion Picture Board of Trade and presented to the convention by Chairman W. W. Irwin of the committee sent from New York for the purpose.

F. J. Rembusch, Indiana, director.

A motion to elect a convention treasurer to have full charge of expenditures and settlements was laid on the table after considerable discussion, the main objection to the move being that it placed too much power in the hands of one person.

This matter is at present in the hands of the executive committee and a number of men, including President Herrington, spoke against disturbing this arrangement.

It was decided to appoint a committee of five on constitution and by-laws to report at the next annual convention, this committee to be appointed by the president later.

Next was brought forth the report of the committee of twenty which was appointed on Thursday for the purpose of considering the proposition of the entrance of the M. P. E. L. into the new National Association of the Motion Picture Industry. This committee was in session eight strenuous hours, from 4 p. m. Thursday until after midnight. Their decision was as follows: "Resolved, That the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America become a member of and affiliate with the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry."

resolution. The vote was unanimously in favor of it. This was probably the most important step taken at the convention. It meant the desertion of the plan to expand the M. P. E. L. to include all branches of the industry. And, which is more important, it meant the recognition of the power of the exhibitor by the other branches and a big step toward the complete organization and harmonizing of the entire industry. The National Association of the Motion Picture Industry is now a complete and workable organization.

In the constitution of the National Association ten directors from the M. P. E. L. are provided for. The other branches of the industry are given but five. It was moved and carried that these directors be elected later by the convention.

At this point a telegram from John S. Mitchell, president of the Los Angeles Chamber of Commerce, was read. It sent greetings from the city and the 40 studios there. Another wire from Wm. A. Brady of New York was read. "Organize from stem to stern," he said. "Fight the proposed government tax of one-half of one per cent of the gross receipts of theaters. Send resolutions to Washington." C. A. Ellendorf sent a letter also opposing the tax. Discussion then followed as to the best method of registering the convention's opposition to the proposed measure, which has already slid through the House of Representatives.

Walter W. Irwin then appeared in the hall and was called upon. In part he spoke as follows:

This is indeed a happy moment for the whole industry. Very important things have been done here by this convention, particularly the amalgamation with the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry. The whole matter is utterly free from all personal aims and jealousies. Cliques have killed many an organization. If we continue in the spirit you have started the success of the federation is assured.

The greatest influence comes from the exhibitors. They extend from border to border. You know your clientele as neighbors. Many of you are members of your chambers of commerce. So the federation must and will get its vital power from the exhibitors, and this association will see to it that the League is given its proper place. Mr. Brady, Mr. Zukor, Mr. Lasky and all the others are absolutely sincere in wishing to give the exhibitors their proper representation in the Association.

In behalf of the committee from the new Association in New York I want to thank the convention and its delegates for their courtesies.

The Friday afternoon session opened with the presenting of a number of resolutions by the chairman of the resolutions committee.

The first one adopted was to the effect that the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America endorse Wid Gunning's magazine, Wid's.

Legalized Censorship Condemned

It was decided that one exposition each year should be endorsed by the League and that it should refuse to sanction any but the exposition of the National League.

Another resolution was passed requesting the abolishment of all advance deposits by members of the League and the trade and the establishment of a credit system to protect themselves against the fly-by-night showman asking for advance deposits.

It was decided that every delegate accredited to this convention be elected a member of the Branch Committee of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry to represent the interests of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League.

A resolution was unanimously adopted condemning legalized censorship and condemning the action of the small body of film manufacturers who tried to help federal censorship; also condemning the Pathe Company for the sending out of a letter to all exhibitors asking that they support the bill before Congress advocating federal censorship, and that they try to interest their congressmen in having this bill passed.

A resolution that the delegates protest against the tax on the gross receipts of the motion picture theaters on the ground that the tax is out of all proportion to the margin of profits, was adopted, and it was moved and seconded that this motion be put in the form of a telegram and sent to the United States Senate.

Another resolution was passed to the effect that the League go on record against the condition whereby the exhibitor is compelled to run a serial for the entire course when it does not come up to standard, and the privilege be given the exhibitor to cancel said serial when he pleases.

Directors in National Association Elected

Nominations were then made for the members of the Board of Directors to represent the exhibitors in the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry. A ballot was taken, which resulted as follows:

	Votes
Thomas Furniss, Minnesota	100
Samuel Trigger, New York	93
Maurice A. Choynski, Illinois	90
Charles H. Phillips, Wisconsin	89
Fred Herrington, Pennsylvania	85
Frank J. Rembusch, Indiana	84
Alexander P. Tugwell, California	79
Louis F. Blumenthal, New York	72
Peter J. Jeup, Michigan	70
Louis L. Levine, New York	62

Reports of the officers were then read. President Herrington called attention to the growth of the League as shown by the San Francisco convention a year ago, at which representatives from only five states were present and not more than seven delegates came from east of the Rockies, and the present convention which shows that the organization is far stronger than it has ever been in its history.

At the conclusion of this report a rising vote of thanks was extended to President Herrington for his report and his work during the past year.

The secretary and treasurer's reports were then read and it was moved and seconded that they be referred to the auditing committee.

Officers Nominated

The nominations for the election of officers was the next business taken up.

The nominations were made by states and resulted as follows:

California	Herrington
Florida	Stand with the majority
Illinois	Ochs
Indiana	Rembusch
Iowa	Ochs
Michigan	Herrington
Missouri	Ochs
Minnesota	Ochs
Mississippi	Ochs
Massachusetts	Ochs
New York	Ochs
Oklahoma	Ochs
Ohio	Herrington
Pennsylvania	Herrington
Wisconsin	Passed

Mr. Rembusch and Mr. Herrington then withdrew in favor of Lee A. Ochs of New York and by a rising vote it was decided that Mr. Ochs was unanimously elected president, and three cheers were given for the new League head.

The nominations for the other officers resulted in every case in one vote for each, as follows: First vice-president, Alexander P. Tugwell, of California; second vice-president, Will Isenberg, Mississippi; secretary, William J. Sweeney, Illinois; and treasurer, Peter J. Jeup, Michigan.

Lee A. Ochs was then called to the chair and gave a short talk on what he desired to do for the League as president.

At the Saturday morning session the exhibitors were addressed by William A. Brady, of New York.

At the conclusion of the speech, which is given on another page in this issue, a rising vote of thanks and three cheers were given to Mr. Brady.

The Commission on Resolutions and the Board of Directors then went into session with Mr. Brady.

The first action of the afternoon session was a motion that the former motion regarding the sending of the telegram to Washington be rescinded and the plan suggested by Mr. Brady be followed, which was that each state send a telegram to the Senate condemning the tax on the motion picture theaters, and that each state get its representative to take action on this matter.

The new officers of the League were then installed and the president appointed the following committees:

Executive Committee: Besides the officers, this committee is made up of Thomas Furniss, Minnesota; Ernest Horstman, Massachusetts; Alfred Hamburger, Illinois, and Samuel Trigger, New York.

Law and Constitution Committee: Charles Phillips, Wisconsin; C. E. Glamann, Kansas; B. H. Zerr, Pennsylvania; C. A. McGowan, Ohio; and A. H. Blank, Iowa.

Grievance Committee: Samuel Bullock, Ohio; Cane Kettler, Jr., Florida; A. J. Bartelle, Pennsylvania; James Gilosky, Minnesota; and John Manheimer, New York.

The sixth national convention then adjourned sine die.

"Ads Shouldn't Affect 'Stories'"

Sidney E. Abel, in behalf of V-L-S-E Incorporated, gathered together a company of Chicago newspaper critics and representatives of a number of the trade journals of New York and Chicago for a luncheon at the Chicago Athletic Association Wednesday of convention week.

The object of the luncheon was for the purpose of extending to the representatives of the press the open hand of hospitality from the Chicago office of V-L-S-E.

Wid Gunning of Wid's said that the secret of success of motion picture producers in the future is to make fewer pictures and make them better, and prevail upon the exhibitors to run these pictures three or four days instead of one, thereby making more money for themselves as well as the exchanges.

E. L. Masters, V-L-S-E advertising manager, said "The newspapers should entirely divorce their editorial columns from their advertising columns, and advertisers should not expect to receive free publicity in proportion to their paid space. We all want publicity, but editors want to and always will print the kind of stuff that is real news, and it is up to the producers to supply the right kind of material. Advertising is legitimate news in itself, and no newspaper should subsidize one news column for another. This may sound like heresy, but it is the attitude that is going to come among producers."

League Branch Elects Officers

The Northeastern District of Ohio Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America has elected the following officers: B. J. Sawyer, president; Henry Lustig, vice-president; C. A. Megown, secretary; E. Mohrer, treasurer.

The following were the delegates to the national convention in Chicago, July 10 to 18: Samuel Bullock, W. J. Slimm, C. A. Megown, W. H. Horsley, S. J. Deutsch; alternates, Henry Lustig, B. J. Sawyer, J. H. Simpson, George Heinbuch and Ernest E. Schwartz.

Chicago Goes Star Gazing

FILM EXPOSITION A RECORD-BREAKING SUCCESS FROM EVERY STANDPOINT

WITH the Twentieth Century once again relegated to its duty of carrying ordinary passengers and not glorified by the presence of a bevy of moving picture stars each day, the "fans" triumphantly telling of all the stars with whom they shook hands and displaying the autographs they secured, the stars themselves once more posing before the camera instead of the cheering throngs of their admirers, the manufacturers delighted with the thousands of visitors who attended their exposition, and the exhibitors happy in the realization of work well done in their convention, the 1916 Exposition of the Moving Picture Industry has passed into history.

Every day and every night, beginning with Wednesday night, July 12, Chicago film fans, and this term seems to include the larger part of Chicago's population, thronged the Coliseum, eager to gaze on their beloved heroes and heroines of screen romance, to touch their hands, to speak to them. And when the players were too busy playing in pictures to visit Chicago, the "fans" gazed on their painted portraits and gathered armfuls of photographs and other souvenirs presented at the various booths.

Wednesday evening, "Essanay Night," started the Exposition in a promising manner. The players were there and their admirers were there. Long before nine o'clock the aisles leading to the Essanay and General Film booths were packed with spectators. Edna Mayo, Henry B. Walthall and Sidney Ainsworth called forth comments on their "Mary Page" story. Nell Craig and Marguerite Clayton shook hands with their admirers. V. R. Day and Ben W. Beadell, in charge of the booth, introduced the players to the audience. Those present included almost the entire Essanay roll call.

Thursday was "Clara Kimball Young" day, and Miss Young, seated in the Central Film Company booth, met and in a gracious, unaffected manner, conversed with the many admirers who came forward to express their admiration for her and appreciation for her work. She held court in the afternoon and evening.

Friday was Metro day, but the Metro stars are such busy people that the trip to Chicago could not be arranged, to the great disappointment of their friends. The Metro booth, beautifully and elaborately designed, was one of the most popular on the floor, and the Hawaiian musicians held a constant audience in the aisles about the booth, while the Metro parrots above and the ducklings in the tiny garden helped entertain the visitors.

For a number of people, Saturday, July 15, is marked in red letters. On that day they saw Mary Pickford in real life. Perhaps the most remarkable demonstration of the week was the reception given this little girl, both in the afternoon and evening. All Chicago, but especially Chicago's children, turned to the little actress in sincere affection, an example of the power of personality as the screen presents it. The Paramount booth also on that day was honored by another popular "Famous Player," Pauline Frederick.

Rose Tapley presided in the Vitagraph booth every day and evening of the exposition, greeted her many friends and autographed photographs for them. On Sunday, Vitagraph day, she was assisted by Harry Morey and Edith Storey, while Lillian Walker arrived on Monday. A feature of the Vitagraph booth was the introduction, on a very small "Trans-lux" daylight screen, of the leading Vitagraph players. Among these were E. H. Sothern, the Shakespearean star, soon to be seen in Vitagraph pictures.

On Monday, Alice Brady, World star, held a conference with picture-struck girls in the Herald booth. The benefit of her experience and her knowledge of film conditions she gave to the would-be actresses who sought her advice. While Monday was officially her "day," Miss Brady appeared in the World booth on other occasions graciously to greet her admirers.

"Peerless, fearless Pearl" White breezed into the Pathe booth Monday afternoon and presented souvenir mirrors to the "fans" who formed a compact mass about the booth to see the daring creature who thinks nothing of risking her life, "just like that," to the click of the camera. Tom Moore was another Pathe star who materialized and held a reception in the Pathe booth.

Harry Watson, in his "Musty Suffer" make-up, gave the audiencec a chance to watch him act, assisted by his musicians, on a built-up, roped-in platform.

The trite old phrase, "a sea of faces," applies without any qualifications to the closing night of the exposition. The sea penetrated into every nook and corner, splashed up in waves that threatened the breakwaters around the booths where a screen luminary shone, overflowed upstairs into the swirl of the free dance hall.

It was Universal night. Petite and tired Violet Mersereau was the only Universalite to warrant the name. The de Coriche sisters were Universal attractions in the afternoon. Lillian Walker dimpled from the Vitagraph booth, Nell Craig was the Essanay attraction, Wallace MacDonald, who plays opposite Mary Miles Minter at the American Santa Barbara studios, autographed powder puffs bearing the little star's picture in the Mutual booth. MacDonald's visit to the exposition was arranged by R. R. Nehls of the American company in Chicago. Rose Tapley, Vitagraph, directed Louise Murray, the 16-year-old girl who won the exposition "Beauty Contest," in a play which was filmed before the crowds of fans. Miss Tapley and Miss Walker appeared at Hamburger's V. L. S. E. Theater on Wednesday.

Bluebird gave away a doll by means of free "chances." It was won by Robert Ascher, a lucky Chicago four-year-old.

Summing up the whole exposition, the consensus of opinion is that it surpassed any other show the picture industry has seen. "We surely got the crowds," said William J. Sweeney, "and I think the show is bigger and better even than the first one held in New York three years ago. The manufacturers are satisfied too."

Ex-president Fred J. Herrington of the League also stated to MOTOGRAPHY that without a doubt the 1916 exposition was the biggest thing of its kind ever held.

Director Jack Dillon of the Vogue-Mutual producing corps is putting on a comedy in a large department store.

It is conservatively estimated that more than one hundred thousand people saw these exhibits at th e sixth National Exhibition in Chicago, July 12 to 18.

Enter President Lee A. Ochs

FACTS ABOUT THE LEAGUE'S NEW LEADING MAN AND WHAT HE STANDS FOR

THE theory that "nobody loves a fat man" was exploded at the convention of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America when a veritable landslide put Lee A. Ochs of New York into the presidential chair. There were only two other candidates for the office, Fred Herrington of Pennsylvania and Frank Rembusch of Indiana, and they quickly withdrew, in public spirited and unselfish manner, in favor of Mr. Ochs, making the election unanimous.

The new president has spent all of his business life in theater work of the legitimate and moving picture variety, and is well qualified to handle in an understanding manner all the problems which will come to him with his new dignity. He was born in Cincinnati, Ohio, and at an early age moved to Chicago and was educated in the public schools of that city. After completing his high school course he attended the Packard University of New York, and immediately after graduation started a company devoted to legitimate theater enterprises, making theatrical bookings and so forth. He was one of those who blazed early trails in the moving picture business and has devoted nine years to this work with such success that he now owns five theaters in New York: the Costello, Concourse, Fordham, Grand and West End.

Mr. Ochs confesses to being married and having a small family of one boy and one girl, of whom he is very proud.

President Ochs stands ready to throw himself heart and soul into the work of the League and is very ambitious to bring the Motion Picture League of America up to one hundred per cent efficiency during his regime, and has chosen for his slogan a closer affiliation of the entire industry.

One of the first steps he is going to take under his new office is to try to get the candidates for the presidency of the United States to make a definite statement as to how they stand on federal censorship. He believes that this is just as important as any other point in their platform and that they can be forced into showing clearly their standing on this subject through the efforts of the League.

There were many rumors afloat around the convention to the effect that the new president was connected with a film exchange and a manufacturing company or was contemplating such an affiliation. Mr. Ochs emphatically denied that he was in any way directly or indirectly connected with the moving picture industry from any but the exhibiting end of the game, and that he never expected to be.

Another demand which Mr. Ochs makes is a square deal by the trade papers, and he stated that if the trade papers will not give the exhibitors what they want then the exhibitors will start a paper of their own which will give them what they want. While he does not now advocate this move he does desire fair treatment by the trade papers and would force them to give it. He claims that as much attention should be given to the exhibitors as to the manufacturers; that all the exhibitors ask is real service in the form of true statements of affairs and a true criticism of pictures. The exhibitors do not desire the trade papers to be knockers but do ask that a true statement be given regarding a picture which is poor or off color with no glossing over of the subject always in favor of the manufacturer, who is the advertiser.

Another subject upon which Mr. Ochs feels strongly is open booking, and he is going to work hard toward this end which he believes can be accomplished if the exhibitors will help him in the matter.

He also promises the members of the League that he will keep them fully informed as to what is happening in the market.

Mr. Ochs comes to the chair full of ambition for the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America and is anxious to make it a bigger and better organization, one of which every member will be proud. Here is wishing him success, and it is hoped that every member of the organization will stand back of and work with their newly appointed president.

Pathe Head at Exposition

J. A. Berst, vice-president and general manager of Pathe Exchange, Inc., ex-Chicagoan, and now one of the big figures of the motion picture industry, since he represents not one, but many producing organizations, was in Chicago for the exposition.

He was fairly bubbling over with big new plans for making the Pathe organization bigger and better than it already is. First of all came his announcement that greater activity would be noted almost immediately on the part of Pathe. Instead of one big feature a month there are to be three Gold Rooster productions of five, six or perhaps even eight reels. And these additional features are to be made by better directors, from better stories and feature more prominent stars than ever before. The new schedule of releases goes into effect the latter part of August or the first of September.

Right on top of this announcement Mr. Berst made another that will interest every film fan. The Thanhouser brand will soon be numbered among Pathe releases. Up till the last few weeks Thanhouser films were a part of the Mutual program but now Edwin Thanhouser is making some surprising multiple reel subjects that are to be given to exhibitors through Pathe Film Exchanges.

"And then there's the fashion films," casually suggested Mr. Berst, referring to the new departure soon to be inaugurated, of showing the very latest in women's fashions on the screen. In addition to the presentation of the newest in women's wear in the picture theaters, newspapers all over the country are going to have an opportunity of presenting pictures and descriptions of the same frocks to their readers, and certain stores in the larger cities will actually display the garments themselves, which are worn by the models in the picture. "This fashion picture," explained Mr. Berst, "will be made under the personal supervision of Miss Florence Rose, until a few weeks ago editor of L'Art de la Mode and editor of the fashion pages of the New York Evening Mail and the New York Globe."

Mr. Berst spoke at the banquet of the Exhibitors' League of America last Monday and returned to New York on Tuesday, taking back with him Miss Pearl White, who was one of the attractions at the Pathe booth at the exposition.

Exhibitors at Convention Banquet

"And a lovely time was had by all" at the banquet given for the delegates, alternates and guests of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America at the Hotel Sherman. The banquet started at midnight, and it is whispered that the banqueters rambled home about 5 a. m. Tired? Yes, but happy!

The moving picture stars and some real legitimate stars were the guests of honor. Seated at the center table which was profusely decorated with American Beauty roses might be seen Alice Brady of the World Film Corporation; Lillian Walker and Rose Tapley of the Vitagraph Company; Pearl White and Tom Moore of Pathe; Harry Watson of Kleine; and Nell Craig, Bryant Washburn, Dick Travers, Henry Walthall, Ernest Maupin and Marguerite Clayton of the Essanay.

Charlotte Greenwood of the So Long Letty Company and Tom Powers of Mr. Lazarus fame represented the "legit."

W. Stephen Bush of the Moving Picture World acted as toastmaster and called upon W. R. Moss, representing the Chicago Association of Commerce; former President Herrington of Pittsburgh; Judge A. P. Tugwell of Los Angeles; Robert R. Levy of Chicago; Alfred Hamburger of Chicago; Samuel Trigger of New York; George Henry of Chicago; Fred Schaefer of Chicago; and William Sweeney of Chicago.

Exhibitors Entertained by Chicago Paper

A complimentary performance of "Mr. Lazarus," the current attraction at Chicago's Princess Theater, was given on the night of July 16, or rather the morning of July 17, to the convention delegates by the Chicago Herald. The entertainment was planned by H. C. Holah, motion picture manager for the newspaper and former Chicago Pathe manager. The show was begun at midnight. Nearly 1,000 exhibitors and film men were present.

Henry Kernan, who is now directing for the Mutual-Vogue forces, was at one time an architect.

Epidemic Hits Metropolitan Houses

THEATERS CLOSE—EXCHANGES SHARE BURDEN

THE epidemic of infantile paralysis in New York has become a very serious matter with metropolitan exhibitors. All children under 16 years of age have been debarred from all theaters. Efforts to have the age limit lowered from 16 to 12 years have met with no success, the License Commissioner and the Health Department declaring that the present regulation is absolutely necessary. Upon last reports more than 450 houses had closed their doors.

On the other hand, the plea of the exhibitors that the film exchanges bear some of the burden has been answered by a general reduction of film rental rates. The exchange men, after a decisive meeting, decided that a universal lowering of rates could not be granted. However, it was agreed to take up the case of each exhibitor personally, granting a reduction to meet the individual requirement. At present, reductions ranging from 10 to 50 per cent obtain. At the New York branch of the Exhibitors' League it was declared that the concessions of the exchanges following the request made by the league at a meeting called by Lee A. Ochs just before leaving for the Chicago convention, were on the whole satisfactory, and that the stress had been materially lightened.

The plague has caused the closing of a few more theaters in Brooklyn and in the lower part of New York, but the percentage is very small compared with the number that closed during the first week of the health ordinance.

At Coney Island and other out-of-town resorts the dispute with the health authorities resolved itself into a question of whether those open-air houses where refreshments are served, but no admission fee charged, should come under the letter of the law.

Half a dozen proprietors of moving picture shows, who were warned of the restrictions by policemen on post, visited the station house at Coney at intervals during the course of the week seeking advice and a reasonable interpretation of the law. In the first place, they said, their picture shows were free and most of the performances were held almost in the open air, without even a curtain between the street front entrance and the sidewalk. In the second place, they could not understand how they could provide refreshments, beer and frankfurters for the parents and deprive the children of pop corn, peanuts and ice cream cones when all comers claimed the right to sit at the tables and order what they wanted.

It was argued that moving pictures were merely incidental entertainment anyhow, and even if it were stopped that would not lessen the supposed danger of infant paralysis. Moreover, when the rain came at the close of an unusually cloudy day family parties sought refuge in these places, which are without doors, and it was more than the waiters could manage to keep them off the pavilion floor.

Clearly, the undertaking was not a great deal different from trying to keep children off of the streets and street cars.

Captain Linden was quick to see that such a proposition was unreasonable, if not quite impossible. And inasmuch as the moving picture men did not wish to defy the order if a remedy could be found they were given the assurance they would not be arrested except for flagrant and obvious violation of the law.

A delegation from the Associated Motion Picture Exhibitors of Brooklyn, including William Brandt, executive secretary, early in the week asked the Public Service Commission to permit the Edison Electric Illuminating Company of Brooklyn to make a reduction in rates for current used by motion picture houses.

The delegation was informed that the Public Service Commission's law prohibits discrimination in rates and that the Commission is powerless to permit the electric company to make such a reduction unless it is made uniform and available to all consumers in the same class. Mr. Brandt was also advised that if the Edison Company should make application to the Commission to put into effect a new tariff providing for a reduction in rates that is legal the Public Service Commission will undoubtedly give it favorable consideration.

Fight! Mr. Exhibitor, Fight!

DEMAND FAIRER LEGISLATION AND CLEANER PICTURES

William A. Brady's address to the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League ofAmerica at the Chicago Convention.

THE first theatrical organization took place about 1890 in the Madison Square Garden Theater in New York City. At that time there was no theatrical man's note in the United States that was worth the paper it was written on.

We were looked upon as vagabonds, strolling players. Since that time the industry in the United States has grown until now it represents the fourth or fifth greatest industry in the United States. In 1890 it was ruined by a clique which lived about three months.

Eight years after that another organization was formed, known as the Theatrical Producing Managers' Association and for a time it represented every branch of the theatrical industry in the United States. People in the motion picture industry at that time had just attempted to have passed at Washington a bill which permitted them to appropriate any successful stage play without the formality of paying for it. The question of copyright came up. A bill was introduced in congress with a joker in it: to turn any play into a picture and be forced to pay a fine of only $100 in order to use that play. It was simply a fight of two classes of people in the theatrical business and another. A number of us went to Washington. Five or six prominent men headed by Augustus Thomas, George Broadhurst and other men of national reputation, in just an hour licked that legislation to a finish and the senate committee asked how we wanted the bill arranged. Now, I am just bringing this thing up to show you the value of organization.

The child labor bill which shut children out in twenty-three states in the United States, we killed. It was one thing after another until in this country we had respect.

One day at a meeting of the Theatrical Managers' Association, twenty-four of the members walked out because they could not have their own way. They were only there for their own personal interests and in a few months the association went out of business. I was the president of the association at that time. In two months they started another association. But what has happened to that national association? It has not had an election in two years.

Get After Congress

And I tell you that unless this present bill before the Senate is headed off the motion picture and legitimate interests will be paying out millions and millions of dollars, for you will have to give up to the government one-half of one per cent of your gross receipts, and that bill was rushed through Congress without referring it to a committee. It is a custom that when a bill is offered which may work a hardship on any person or industry, it is referred to a committee which is authorized to hear both sides of the question.

Did they take a percentage of the baseball games? No. Did they take a percentage of the attendance at the churches? No. Did they take a percentage of the attendance at any other public gathering in the United States of America?

Last week I was called into a conference by Henry Morgenthau, President Wilson's campaign manager. Mr. Morgenthau said, "Mr. Brady, you are well known as a supporter of Mr. Wilson. Would you suggest how we can use the field of motion pictures in this campaign?" I said to him I can suggest one scheme whereby motion pictures can be made to help you. Have President Wilson make a series of kindergarten speeches. Let him make them and we will illustrate what he is talking about and in one month you can have President Wilson in every water tank town and he can address all the people in every part of the United States personally. Now I am bringing this question to you so that you people will know that you possess in yourselves the might of presenting any question or fight any question that is brought up to hurt you exactly the same way as the president could address every man and woman in the United States by motion pictures. Gentlemen, send a committee to Washington. Demand a hearing. Telegraph to President Wilson, to Champ Clark. Telegraph to your senator, to your congressman, demand a hearing. We are human beings, business men, and we deserve square treatment.

Fight censorship. Don't leave the fight for the state of Ohio; don't let the men in Idaho fight by themselves. Have one go to Tallahassee, and one go to Phoenix, Arizona, and say we stand here representing the motion picture business in the United States, nationally—not locally. The future of pictures does not depend upon any one state, but upon the whole country. And it depends upon education. Soon, the highest class schools and colleges in the United States will include among their necessary equipment a motion picture machine and a library of motion picture records and it is upon the producer rests the burden. He can provide entertainment with education. He can make motion pictures as great as the newspaper or the church.

"For God's Sake, Stand for Cleanliness"

Be your own censors. Don't put anything on your screen that you don't want your own daughter or your own child to see. I introduce into your organization a decree that any man who maliciously makes a dirty picture be ostracised—expelled. For God's sake, stand for cleanliness. Stand for decency. Never in the history of the theatrical business has there been a period in the theater business in the United States in which salacious plays were produced that lasted over two or three months, and the producers suffered for it afterward. You may present a dirty picture on Tuesday night, but you will hurt your clean pictures for the rest of the week. You are not only disgracing yourself in your own community but disgracing the organization.

I came to Chicago with a little girl and I was amazed to see a couple of thousand people at the depot awaiting to see her get off the train. What does she stand for? I refer to Miss Mary Pickford, and she stands for cleanliness.

Now, gentlemen, I come to the most serious part of my talk,—the business part of it. On my way out here I had opportunity to read a Chicago newspaper and in a very large advertisement I read these words, "Death to the Program." I am going to show you how to put the program out of business. What does the program represent? If you run six features a week, you are getting productions which cost at the minimum, $150,000.

The actual cost of these features is not less than $25,000. The man in Peoria, Illinois, who plays Metro, Paramount, Triangle, World—plays them for the first time he is getting material which is costing somebody $150,000 a week, and lo and behold, here comes this Lochinvar who tells us "Put the program out of business." Are you going to depend upon him? Put the program out of business. He did put one program out of business. I like the man, in one way he is one of the most brilliant men that in my thirty years of theatrical work I have ever met. The best trader—keeps his word, when he can and when he wants to, but if you can't pay $30 or $40 a night now to the companies who are putting their business into your hands, what is the result? The product decreases 300 per cent and therefore by the natural law of averages, the price will increase 300 per cent. Therefore, I say to you gentlemen, the program is the spine of the business. These reputable men who are working day and night and who are paying money out on a gamble are doing so to please you also. Stick to the ship that carried you over the danger points until the ship starts to sink, but don't get on another ship that may sink faster than that one.

The motion picture business has been using up material so fast that an alarming condition is going to appear presently. In reading the criticisms of the exhibitors I find one line constantly appearing, "we don't want romance, we want modern stories." There are just so many modern stories. So many things can happen between a woman and two men, or two women and a man. Don't tell your branch man "we don't want romance." Get your public used to it. Get your public used to it so that you can put Dickens, Shakespeare, Thackeray, Tolstoi, etc., before them. You open up to the motion picture industry an enormous field of stories, once you bring them out of the hysteria of Perils of Divorce, The Poor Old Shop Girl, and When Nellie Left Home. I remember when every murderer, divorce, shop-lifter, and every girl who had done something sensational had a play written around them—result, one Saturday night something hit the theater playing these things. Davis and Keogh had twenty-one companies on tour doing these plays and one Saturday night something hit them and the following Monday the twenty-one companies disappeared. Your profession has stepped in and taken that place, but you are doing just the same as Davis and Keogh.

You are afraid to offer the public something pretty. Try to get your public to see something pretty—get the public to go and see the fiction classics, then we can go down to the Astor library and get thousands of wonderful stories. I can't get my boy to read Dickens' "Barnaby Rudge," but if you put it on the screen he will go to see it and will like it. Therefore, the screen properly handled will soon take the place of a library. I went to see Bertha Kalich in one of the Tolstoi stories that I could never read and on the screen I was simply wild about it.

Therefore, I say to you gentlemen, look up, don't look down. Don't let anybody walk on your toes. Fight to a finish. Fight for clean stories—fight the crooked, grafting politicians through your screen. Then you will get attention; then you will ge the representation in Congress you are entitled to and which you ought to have. You will get more by fighting than by watchful waiting. We won't go for Mexico because in Mexico we would be fighting a lot of half starved greasers, but here we have to fight a lot of fat, greasy, miserable grafters, Judas Iscariots, who hold the fat palm of friendship out, while the other is hidden and holds a dirk with which to stab you to the very vitals.

AMERICA PREPARING

Ten-Reel Offering Produced with United States Government's Sanction, Presented by Wm. H. Kemble, Is Unusual

Practically every unit of the fighting forces of the United States is exhibited to the spectator by "America Preparing," the ten-reel offering produced with the sanction of the United States Government officials and presented by Wm. H. Kemble. "America Preparing," which had its first public showing at the Lyric Theater, New York, on Monday, July 10, will doubtless prove a vastly attractive picture to the people of this country.

It is a comprehensive film record of this very important department of the nation's affairs and now when the vast majority are talking "preparedness" the majority should be particularly interested in gaining some idea of the present condition of the military. That such information as this is best obtained from the screen is demonstrated by "America Preparing" which instructs entertainingly.

Since the beginning of the war in Europe the picture-going public has had almost its fill of marching men and heavy-gun firing, so that by this time it is not surprising to see spectators take quite calmly the European war pictures. But it is different with the scenes contained in "America Preparing." The heavy coast defense guns in action thrill one. They here have a personal side and one holds them fondly in a mind which automatically imagines them in action against a force intent upon invading these shores, should such condition ever arise.

The big battleship Texas firing broadsides is another memorable thrill offered by this picture, and there are numbers of other really exciting moments experienced by one who views "America Preparing." In addition to the coast defense guns and the pictures of the superdreadnaughts, the picture gives intimate glimpses of the submarines, the aeroplanes as well as every arm of this country's present army.

The photography, a most important element in an offering of this type, is consistently good, and the various pictures are well assembled. Technically the production is of a high standard. The first five reels are devoted to the Army and the last five to the Navy. The first half of the picture is all of entertaining and interesting, but the real thrills are offered by the second part of the picture. "America Preparing" is a very notworthy production and it seems bound to meet with unusual success.

Ohio Exhibitors' Merger

It is probable that the two powerful rival associations of Ohio motion picture exhibitors having headquarters at Cleveland and Cincinnati, will consolidate very soon. Some time in September or October a convention will be held in Cincinnati to complete the merger, according to a communication received by H. Serkowich, secretary of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of the Cincinnati Chamber of Commerce, from C. A. Megowan of Cleveland, chairman of the executive board of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of Ohio, and Frank Beverstock, of Mansfield, a director of the Cleveland organization.

The new combine expects to remedy with harmony all the evils fostered by rivalry.

Feeling the Convention's Pulse

RED BLOODED NEWS FROM THE HEART OF THE BIG NATIONAL SHOW

MAYOR WILLIAM HALE THOMPSON of Chicago, who had promised to open the Exposition, failed to materialize, but nobody missed him. In fact, owing to the crowds and the combined activities of exhibits, stars, dancing and free picture shows, it is hard to see where a place big enough for "Big Bill" could have been squeezed in.

One of the daily attendants at the convention was M. J. Mendelsohn of New York, proprietor of six houses—the North Star, Park, Morris, Bronx, Belvidere and the Lennox. Instead of returning home on the New York special Mr. Mendelsohn expected to take a run up into Wisconsin for a vacation in the woods.

James B. Clarke, president of Metro, announced that Francis X. Bushman and Beverly Bayne could not interrupt the producing of "Romeo and Juliet"; Mabel Taliaferro was in the midst of "God's Half Acre," and Olga Petrova could not be spared from the production she had under way, therefore Metro day, (Friday, July 14), was almost Metroless. However, Alice Brady, Rose Tapley and the Essanay stars were on hand at the Expo.

According to a reporter on one of the Chicago dailies, John Kunsky, of the Kunsky Theatrical Enterprises, of Detroit, says that up in the City of the Straits people refer to scenarios as "flicker tales."

An effort was made by several of the convention delegates to induce the popular Tom Furniss of Duluth to enter the presidential contest, but Tom backed away when politics was mentioned.

The plutocracy of the films is proved by the fact that the very exclusive, and expensive, Blackstone Hotel played host to scores of visiting film men and women. Paramount, World and Famous Players-Lasky headquartered there. Mary Pickford, Pauline Frederick and Clara Kimball Young were among the stars who hesitated for a short time at the lake front palace.

There were not very many feminine touches to the convention. One of these was Mrs. Marie L. Hume, who came all the way from Gladstone, Michigan. This is a little town in the upper peninsula, at the top of Green Bay.

W. W. Johnston of the International Film Service, issued a convention and exposition supplement to the Chicago Examiner. It contained four pages of news, many pictures of prominent film men, feature stories about motion pictures and about International stars.

It seems that Exhibitor A. P. Brauns, who owns all the picture theaters in Iron Mountain, Michigan, was in Chicago during convention week and knew nothing about the big doings. A Universal man captured him and brought him to the last sessions at the Sherman House.

All the exhibitors thought she was Alice Brady or some other star when Frances Marion strolled into the convention Saturday morning with Harry Reichenbach, World's publicity manager. Miss Marion did gleam on the screen at one time, opposite Mary Pickford in "The Girl of Yesterday." She is now one of World's scenario editors and traveled to Chicago in Miss Pickford's party.

Ben Beadell introduced "a friend from Kansas City" to the chief salesman at the Bartola booth at the Coliseum. Taking the cue the sales specialist launched into a half-hour's exposition and argument regarding how the Bartola organs pull 'em in and "give just the needed touch to your performance." Finally he asked the man how large a house he had. He dropped limply onto an organ seat when "the friend from Kansas City" replied, "House? Why I haven't got a house. I've got a thirteen-room apartment."

J. A. Berst, vice president and general manager of Pathe, attended the last few days of the Chicago Exposition. He brought Pearl White along with him and the latter distributed photographs and souvenirs from the Pathe booth on Monday.

"Please may I see the lady with the big eyes?" said little three-year-old Dorphia Silhanek, as she came to the booth where Clara Kimball Young was receiving her admirers. The baby not only saw the star but had the honor of being photographed with her meanwhile receiving many impulsive hugs and pats from the adored star.

"Moving Picture Hero of My Heart," was the title of a song which the Chicago Morning Telegraph was distributing from its booth.

Did you say souvenirs? Well it was as much as your life was worth to mention the word at the Coliseum for the visitors were simply souvenir mad. They would accept anything and everything and ask for more.

The thirteen cancelled checks belonging to Charlie Chaplin which were displayed in the Mutual booth drew forth many exclamations from the throngs who had never before seen checks made out in such large figures—two were for $5,000, one for $100,000, one for $40,000 and nine for $10,000.

Although the coolest spot to be found was second cousin to an oven and the improvised theater inside the big show was the hottest place in it the films were shown to standing room only every afternoon and evening. It was a free theater and such a novelty was not to be passed by.

The only exhibitor to have a booth at the exposition was Alfred Hamburger, the prominent Chicago theater man. The display was one of the most attractive at the show.

The flower girl at the World booth, Miss Ruth

Williams, really attracted the attention of several film men who talked to her about work in pictures. Her portrait was sketched by J. Leroy Johnston of Amusements magazine.

The aspirations of a number of would-be-film players were realized when Rose Tapley of the Vitagraph Company picked out of the passers-by types to enact a scenario. She directed these players herself in their first appearance before the camera.

A dance was held every night on the second floor of the Coliseum, and this proved one of the most popular spots in the hall.

Musty Suffer suffered some more for the benefit of admiring throngs who surrounded the Kleine booth to watch.

From the Vitagraph booth a miniature picture show was given on a transparent screen with the projector back of it. "Trans Lux" is the name of the new screen and it seems to "work" in great shape, following the statement made some time ago in the Scientific American that such picture-catchers were practical.

In the official program for the National Convention the F. I. L. M. Club of Chicago took a page headed "Best wishes to exhibitors attending the Sixth Annual National Convention at Chicago," and followed by the names of the following club members:

Fifty Paramounters at Convention

Nearly half a hundred Paramounters gravitated to the Blackstone Hotel for the private convention regarding the publicity question in general and the localizing of advertising in particular, with the elimination of waste given special consideration.

Among the big smokes present were Hiram Abrams, president; William L. Sherry, vice-president; James Steele, treasurer; Adolph Zukor, president Famous Players-Lasky Corporation; Jesse L. Lasky; Henry Asher, Boston Paramount manager; Herman Wobber, manager Progressive, California; A. G. Flintom, Kansas City; A. T. Seymour, New York; George Mann, Washington.

Indorse Film for Churches

A resolution indorsing motion pictures of an educational character for churches and public schools was adopted at the Wednesday afternoon session of the national convention in Chicago.

The resolution states in part:

"Resolved, That exchanges shall not lease any piece to a church or public school or others that will interfere with any exhibit without consent of the exhibitor, and that all such leases shall conform to local laws and ordinances."

Vitagraph Comedies on General Program

Pretty locations are one of the pleasing features of "A Cheap Vacation," a Vitagraph single part comedy. The theme is very appropriate for hot weather audiences as it deals with the everlasting question, "Where will we spend our vacation?" Two meek husbands decide to summer at a hotel in the mountains, but their wives soon disillusion them and drag them along to camp.

Here is the Beginning of War

HERE is what war is. And it is safe to make the hazard that the switchboard under your hat will instantly plug that statement in onto the line of Sherman's gentle remark.

The fellow glimpsed in this little bit of still from the Pathe Weekly is acting out the same small but trenchant drama enacted within the past two or three weeks by thousands of the soldiers of the national guard. He has been called from his business with only a few hours notice. All his home and social ties are pulled apart with the real torture of parting heartstrings.

The scenes at the entraining stations the country over were all that fiction and history have described it to be. In spite of the fears that lurked beneath the surface, the men were cheerful in the presence of their wives, mothers, sisters and sweethearts who were courageously choking back emotion that would not remain concealed. The mingled feelings of hundreds of men and women and children waving, weeping, laughing as the trains pulled out wrought an atmosphere super-saturated with the emotions of what war means.

"Can I kiss her, ma'am?" said one veteran who was leaving without kith or kin to bid him godspeed. He didn't know the "ma'am" or the child, but both assented without a moment's hesitation. He gave his rough mustache a careful wipe and lifted the little one for his borrowed good-bye kiss.

The various camera reporters have caught these remarkable scenes of mobilization with all the faithfulness that only the films possess. These celluloid newspapers are now telling every nook and corner of the country just what war means, in so far as it has up to now brought about the breaking of home and business associations and the facing of the newly-made soldiers toward the flag and the front. The picturelet shown here is almost a classic of newspaper cameracraft.

Harmony and Progress as a Convention Result

IF the convention just closed had done nothing else than to weld into one homogeneous structure all the vital interests of the motion picture business it could have claimed a great accomplishment. For the first time in all the history of the industry, the exhibitor, the manufacturer, the distributor and the supply man are united, seated together in common council, prepared to fit the uneven edges of their work into that of their neighbors, and so to secure that perfect cohesion which alone assures efficiency, good business, and profit.

The Motion Picture Board of Trade died of inefficiency. The Motion Picture Exhibitor's League of America lives on, more effective than ever before because of its new affiliations. For its own government it has elected officers whose ability none can question; the records of all of them stand to their credit in the personal knowledge of their fellow members. Everybody knows them, and knows that they are good. For its representation in the councils of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, it has appointed its ten members of the board of directors of that body with keen judgment and a strong sense of their responsibility.

Altogether the convention has been remarkable in point of achievement. The thorough report of the meetings printed in this and last week's issue of Motography bears out that statement and makes it unnecessary to repeat here any of the details. The names and portraits of the officers and the ten directors appear on another page. A glance at them will tell the exhibitor who knows his industry's history that the delegates voted with remarkable wisdom. Every man elected is known from New York to Los Angeles for his untiring devotion to the cause and the work of the League. The election of such men means rewarding their self-sacrificing efforts by giving them more work to do; but they are happiest in that work, and will see that it is well done.

While the convention delegates were working in the July heat with the intensity and application for which the industry's representatives are remarkable, the exposition at the Coliseum was teaching its lessons. The most pessimistic of philosophers must have been convinced, as he watched the vast, perspiring throngs of people eddy about the booths that sheltered the stars of the films, that the lure of the picture is as great as it ever was. Judging from that daily and nightly demonstration, indeed, the public is more devoted to the art today than it was when the attraction of novelty was added to the other charms. The thousands who congested the aisles of the big building knew their favorites and all about them; knew the names of the producers and their directors and talked eagerly about coming releases. They showed, in a word, an enthusiastic interest that the speaking stage never achieved with its public, and that few industries of any kind have attained—the automobile being the only example anywhere near parallel that occurs to us.

In view of this extraordinary interest, and its great value in reassurance to those manufacturers who may have wondered sometimes if the public would maintain its loyalty, it is regrettable that many visitors were disappointed by the nonappearance of their favorite stars.

The fact that most of the players who "turned up missing" were positively promised as features of the exposition does not add grace to the situation. However, it was a good natured crowd, as most crowds are, and few complaints were heard. The only harm done was in the possible thought of the people that picture men do not always keep faith.

Now that the League is provided with an efficient executive secretary, who will be on the job all the time, and has recognized the place of the manufacturers in the industrial unit by joining with them, we expect to see an increase in harmony and progress that will make a wonderful report for the next convention. There is no longer any excuse for sustained misunderstandings and antagonistic attitudes between producer and exhibitor. The association provides a means for the arbitration and settlement of all disputes and disagreements; and better still, it will tend to make such disputes unnecessary by eliminating the misunderstandings that lead to them. Conditions all the way through the trade should be brought much nearer to perfection by the final achievement of an organization that is regarded with favor by all branches of the industry.

We would be unappreciative if we closed this brief note without expressing the thanks of the trade to that little band of men who worked so hard to make the convention and exposition a success, and to establish the fair name of Chicago in the minds of all visitors as the ideal convention city for the motion picture business. We are speaking, of course, of Fred J. Hartmann, secretary of the Convention Committee; George M. Laing, chairman, Chris C. Whelan, secretary, and all the other members of the Press, Entertainment and Reception Committee; Exposition Manager Louis H. Frank; and the various other members of the Executive Committee and its several sub-committees. That these men worked for the sheer love of the cause, and succeeded in remarkable degree, makes this small tribute to them the more sincere.

Although no official action has yet been taken in the matter it seems assured that Chicago will be the convention city next year—and perhaps perpetually. This is as it should be. As we have repeatedly pointed out, Chicago is the industrial and transportation center of the country, and film producing companies are recognizing that fact, and all it means in efficiency by establishing their distributing centers here. It is our belief that a few years more will make Chicago the film heaquarters of the world; and so it is fitting that the annual conclaves of the nation's picture men should continue to gather at the point of easiest access, the center of the country and the coming center of the business.

A Confiscatory Tax

MEMBERS of Congress are not necessarily business men, and to them a tax of one-half of one per cent doubtless seems small. Imposed on a net profit possibly it would not be excessive. As a levy on gross business it is liable to make serious inroads on the legitimate income of the taxee.

The House has passed a measure placing a tax of one-half of one per cent of the gross receipts on all theaters in the United States, which means every picture show from the smallest to the largest. Evidently the congressmen think motion picture exhibiting is a profitable business.

A theater doing a gross business of one hundred dollars a day (which is a pretty good business, by the way) will have to pay a federal tax, if this bill becomes a law, of nearly two hundred dollars a year. It is entirely plausible that his expenses, including film service and all overhead, might reach ninety dollars a day—in fact, we know one instance where this figure is correct. The two hundred dollar tax would mean over six per cent of this exhibitor's income—a pretty big income tax on a small profit.

The smaller exhibitor would be even worse off. With profits dwindled almost to the vanishing point, a half-of-one-per-cent tax on gross receipts is very apt to mean anywhere from a five to a one hundred per cent tax on the profits. In other words, such an impost would confiscate a substantial portion of the average exhibitor's income.

We cannot believe but that the United States Senate will reject this measure if its inequitable and confiscatory nature is properly explained. The theater interests will doubtless be granted a hearing, and it should not be a difficult task to convince the senators of the true situation, since it is so readily demonstrated.

What Theater Men Are Doing

AN OPEN FORUM

This is a department of, by and for exhibitors. We want YOU represented here. Other managers and proprietors of picture theaters want to hear YOUR experiences, your opinions and your advice. Write to this department telling us your story, how you started, how you grew and all about your theater and how you manage it. Mention your advertising methods and your lobby displays. If possible send in photographs of yourself and your house. Address, The Forum, MOTOGRAPHY, Chicago.

"A Glass House"

BY A. R. M. SUTTON
Special Representative of MOTOGRAPHY.

ONE of the finest suburban theaters of Seattle, Washington, is the Majestic of Ballard, J. G. Jonson and W. W. Kastner, owners and managers. It was designed and built by Architect Jonson, and the owners themselves supervised the construction. The interior, with its mural decorations, up-to-date lighting fixtures, and fine furnishings, is unusually attractive.

This house—the Majestic, of Ballard, Washington—has a glass room at either side of the rear of the auditorium, one for mothers with noisy babes, the other for men with smelly smokes. Managers Jonson and Kastner are to be congratulated for their brainy originality and the unique service they render patrons.

The seating capacity of the house is 500. On each side of the auditorium there is a room with glass walls. One side is for the use of mothers with fretting children. They can watch the show from here without the youngsters disturbing the other patrons. The other side is a smoking room where the men can see the pictures and still enjoy their pipes and cigars.

The acoustics were given especial attention by Mr. Jonson in designing the house, with the result that the Majestic is said to have the best in the city. It also boasts one of the completest operating rooms. Two Motiograph projecting machines throw to a screen at a distance of 85 feet at a pitch of 10 feet. A Westinghouse motor converter is used and a double dissolving arc light is part of the equipment.

Although the Majestic has only been operating a few months, the people of Ballard no longer go down town to see the best pictures, knowing that they can see them nearer home; and its managers have the reputation of being the livest and most progressive managers of any suburban theater in the state.

Splendid Orchestras in Seattle Houses

Mischa Guterson and his Russian orchestra, advertised as the highest priced musical organization in the West, have signed up with James Q. Clemmer of the Clemmer theater, Second avenue, Seattle. The orchestra with its leader became one of the strongest drawing cards during its winter's stay at the Coliseum, for which it was imported to Seattle by the Greater Theaters Company. With the Clemmer's fine organ as a background it is making music that is bringing record crowds to that theater. In his advertisements Mr. Clemmer gives the daily musical program and also advertises special Friday concerts with selections by request.

With the going of Mischa Guterson and his Russian orchestra to the Clemmer, Manager Clause S. Jensen of the Coliseum Theater announced the coming of his "Coliseum Greater Orchestra," consisting of twelve men. At its first appearance the afternoon concert was lengthened by several enthusiastic encores. As soon as Manager Jensen became aware of the liking his patrons had manifested for it, he came out and spoke to them.

"The new orchestra is permanently engaged," he said. "I consider it the finest orchestraal organization ever heard here or at any other photoplay theater in western America. It is the largest and its splendid volume, a thing of great importance in a great playhouse like the Coliseum is something I have wanted ever since the house was opened, but never before obtained."

The leader is Leon I. Strashun, first violinist with the Manhattan Grand Opera in New York in 1908-9, at the New York Metropolitan Opera House in 1909-10,

This attractive chromatic scale of femininity, propelled by such a worldly thing as a gas truck, was the striking advertisement employed a short time ago by the Wonderland Theater of Clifton, Indiana, to herald the coming of Parmaount's "Seven Sisters." The Wonderland is managed by Mrs. L. A. Homey, and it is easy to deduct the conclusion that the chairs in her house are never lonesome during working hours.

Overdoing Competition

By M. C. Forbes

Toledo Hippodrome Company, Toledo, Ohio.

In the issue of Motography for June 17, 1916, under heading "Split Reel" Notes for Theater Men, the first paragraph states: "Six pages of the Toledo Times were devoted on a recent Sunday to photoplays and huge broadside ads, etc., etc., . . ."

The same amount of space is devoted to the industry and the business locally every Sunday.

The writer is very willing to admit that he himself with the other exhibitors is going a very strong pace on advertising, in view of the fact that we draw checks to the tune of about ninety cents per inch for space and must do this for the benefit of three papers, each having about the same rate.

This is what comes of not having an exhibitors' organization. Each is trying to out-do the other and as a result, all are suffering more or less while the newspapers reap the harvest.

The same thing applies to films. Each trys to outbid the other on specials and the exchanges know it, so they pit one against the other until the price is settled at a figure which is out of all reason.

The straight consistent program first, last and all the time for this house.

Oregon Men Discuss Censorship

By A. R. M. Sutton.

At a recent meeting of the Oregon Motion Picture Men's Association plans were begun for the presentation of the motion picture censorship problem to the public for its consideration at the city election next year, or even sooner. Abraham Nelson, Portland representative of the Moving Picture World, was appointed chairman of a committee of four to prepare petitions for the institution of an anti-censorship measure. This is in line with the opinion of exhibitors that nothing but confusion can result from the efforts to interpret the censorship ordinance through the medium of the long list of "don'ts" as formulated by Chairman Richards and the members of the Portland Board of Censors.

"Motion picture men believe that the general public is not in favor of having one or a few people decide what is proper for it to see on the screen, and we are preparing to test that public," declares E. J. Myrick, president of the association.

"I have men tell me every day that they are dissatisfied with conditions in Portland and ask why we do not make an effort to secure the same treatment that the industry receives in practically every city in the United States.

"We don't object to regulation; in fact, we invite it, but we do object to the nagging species of censorship Portland is now getting.

"If you violate a traffic ordinance driving across the intersection when the officer on duty commands 'No,' arrest promptly follows. We demand the same treatment. If we show pictures that are not in harmony with public decency, arrest us, take us into court, and there, if found guilty, fine or imprison us.

"Censorship, the kind we are getting, is hurting business. Portland, in its 49 motion picture houses, has an investment of $2,500,000, with an annual payroll of $400,000. Men are afraid to go into the market for big features for fear that the censors will say 'No.' They are afraid to expend money on expansion, and this fear naturally injures the city.

"There is not the co-operation between exhibitor and censor that we have the right to expect. Viewers inspect pictures with the apparent determination to cut something from them.

"The new code of standards, 'the fifty-seven varieties,' promises to do nothing more than confuse the viewers. If this interpretation of the city ordinance, itself a slap at the intelligence of the viewer, were to be adhered to, not a Shakespearean drama could be filmed, and every scene which alludes to the seamy side of life, no matter for what object, would be eliminated.

"Naturally, I am hopeful for a betterment of conditions, but of late they have taken a turn for the worse, and unless a broader-minded spirit is evinced toward the industry I can see no relief but in appealing to the public."

Tell Us Your Good Ideas

Editor Motography:—We are taking considerable interest in your open "Forum" for the exhibitor. In the smaller cities where there is no chance to glean ideas from the exhibitor in competition, your "Forum" could be made an invaluable aid to exhibitors by the interchange of ideas. In the exploitation of pictures, we search the trade papers and the ads of other houses, in other cities, as well as our individual brains for ideas to give "punch" to any picture we deem worthy of extra effort.

If we evolve some good idea here, some thought that brings results, we are glad to exchange it for some fellow-exhibitor's good idea. We also hope the exhibitor in other localities will send his hits to the "Forum" for general use.—J. E. Rickards, Phoenix Amusement Company, Owners of the Columbia and Amuzu Theaters, Phoenix, Arizona; the Iris, at Ray; the National, at Hayden; the Isis, at Florence, and the Juarez, at Sonora, Arizona.

Crowds before one of Loew's theaters in New York, to see the featured personages in Pathe's "The Iron Claw." In the center of the picture from left to right, are M. Ramirez-Torres, manager of the Pathe film producing department, John Dunn of "The Iron Claw" company, Sheldon Lewis, and Edward Jose. These gentlemen may be identified by the fact that the first three wear stiff-brim straw hats, and Mr. Jose sports a Panama. The Loew management report phenomenal records from the big Pathe serial.

A new comedy company was added to the Universal City forces when Director John Steppling arrived to produce pictures featuring "Smiling" Billy Mason.

"Split Reel" Notes for Theater Men

HOW OTHERS ARE STEERING THE SHIP

THE Chicago Mutual exchange is moving from the fourth floor of the Mallers building, where it has been for so long, to the eighteenth floor of the Consumers building, where the offices will occupy practically the entire floor. It is expected the new quarters will be in working order August first.

The Orpheum Theater of Moscow, Idaho, is getting out an especially attractive and interesting program. The house is managed by R. S. Tucker.

McMinniville, Oregon, a town of 2,500 inhabitants, has a regularly appointed board of censors. There is nothing like creating offices for deserving citizens.

The Kedzie Avenue Theater, Madison street and Kedzie avenue, Chicago, prints on the cover of its program the exact time of the beginning of each afternoon and evening show. "Come early" is advised.

Mayor M. M. Rothleiter of Columbus, Nebraska, is manager and lessee of the North Theater there. He is re-decorating the house and will re-open it the latter part of August. His son, Milton, is a hustler in charge of the house's publicity.

"Don't spare on advertising—that's the main thing," declared a prominent exhibitor of the south who attended the Chicago convention. He refused to give his name but admitted that he has six houses on the string and that they are all doing "pretty well."

The Tivoli Theater of Portland, Oregon, issues a ticket which is good for three admissions for ten cents. "Bring your friends," it says, "this ticket will admit three for a dime." The coupon is good but two days a week. These days are reserved for the showing of a serial.

A midnight matinee was run recently by Managers Smith Brothers of the Muse Theater, Fonda, Iowa. The feature was "The Battle Cry of Peace," which was begun at midnight and finished at three in the morning. That's keeping their attention glued to the screen.

The Strand of New York last week ran Mae Murray in "The Dream Girl," with a short comedy, a "Mutt and Jeff" comic, a scenic series and the Strand Topical Review. The symphony orchestra and soloists, of course, continue to furnish the musical settings, a very important factor.

The Victoria Theater of Harrisburg, Pennsylvania, issues a light blue card which folds once into a handy sized program. It is mailed by the "1c paid" method, which saves the trouble of stamping. The valuable thing about the program is that it is easily carried in the pocket for reference.

Reverend Father F. B. Dickman, pastor of the Catholic congregation of Rutland, Illinois, manages the local opera house, where he shows pictures exclusively. He gives as his reason for this activity that motion pictures are a powerful influence for social good in any community. He selects and censors his own films.

On account of the very serious epidemic of infantile paralysis in New York and Brooklyn the World exchange permitted 67 exhibitors to cancel their contracts in one day. Other exchanges have taken like steps to relieve conditions until children are again allowed to attend picture houses.

The following warning to exhibitors appears in the latest issue of Paramount Pointers, the Paramount organ published in Philadelphia:

> We have been obliged to charge exhibitors lately with several feet of film, owing to punch holes having been made. We would caution you against this method to mark the end of a reel. Your operator should be on the job and not need punch holes to call his attention to the end. This method will prove expensive, as we will charge you with ten feet of film when these holes appear.

Exhibitors and exchange men of Cleveland met in a deadly controversy on July 19 when they slaughtered each other in a baseball game at Cedar Point, Ohio. The occasion was an outing under the supervision of the Cleveland Screen Club. The organization has just adopted a complete set of rules and by-laws.

At Oatman, the sensational gold camp in Arizona, they have a new way to get publicity. When "The Red Circle," a Balboa production, featuring Ruth Roland, was put on there recently, the manager of the local picture show placed seven men with megaphones on the roofs of houses and relayed the good news around the camp. A record attendance was the answer.

J. H. Clark, manager of the Isis Theater, Cedar Rapids, Ia., gets out a weekly program the front cover of which is decorated with an actual photographic print of some film star. The photographs are two inches by three inches and increase the cost of the program to a little more than four cents each, but Mr. Clark declares they bring the desired return.

Through the courtesy of Daniel Frohman the Rialto Theater, New York, is in the enjoyment of the advantages provided by use of the Augustin Daly music library. Mr. Frohman bid it in on the occasion of the auction of the effects of Daly's theater and when visiting the Rialto a few days ago tendered Managing Director S. L. Rothapfel the use of his prize—an offer that was promptly accepted.

The program of the "Theatre Louisiana" contains a good feature which many house managers are adopting. On its back cover it carries a schedule showing what stars are to appear on the house screen each night without reference being made to the stories in which they appear. "With Us This Week," is the heading. Then it goes on, "Monday, Grace Cunard and Francis Ford, Lillian Drew and Marguerite Clayton. Tuesday," and so on through the week.

Bruce Godshaw of the Cosmopolitan Theater, Chicago, conducted a novel contest to advertise "The Secret of the Submarine" and to stir up community interest in the serial. He gave prizes of free admissions to the children who drew the best pictures of a modern submarine. The idea proved to be a valuable one and the results were more than satisfactory for the little effort and expense.

For the indirect benefit of exhibitors the country over, to whom the effects of photoplay publicity come, a new form of press matter has been put out by the Vitagraph company for the use of editors of newspapers and trade papers. It consists of a stapled pad of printed news in a handy size. It is easier to use than typewritten matter. Exhibitors should also find it invaluable in editing programs.

The Washington Theater, one of Detroit's finest and largest theaters, is now showing the second week of twilight sleep pictures accompanied by lectures by Mrs. Robert T. Liggett of St. Paul, Minnesota. The matinees are for women only and open discussions are held. The house is under the management of the Kunsky Theatrical Enterprises, the concern which is building the big new Madison Theater in Detroit, and which controls a large string of photoplay houses in the City of the Straits. John H. Kunsky is the head of the company.

On the occasion of his birthday a short time ago, Managing Director S. L. Rothapfel, of the Rialto, New York, was tendered a banquet by the Rialto symphony orchestra. Fifty members of the "theater family" were present. The guests included all the employes of the house. After the music and speeches, Mr. Rothapfel was presented with a silver loving cup by the mechanical staff, a mahogany phonograph by Alfred de Manby, the director of the orchestra, and a pipe set by the ushers.

Reel Stuff is the name of the newest magazine to appear on the newsstands. It sells at ten cents and is printed by William McWhorter of Chicago. It is made up from the news, features and paragraphs that have appeared in the Selig organ, Paste Pot and Shears.

What would you do if your local lighting plant burned down? That's what happened in Almena, Kansas, three days before Exhibitor M. P. Smith was to show "The Battle Cry of Peace." Mr. Smith skipped over to Norton, fourteen miles away, secured a generator and put the big picture on, while the rest of the town was still in darkness. The little lesson of ignoring the impossible applies here.

D. L. Sharits, who formerly owned and managed the Star, of Medford, Oregon, has sold out and will tour the country making motion pictures of a scenic nature for a New York firm. He is on his way to Birmingham, Alabama, in a Buick and will make numerous side trips to wind in the beauties of nature his contract calls for. Mr. Sharits, the story of whose experiences appeared in Motography's "What Theater Men Are Doing" department some time ago, was formerly a cameraman, which probably accounts for his present filming trip. George Hunt will manage the Star from now on, and when he arrives in Alabama Mr. Sharits will take the management of another house.

The Montclair Theater, Montclair, New Jersey, now uses the inside front cover of its large program for the following notice, "inserted without charge, for the public welfare, by the Montclair Theater Bulletin."

WARNING

Infantile Paralysis

Parents are advised not to take their children to New York, Brooklyn, or any other infected locality, while the present epidemic continues and not to permit children from these cities to come to their homes.

Every child who comes to Montclair from any infected locality, will be quarantined until released by the Board of Health, and citizens are requested to notify the Board of all such children.—Montclair Board of Health.

Let Us All Work Together to Keep This Scourge out of Montclair!

The Lyceum Theater of Monticello, New York, publishes a little magazine which, though not attractive in appearance, contains matter that is sure to interest fans. On the first page begins the "Comments of Current Lyceum Attractions." These are well written paragraphs that really stir up additional interest in the films to be presented. For instance, one begins: "Did you ever read Don Quixote? Horrible confession,—but we tried it five times and gave it up every time. But it certainly makes a much better photoplay than a book." Then it goes on to tell how the film story gives in a vividly interesting way the old masterpiece that everyone should know. The title of the Lyceum organ is Lyceum Motophotograms—like the familiar household word "Motography" with an extra joint in it.

"Civilization" at White House

Thomas H. Ince has been granted the honor of presenting his "Civilization" at the White House before President and Mrs. Wilson. Details for this event are now being completed even to elaborate preparations being made for special scenery. The prologue in which 50 persons take part in a war and peace pantomime story preceding the picture will also be given. The usual chorus of thirty-five voices will be augmented in Washington by about 100 more young women of prominent choral societies there, who will participate in this one performance.

President Wilson, at the request of Mr. Ince, will select his own invited audience. It is expected that all of the prominent members of the Cabinet, Senate and House of Representatives will attend. The exact date of the performance will be announced shortly.

The first showing of the American Ambulance Corps war pictures which the French government presented to the ambulance corps in recognition of its heroic services and which the Triangle Corporation has volunteered to exhibit as its contribution to the fund which is required for the maintenance of the corps, was held at the Hotel Majestic, New York City, on July 5.

Silent speeches of American statesmen will be shown in "Oratory," a release of the Paramount Pictographs.

First Aid to Theater Men

BY S. L. ROTHAPFEL

IT was a very great disappointment to me that I was unable to attend the sixth national convention of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America in Chicago. I had planned to be present at all the sessions and was counting upon the pleasure of meeting my fellow-exhibitors, especially you with whom I have been corresponding, and having a chance to talk with you personally regarding some of your problems. I was in hopes I could help you who are just starting in the business to make your theaters as successful as my theater here in New York. I am very proud of my house. It is a remarkable success from every standpoint, in fact the most remarkable of any institution in the history of the industry. In spite of the fact of the torn up condition of our sidewalks and subway construction, in spite of the terrific heat and other handicaps, the Rialto in its three months' existence can show a greater profit than any other theater dedicated to motion pictures.

By the way, I understand that the general opinion at the convention was that I was unable to attend because of my health. I want to correct that error, for I am as husky as ever, but Mrs. Rothapfel was very ill and I did not feel that I could go out of the city until she was better.

47—I have always run my theater as a pink slip house and shown no pictures except under the "No children admitted" sign because I believed that I was furnishing the public what it wanted. The pictures I ran were not always of the kind from which children had to be excluded but I kept the sign out just the same because I thought it drew the crowds. I have always done a splendid business and run to full houses until lately and the last month or so the patronage has been falling off and my receipts have been cut decidedly. I do not believe this is due to the hot weather because it started before the warm months came, but believe that it is due to this campaign that is being waged for cleaner pictures. Some of the women's clubs in our town are doing me a lot of harm. They are writing articles for the papers condemning the theaters which run these pictures under the "No children admitted" sign, and condemning the people, especially the mothers, who attend these shows and so encourage the exhibitor in running them. And now they are talking of establishing a board of women censors to pass upon all pictures. Taken all around I guess I had better pull down my sign and start to show a different class of pictures. Do you think, however, that a theater can change its policy entirely in this way and not suffer by it? Don't you think that if I take a decisive step of this nature I will lose all the patronage I have and have difficulty in getting a big following again? In other words I would like to run a clean show and never use my pink slip sign again but am almost afraid to do it for fear I will be forced out of business.

I BELIEVE that the writer of this letter has voiced the sentiment of a number of exhibitors who started out on the policy of pink slips exclusively with the idea that this was what the public wanted, only to find that it was a false desire which they were creating and that the public has now been satiated with this class of play to such an extent that a countrywide campaign has been started to exhort the manufacturers and exhibitors to give only clean pictures. The craving for these undesirable pictures is an unnatural one and tends to a lowering of the standard of the motion picture business when the aim of every manufacturer and exhibitor should be to elevate it. I do not mean to say that every picture which is not good for a child to see is to be condemned, for this is not true. I am speaking of the class of pictures which it is undesirable for any person to see—the pictures which should never be produced.

Just as much can be done by the exhibitor in this campaign for better pictures as by the manufacturer, for the theater manager is the middleman between the producer and the consumer—he is the mouthpiece of the public—and if he stands out for better pictures to show to his patrons he will get better pictures.

I admire the exhibitor who has strength of character enough to come out and say he has made a mistake. He started with the wrong policy for his house—he admits his mistake and is ready to rectify it.

Do not be afraid to take this radical step of changing completely the policy of your house, for you may rest assured that it is a step upward—a step for the better—and I believe that you will be surprised at the ready response of the public to the right kind of pictures. You will soon find that you are catering to a better class of people and that the reputation of your house will constantly grow higher.

I know from my personal experience that an objectionable house can be cleaned out and started anew and made a success. Perhaps you have never heard of my own experience along this line. It may be that you are not aware that I started at the bottom of the business and worked up. My first venture into the moving picture business was a very much aggravated edition of your present difficulty. I undertook to clean out the back room of a saloon in a mining town—and you can imagine how disreputable this place had grown—and make out of it a wholesome moving picture theater showing only the better class of pictures. Perhaps you think the best way to handle this would have been to start with the rather objectionable films and then gradually have the pictures grow better and better and so educate the audience and bring them unconsciously up to the standard I wanted to attain. This was not my method, however. I decided that I was going to establish my standard from the first, I was going to force the right kind of pictures upon those people and make them like them. And I did. The first film which I showed the habitues of that mining town saloon was a flower festival in California, with masses of beautiful flowers and wonderful exterior scenes. I was sure that beautiful nature would appeal to their better and higher feelings as nothing else would—and I was right. It did appeal to them, they came to see the picture and they came the second time, and they enjoyed it.

The condition with which you have to cope is only a mild case of the same disease which I combated. If you are going to make this change make it radically. Do not try to change your policy by degrees but come out boldly with your new standard. The very fact that you make such a decided change will arouse the curiosity of the people. They will come to the theater just to see what you are going to do. Be very careful about the program you put on for the first month. Show them that you are honest in your conviction, that you do mean to keep on with the new style of program and I believe you will find that they will come and gladly, and that many who have never been inside your house before will become regular patrons.

To carry out this plan of making a very arbitrary change it might be a good idea to close your house during the month of August and put a big sign across the front to the effect that it will be opened the first of September under a new policy, or you might make some quite startling statement which would mystify the people and cause discussion all through the month as to just what you were going to do, and so you would gain a large amount of free advertising. Then just before you open make a good deal of the fact that your theater is going to be run differently and use advertising freely, stating that you are changing your policy and why, and inviting the people to come and see what you are doing and let you know how they like it. Making a big thing of the change in this way and not just changing it quietly ought to help to get the crowd there out of curiosity, and then it is up to you to make it worth their while to come again and keep on coming.

Above all things do all in your power to check this board of censors composed of women which the town is contemplating, for they will make life miserable for you and every other exhibitor in the place. I would advise you to go to the authorities who are responsible for this movement and tell them that you will become your own censor, will take down your debarring sign, and see if they cannot be persuaded to reconsider this board of censors.

If you make this change of your own free will and not wait until you are forced to do so you will find that it will make a great deal of difference in the standing of you and your theater in the community.

48—Some of the exchanges send out ideas with their films telling the exhibitor of stunts to pull off in his theater to make the people come while you are showing their pictures. These stunts consist of fancy decorations, souvenirs and such things and they all cost money to carry out. Do you think that they pay well enough in the end to justify the extra expense and trouble to which the theater manager goes to carry them out? It seems to me that they entail a lot of trouble and make the manager a lot of unnecessary work.

ARE you lazy or only cynical? If it is a case of laziness and you simply have not had ambition enough to try one of these so-called "stunts" to see what they will bring, then I advise you to wake up and try them out instead of seeking the easiest path by simply asking me what I think about it. This is a question which it is almost impossible to answer without knowing the conditions, the locality of your theater and the class of people to whom you cater. In fact it is a question which I believe every man has to answer for himself, and the only way he can answer it is by carrying out one or two of these suggestions and so finding out whether they increase his patronage to such an extent that the box office receipts for the night make up for the time, labor and money spent. I will admit that for just one night shows anything extensive along this line does hardly seem worth the extra labor and expense, but if you show the same program for two nights or for a week then it is a different matter.

Also the time of year makes a difference. In the winter it is usually easy for all of us to keep our seats filled, but in the summer it is often a very difficult matter and I believe that a little extra effort on the part of the manager to make his show different, to plan some novelty for his patrons, will help in filling a house which would otherwise be very poor. As I said before this will really have to be answered by each individual manager, but some of these suggestions are very clever and at the same time simple. To test them fairly try the schemes two or three times, keep close account of how much time you give to prepare the "stunts," how much money you spend in carrying them out, try it on one of your dullest nights, and then after counting the box office receipts deduct the time and money spent and decide whether it pays.

In most cases anything which will stimulate the interest of the public is worth while, and anything which will pack our houses should be encouraged.

Pathe's "Who's Guilty?" Series Brings Forth Sermons —Exhibitors Request Continuance of Moore-Nilsson Stories of Modern Life

Pathe's "Who's Guilty?" series has proved to be a strong drawing card and many exhibitors have written expressing their regret that there will be only fourteen episodes. The last one, "The Irony of Justice," will be released on August 7.

One interesting feature in connection with this Arrow made production is the attention which it has received from the pulpit. A number of clergymen have seen in it forceful lessons for good and have not hesitated to mention it in their sermons. Each story illustrates some modern evil and treats it in such a graphic manner that it is bound to provoke discussion. Sympathy for the victims of circumstance is the underlying text of each drama, the story of which in each instance is logical, well worked up and with plenty of punch. With a number of other ministers in his city, Rev. Dr. D. J. Bradley of the Highland church, Cleveland, Ohio, who recently delivered a sermon based on Pathe's series success, "Who's Guilty?" in which he advised every member of his congregation to see the Arrow Film Corporation's production, has written a strong letter to the Pathe exchange with regard to its Masterplot in Fourteen Chapters, "The Grip of Evil." He says, "Without the slightest qualification my answer to the question, 'Is humanity in the grip of evil?' is 'No.'"

Anna Nilsson and Tom Moore are adding to laurels already acquired by their work in this series. Their roles in each episode have been of a kind to severely tax the emotional resources of any artist, but their interpretations have left little to be desired.

Sir Herbert Tree at Triangle

Sir Herbert Tree, the noted English actor-producer, who will appear soon in a Triangle-Fine Arts production, with Director Chet Withey, is now going over several stories to select one that will be suitable.

With a number of theatrical notables, Sir Herbert escorted Mme. Pavlowa to the Salt Lake depot yesterday and bade her farewell on her departure for a vacation in Yellowstone Park.

"Black Friday" is the title of a five-reel feature production being made by Universal Director Lloyd Carleton, featuring Dorothy Davenport and Emory Johnson, supported by such well known players as Gretchen Lederer, Virginia Southern and Richard Morris.

The Photoplay Scenario

CONDUCTED BY B. F. BARRETT

Former Editor of Photoplay Scenario Magazine.

NOTE—This department will appear hereafter in each issue of MOTOGRAPHY, and will treat of all subjects of interest to the photoplaywright—whether amateur or professional. You are invited to suggest any subjects you desire to have discussed, or ask questions on any matters relating to the writing of photoplays which have been puzzling you. The department is also open to you at any time for the expression of your own ideas or the submitting of ideas of others which have helped you, and will be interesting to other photoplay writers.

Putting the "Punch" in Pictures

BY WILL M. RITCHEY

Author of Pathe's "Who Pays?" Series

THERE is no short-cut to success in writing for the films; and, of course, to tell in a few hundred words how to write a salable script is impossible. But there are certain essentials which everyone must master. In the first place, "scenario" and "script" are much confused and abused words. Strictly speaking, a scenario is the outline or synopsis of the plot of the play; a script is the completed work for studio use, should include synopsis of the plot, list of characters, detail of the action in each scene, some plot or list of scenes and some studios even desire property lists. The last, however, usually is not for an amateur to essay, as he is not at the studio and cannot know the limitations there.

As a foundation there must be a plot. This does not mean merely an episode or adventure. In a plot many adventures may be experienced by the characters, but there should be only one major plot. Each adventure—each episode in the life of the character—should have some definite bearing on the plot; all other episodes, no matter how much of interest, have no place in the story.

The plot must embrace a struggle—conflict. This may be physical or wholly mental. It is the conflict or two or more characters, each striving for something, which makes the story vital. This is true whether in comedy or drama.

The action should progress logically to the climax. The climax is the point at which the conflict is at its crucial moment, to swing one way or the other. With the conflict decided, there remains but the denouement, and usually the quicker this can be shown, the more smoothly will the picture end.

Why Not Give the Author Credit?

WE are always glad to receive letters from our readers on any subjects in which they may be interested, and to open our columns to them for the expression of their opinions.

George C. Shafer of San Diego, California, has sent us some very interesting reasons why he believes the film companies do not get the best work of the author. We have published a number of letters from the heads of the film companies and the scenario editors telling what they believe is the trouble with the photoplays which they receive. It is about time the writer came back and expressed his ideas from his side of the subject. His views on the matter probably are very different from those of the producer and we would like to know what they are.

Mr. Shafer writes:

I read MOTOGRAPHY and other journals, and if I dare I think I can give some reasons why the art of photoplay writing is dying out for lack of good vital scenarios.

First—And main reason is that the companies who buy them do not like to (mainly will not) take any dictation from the author as to how they should put their ideas on the screen.

Second—When buying they offer an unreasonable price to an unknown author for probably two months work.

Third—They will pay nearly any price to an actor—thereby robbing the author of his due honor—and seem not to understand that most actors are made through the author's writings—bold as this assertion may be.

Fourth—but not last—there are a great many (not designating who) that want to take all the credit and honor for pictures when the same should go to the author of the scenario.

Fifth—These suggestions are looked upon in the same light as most suggestions of an unknown writer are—probably considered fresh or smart on his part. You can see my reasons whether you think it is so or not. The proof is in the pudding taste.

I speak in reference to the scenarios accepted from writers not on the staff. Why is a director's name so conspicous when he is only following out the ideas of the authors? And not one poster in a hundred ever has the author's name on same. If the author had a little more publicity he might take a little more interest in writing.

Are All Pictures Trite and Padded?

A READER who is neither a writer nor a "fan" expresses most forcibly her objections to many things which the directors put into the pictures presented to the public. Whether she is just or unjust in her criticisms is a question for the readers to decide for themselves, and we would like to have some answers to this letter, showing whether and why you agree or disagree with the writer.

There are several things which disappoint me very much in pictures. First of all there are trite, worn out situations "rehabilitated" with new names and new characters—lack of originality in theme I think you would call it. Then there is the highly and utterly improbable that we have to "swallow." Many times, too, a skip, hop and a jump over situations that really need explanation.

Another thing that makes me feel like walking out of whatever theater I happen to attend is this—scene is supposed to show the receiving of a letter; for this it seems absolutely necessary in one and every picture to show first the letter being written; second the posting of same; third the postman bringing it; fourth the butler putting it on a tray; fifth the walking into the room through numerous rooms, corridors and halls until he finally reaches the room wherein sits the financier to whom it is addressed; sixth, handing of letter tray to said man; seventh, man picks up letter, reads address, looks with varied emotions into the camera; eighth, picks up paper cutter, scans letter—and Oh, you know all the unnecessary bunk! Detail, unnecessary, tiresome and boring.

Then it seems absolutely necessary in one and every picture to show a bedroom scene in which some woman in very lovely negligee reclines in a beautiful bed, et cetera, or else substitute one sweet or two sweet children in a small bed, etc.

Then, directors seem to think that everyone in this world, regardless of station, rank or personality, will express the same kind of emotion in the same way. It's all so cut and dried, the effect—you just seem to know what to expect.

Why, the other afternoon we saw Walker Whitesides in "The Typhoon," and I never was so sorry in all my life! I hate to think of him in such a picture! It would seem that the legitimate stars don't understand the tricks of the movie stage. Saw Cyril Maude and was equally dissappointed.

Patience—A Thirteenth Essential

By Mrs. S. Brownstein.

THE following interesting letter received from one of our readers may be a help to the photoplay-wright who believes it is too much work to put his scenario into the best shape possible and just sends it out "any old way," also to the one who is looking for the quick road to success and being disappointed in his search.

Patience is such an important factor in writing and in the correct construction of the photoplay that I should define it as a thirteenth essential. It is by no means a new discovery. Patience, purpose and hard work have been the direct factors of successful achievement since creation. We know of it, instructors warn us, editorials in publications clamor it, and yet beginners will not, or cannot, appreciate its importance and do not apply it to their work. Many contend it is because of the haste for the "submitted at the usual rates." I don't think so. Of course there are, I suppose, some young Jills who need party dresses badly—some youthful aspiring Christy Matthewsons who want baseball outfits and don't know where they are coming from, and some who think film companies are benevolent institutions, who forth send checks readily, but I haven't these writers in mind.

I believe it is rather ungoverned zealousness, eagerness to feed starved ambition with a little material satisfaction—to shine. And well that it is so, for the writer who hasn't will remain foot-sore on the roadside.

But while desire to shine is conducive to success it can only be attained by hard efficient polishing, and the polish for literary lustre is composed of knowledge, practice and patience. Patience is an essential to healthy writing, if ignored or abused our work becomes sickened. It should be adhered to right in the start for it is easy to acquire the habit of railroading our imaginations on a through route without stopping to take on patience and visualization.

But right here I want to make myself understood—or rather not misunderstood. I do not mean that waiting, dilly dallying fluctuating which stimulates an "I don't dare" feeling, incapability, lack of self-confidence. This is more injurious than impatience. We should write slowly, stop to visualize continually, measure by all the rules, examine and re-examine and finish with a staunch assurance that ours is as good or better than others.

I once wrote a four-reel subject in eight hours. Yes, I was its proud creator all in a one all night session. Luckily it never ventured from its domain of birth—two days later it charred for its inflection, and as I stood by watching the ashes go up the stove pipe I thought I heard a faint echo from a distant stifled warning—patience, patience. I learned a valuable lesson.

It wasn't a bad idea, and had a little literary merit, but I couldn't find what it was that I wanted to tell, it was a story that traveled pell mell without a motive.

Patience is prolific of visualization, and what photoplay can be written with an interesting, telling finished effect without visualization. From my own experience I cannot over-estimate its value. Its remuneration is success.

Ince Offers $1,000 for an Idea

Thomas H. Ince, producer of "Civilization," wants some more big stories representative of teeming, toiling America. He therefore announces a prize contest by arrangement with the Photoplay Magazine to remain open until midnight of December 31, 1916. Scenarios must be suitable for five-reel pictures and must deal with representative American expression.

The first prize will be $1,000, second prize $500, third prize $300, fourth prize $200. Other scenarios not winning prizes, but suitable for Mr. Ince's purpose, will be purchased at regular prices.

In speaking of the type of photoplays he is particularly anxious to have submitted, Mr. Ince says:

I want five-reel plays representative of American life in any of its complex phases.

I don't want political arguments or propaganda of any sort.

I don't want dramas embroiling religious sects or political parties.

I don't want any treatment of sex which will offend.

My idea of a play is not sheer tragedy nor unrelieved comedy, but a serious story of real life—a story lightened here and there with laughter, brimful of the suspense of actual existence.

Coming down to individuals I particularly want big, virile stories for William S. Hart; society or light comedy dramas for Bessie Barriscale; big dramas demanding strong characterization suitable for an actor of Frank Keenan's type; romantic plays (not costume drama) suitable for William Desmond, and strongly sympathetic plays—of the same generic type as "The Coward," for Charles Ray.

All manuscripts should be mailed to Ince Scenario Contest Editor, Photoplay Magazine, 350 North Clark street, Chicago, Ill. No manuscripts will be considered which are not typewritten and on one side of the paper only. Everyone is eligible for the contest except persons in any way associated with Thomas H. Ince's enterprises or with Photoplay Magazine.

What Mr. Blache Wants

Since Herbert Blache's thousand dollar scenario offer was published, inquiries have been pouring into the Greater Blache Studios at Fort Lee, N. J., asking exactly what kind of five-reel dramatic scripts were wanted and the stars to be "fitted." Mr. Blache asks Motography to answer the questions, and states:

I have no special requirements or restrictions to lay down. I am looking for good ideas, no matter in what form presented. Just a synopsis may be submitted. I will find stars to "fit" the plays I accept. I know this is reversing the usual process, but the play's the thing in my mind, and then the star.

Del Ruth Desires Multiple-Reelers

I wish to advise that, after having vainly searched for nearly three years for an acceptable story submitted by an outside writer, Keystone has decided that it will be a saving of time and effort to stop considering material submitted by other than our own staff of writers.

Owing to our peculiar needs, it seems practically impossible to successfully prepare Keystone stories, unless one is in close personal touch with our methods. For this reason I feel that it is hardly worth while to send us any more material.

In behalf of the Mabel Normand Feature Film Company I wish to announce that a special reader has been appointed under my supervision to care for all multi-reel comedy dramas, with strong girl leads, that might prove befitting to Miss Normand.

Columbia-Lasky Prize Awarded

When the first class in photoplay writing was started at Columbia University last winter under the tutelage of Professor V. O. Freeburg, the Jesse L. Lasky Company offered a prize for the best scenario submitted to them by a member of this class. William C. de Mille, himself a Columbia alumnus, personally read all the scripts submitted and decided in favor of a story of colonial witchcraft entitled "Humility O'Hedford," written by Dr. R. Ralston Reed, a physician of Morristown, N. J. It is probable that the Lasky Company will make this photoplay contest an annual feature of the photodrama class of Columbia.

"Annie Laurie" has been produced in England by the Hepworths Company.

Southwest Gets "Fall of a Nation"

LIVE EXHIBITORS CINCH SPECTACLE FOR LOCAL HOUSES

EXHIBITORS have been making a scramble for "The Fall of a Nation" rights since its local release date, July 2. Many of the important states are already gone.

W. K. Sheppard, an exhibitor who has had great success operating houses at Laredo and Brownsville,

Three of the interesting personages in Dixon's new spectacle, "The Fall of a Nation" — Baby Beulah Burns, Arthur Shirley, American leader, and Percy Standing, the modern Benedict Arnold.

Texas, walked into the National Drama Corporation office on July 12 and planked down a big certified check for "The Fall of a Nation" rights of Texas, Oklahoma and Arkansas.

"I think that the Dixon-Herbert spectacle will prove more popular with the people down our way than any other current offering. They want the big battle scenes, are deeply interested in the soldier life on the border, moreover they enjoyed so keenly the previous Dixon dramatic stories like 'The Clansman,' 'The Sins of the Father,' 'The Leopard's Spots' and 'The Birth of a Nation,' that the coming of a new patriotic spectacle by the same author will be a decidedly sensational event." Ed. Giroux deposited the check to general account, whilst W. K. Sheppard and Thomas Dixon signed the contract. It was one of the quickest sale transactions in the history of film marketing.

Mr. Sheppard is the hustling type of Southern Alleghany folk that have made good in Texas. Born in Parkersburg, W. Va., where his family are prominent in commercial affairs, he went to the Lone Star State seven years ago. He operated successfully a small motion picture house in Laredo, later became proprietor of a large and modern theater in Brownsville which he equipped with the latest conveniences and made extremely popular. An inkling of the possibilities of big films was afforded to Mr. Sheppard when he had a $1,000 advance sale for "The Birth of a Nation." In fact, he has done capacity business for almost everything of importance that has come his way. He sold out his southern Texas theater interests last March.

The first step in Mr. Sheppard's Southwest campaign will be the establishment of a film exchange in Dallas, Texas. It will be in operation by the first of August. One of the most prominent exchange men of the south will be in charge, and this head office will be plentifully supplied with prints and with every kind of publicity, musical scores, etc. Elaborate runs of "The Fall of a Nation" are planned in Dallas, Little Rock, Oklahoma City, Fort Worth, Houston, Galveston and San Antonio, after which the spectacle will be shown in the smaller towns. As a graceful compliment to the militiamen and regulars now encamped along the Mexican border, the management intends to give early showing of the picture in several of the important border posts and camps. Several hundred of the guardsmen who are protecting Texas against Mexican bandit attack did motion picture duty last winter in the mimic war scenes staged for "The Fall of a Nation."

A wise contractor in his day and generation is F. E. Backer of the Englewood Theater, Englewood, New Jersey, who bought the New Jersey State rights of the film the same morning that Sheppard secured the Southwest. Mr. Backer will take advantage of the crowded August season at the beaches by showing the picture in Atlantic City, Cape May, Asbury Park, Long Branch and other centers. He is also rapidly arranging autumn bookings throughout the principal cities of the State. A third State Rights buyer at the National Drama offices last week was R. R. Roberts, who had previously been identified with the purchase of many big features and who acquired the Dixon-Herbert offering for West Virginia. Besides the above transactions, several other important deals for territory have been practically completed and due announcement of them will be made.

Monday, July 24, is the release date of the picture in New England and Greater New York. W. M. Powers left the city July 17 to wait on the New England trade, many of whom have wired their intention to make early bookings. The offices of the National Drama Corporation at 1465 and 1485 Broadway were crowded all last week with New York and Yankee exhibitors arranging for dates. The corporation is booking this territory direct, and there is a lively scramble to secure first runs.

Frank Daniels, Vitagraph's famous comedian, is now being directed by Arthur Ellery, who produced many Thanhouser plays during the past three years.

Ty Cobb will probably be featured in films this fall by the Sunbeam Corporation of Cleveland.

The explosion of a shell in "The Fall of a Nation."

International Holds Meeting

International Film held a convention of its own during the national meet of the League. The Sherman House was made International headquarters and ten of the managers of exchanges in important cities attended. The purpose of the get-together was to form as definite an opinion as possible in regard to the pictures demanded just now by the motion picture goers of the different parts of the country. International will use the data and impressions of its various exchange managers in forming its production program for the future.

Among those who attended the conference were the following: J. K. Burger, assistant general manager of the company; Joseph Engel, New York branch manager; J. F. Bowman, Chicago branch manager. The exchanges at Boston, St. Louis, Los Angeles, Washington, Atlanta and Pittsburgh were also represented by their managers.

In Honor of Sam Trigger

The executive committee of the sixth natural Exposition and Convention, out of its great respect for Samuel H. Trigger, tendered that gentleman a dinner at the Illinois Athletic Club Tuesday evening, July 18.

All of the members of the executive committee were present with a few other guests and some representatives of the press.

Mr. Trigger is usually the first Motion Picture Exhibitors' League delegate to put in an appearance at a convention, and he is, without exception, the one delegate who stays on to the finish. His popularity in Chicago is quite as large as it is in New York City, and while we are never sure regarding what the future holds for us, health permitting, Mr. Trigger will be in Chicago at the next annual convention.

Deitrich International Press Man

The International Film Service, Inc., has appointed Theodore C. Deitrich publicity and promotion representative. Mr. Deitrich has long been connected with the editorial department of the New York American.

The International Film Service, Inc., has grown so rapidly that in order to find room, two entire floors, the eighth and sixteenth, of the new building at 729 Seventh avenue, corner of Forty-ninth street, New York, have been engaged and elaborately fitted up.

The International has three great films in rehearsal, two of which are serials that promise to be more elaborate and startling than any heretofore produced. Details concerning them will be announced shortly.

During recent repairs and enlargement of the positive developing room at the Vitagraph laboratory, the work of this department was done in the negative developing room, which was used at night. This feat was managed without confusion, although just now an unusual amount of work is thrown upon the laboratory owing to the large number of large productions under way.

Brenon Forms Independent Company

WILL USE ONLY WOMEN STARS IN HIS PRODUCTIONS

HERBERT BRENON, whose unusual talent and power as a director has been demonstrated in his productions for the William Fox Company, with whom he has been connected, has announced that he will start a producing company of his own. Although Mr. Brenon has not all his plans perfected as yet, he states that within a short time he will have several interesting announcements to make regarding his new productions.

As would naturally be expected from Mr. Brenon, he has several original ideas as to the way in which he will produce and distribute his films. His photoplays will all be released on the state rights basis, as he believes this is the only satisfactory method. He will have his own studio and in the business end will be associated with a prominent exchange man and an exhibitor.

Mr. Brenon states emphatically that every picture which goes out from his studio will be his own work. This does not mean that he will supervise the work which is done by some assistant director, but that he will personally direct every picture himself.

Herbert Brenon.

Another innovation in this new company will be the lack of masculine stars. Mr. Brenon from his long experience in the work has come to the conclusion that the public wants women stars and he is going to fill this desire.

Also he believes that as a general rule most women, especially if they have worked on the legitimate stage, are more easily moulded to the screen than are the men, and are less temperamental. He plans to make all his productions features of about six or seven reels, depending upon the merit of the subject.

It has not been announced as yet what the first subject will be, but work will begin immediately and the first release of the new company will probably be made about the middle of September.

In March work will be begun on a production featuring Mary Garden, but it has not been decided just what form this play will take.

The productions of this new company promise a variety of stars as well as subjects, as Mr. Brenon will use no one star for more than one picture a year. By this method he plans to insure the exhibitors obtaining rights to his pictures before the film becomes old through subsequent releases of other companies in which the same stars are featured.

Mutual Advocates All Star Policy

PRESIDENT FREULER PLANS FOR WESTERN OFFICES

"A MILLION dollars for another Chaplin," was the reply of John R. Freuler, president of the Mutual Film Corporation, to the recent utterance of the motion picture magnates who seek to depreciate the position of importance occupied by the stars in the photoplay industry.

Mr. Freuler claims that back of the expressions of the men who charge that the exploitation of stars is a detriment to the film drama you will find a false hope of the reduction of production costs and a hopeless attempt to foster a market for a photodrama product of mediocre quality.

To attain stardom for an actor is simply to gain the public's stamp of approval. The actor who serves and pleases the public best is the greatest star. The permanence of the position of the star in the photodrama is assured. Dramatic art cannot be divorced from personality. The making of Chaplins and Pickfords and Mary Miles Minters is not the matter of a film man's whim or desire and it is beyond his control. Stars are made by the artist and the public, and no one can successfully come between them.

It will not be the women alone who are interested in the American sport fashions shown in the Mutual Weekly. Above is exhibit A to prove the fact.

Within a period of a few weeks the Mutual Film Corporation, in pursuance of its all-star policy, has announced a most remarkable collection of series of star productions, featuring Mary Miles Minter, Helen Holmes, William Russell, Audrey Munson, Florence Turner, Richard Bennett, Clarence Kolb and Max Dill.

Mr. Freuler says he is proud to point to such productions as "Whispering Smith" and "Medicine Bend," the products of the Signal studios and the craftsmanship of Director J. P. McGowan and Miss Helen Holmes; or the picture entitled "Purity" coming from the American studio, directed by Rea Berger and featuring Miss Audrey Munson, the artist's model; or such productions as "Soulmates," featuring William Russell, from the pen of Edward A. Kaufman; or the Mutual-Chaplin comedies. In the Florence Turner pictures produced by Larry Trimble I am happy to be able to point to "The Welsh Singer" as a Mutual product.

Exhibitors are looking with expectancy toward the announcement of the release date of the first of the Mary Miles Minter features, "Youth's Endearing Charm," now nearly ready to leave the American's studios, and the second of the series entitled "Dulcie's Adventure," the first of the productions featuring her directed by James Kirkwood.

The titles of the latest Kolb and Dill comedies suggest some lively, quick-step amusement. Here they are: "A Million for Mary," "The Three Pals"—imagine Kolb and Dill in fire-eating wild west roles—"The Bluff," "A Reck o' Pickles," and "Beloved Rogues." Mr. Freuler while in Chicago to attend the exposition took up the matter of a location for the western executive offices which he proposes to establish here for the service of the Mutual's increasing business in the middle west.

With L. N. Burrud, chief cameraman, already on the border waiting word to proceed to Gen. Pershing's headquarters, and the various mobilization camps of importance thoroughly "covered," Mutual Weekly is prepared for eventualities.

Chaplin says right out in public that he couldn't be hired to drive an auto.

The reason he gives is that on his first attempt as a chauffeur he nearly ended his salary-drawing days. He allowed he could drive a car as well as anybody without taking any lessons.

He encountered no difficulty in making it start but when it came to stopping the thing that was something else again and after a mad dash through the main streets of Los Angeles he came to an abrupt stop against the side of a building, smashing the car and narrowly escaping serious injury.

Now he lets his chauffeur do the driving while he sits back and takes things easy.

Rarely does a person taken from real life as a character in a novel have the opportunity of seeing himself as the author pictured him. Such an experience, however, befell W. L. Park, vice-president of the Illinois Central railroad, when he was a guest at a private showing of the Helen Holmes Mutual Star Productions, "Whispering Smith" and "Medicine Bend."

Ministers Interested in "Whose Guilty?"

Manager Johnson of Pathe's Cleveland office has gotten the ministers in his territory interested in "The Grip of Evil." He sends in three letters from John I. Wean, Pastor of the Lakewood Methodist Episcopal Church, Lakewood, Ohio, another from Dwight J. Bradley, the Highland Church, Cleveland, Ohio, who recently delivered a sermon on "Who's Guilty?" and another from Dan F. Bradley, Pilgrim Church, Cleveland, Ohio. Each of these letters show deep interest on the part of the writer in the Pathe series.

Bessie Barriscale, whose most recent appearance on the Triangle program was made in "The Sorrows of Love," soon will be offered as star by Thomas H. Ince in a compelling drama of sacrifice entitled "The Payment." This is a story from that seemingly exhaustless fount of literary gems, C. Gardner Sullivan. and is declared to be among his strongest works.

SPECTACLE FILMED TO MUSIC

"A Daughter of the Gods," New Fox Fantasie, Contains Big "Mechanical God" Which Belches Fire and Brimstone

The songsmiths of America and the popular music-publishing foundries in which are produced the contemporary melodies and jargon-music of the day contributed their bits to the making of the William Fox $1,000,000 Kellermann picture, "A Daughter of the Gods."

William Fox, owner of this great film spectacle, knows the value of music and applies it to the work of production.

Just as the cigar-makers of Key West and Tampa work to the strains of music, or while some hired reader drones his way through a story, just so did Mr. Fox utilize music for much the same purpose.

He had close to 20,000 persons on his hands. The semi-tropical sun was hot and disheartening. Spirits often sagged low under the blazing tropical sun.

So music was the solution of his problem. While you might have thought, had you been close enough to hear them, that "Tipperary" or other later airs were being sung as written, this was not the case—not by a long shot. All of the songs were re-built to make them especially suitable and personal for the occasion, whatever that happened to be.

Annette Kellermann, celebrated amphibious girl featured in "A Daughter of the Gods."

This picture was, all told, eleven months in the making. All of the work was done in or near Kingston, Jamaica, where the waters are opaline and the skies are every color from burnished gold and champagne color to the most regal purples.

In "A Daughter of the Gods," the William Fox $1,000,000 picture starring Annette Kellermann, there is a scene of remarkable ingenuity. A Sultan and his wives, his large and picturesue retinue, are witnessing dances in the harem. Suddenly the grotesque idol becomes animated and begins to open its mouth, exposing huge fangs. Out of its mouth come showers of sparks and breaths of flame. This fire falls over the entire city. Thousands of the population rush pell mell through this deluge of fire, until the good fairy of the story comes to the aid of Miss Kellermann and quenches the flames with a torrential downpour of rain.

There has been a great deal of exaggeration in the past in motion picture and dramatic enterprises. Men have been accustomed to saying that this or that show or picture "cost $200,000," or more or less, with little regard for truth. A year ago William Fox checked off on his fingers the five biggest film features made since the invention of motion pictures. Millions of persons have seen the pictures he listed. He then checked off mentally what he recalled to have been the big dramatic episodes, thrills or moments in those five pictures. He next jotted down what he knew on good authority to have been the actual cost of the five pictures and when he had finished doing this he said:

"I will now produce a picture that will excel the biggest moments in all five of these pictures combined. I will make a picture so gigantic that not in the next ten years will there be a man who will dare to expend so vast an amount of money on a single picture." And "A Daughter of the Gods" is the result.

ANOTHER INCE PRODUCTION

A Greater Play Than "Civilization" Is Promised for Next Year—Thomas Ince Writes Words for Peace Song

What will the year 1917 bring to the screen from the master mind of Inceville and what is the next theme that is destined to inspire the man who produced "Civilization"? This is the question that a MOTOGRAPHY reporter put to Robert Grau, one of Mr. Ince's closest confidants and manager of his international campaign for promoting "Civilization."

"That there will be another feature film spectacle emanating from the brain of Thomas H. Ince for 1917," said Mr. Grau, "is no longer a mere prophecy but a fact. But it is doubtful if I can give you any more information than that in advance of its production. Nevertheless, it is no secret that Mr. Ince not only has decided on the subject of his next offering but that he has already determined that the production which will succeed 'Civilization' will require a full year of preparation and the most he will say now is that it is not a play, and surely not an adaptation of one for the screen."

Although Cuba and the West Indies were included in the lump sum proposition which would have disposed of the South American rights for "Civilization," Thomas H. Ince has just received a cablegram from the directors of the new opera house in Havana announcing that a representative has sailed for the purpose of negotiating a separate sale for Cuba.

Billie Burke Booth at Exposition

One of the spots that was always surrounded at the big motion picture exposition at the Coliseum in Chicago last week was the George Kleine booth, where was exhibited a whole wall full of portraits of Billie Burke, star of "Gloria's Romance."

Incidentally, these pictures of Billie were no chromos, like so many that ordinarily make their appearance at motion picture conventions, but real hand-painted Sarony photographs.

The back wall of the George Kleine booth at the Coliseum was formed of a 7x8 foot frame, containing one extremely large Sarony portrait of Billie in the center, surrounded by four other photographs of the "Gloria's Romance" star, each 22x28 inches in size. At other points in the booth were displayed two hand-colored pictures of Billie, 22x28 inches in size and each framed separately, while at still another vantage point the largest of all portraits of Miss Burke were visible. The arrangement of the booth was carried out under the direction of Merle E. Smith, general manager of George Kleine film exchanges.

John Steppling, well known director and actor, has joined the Universal City forces.

Thanhouser Joins Pathe

WILL PRODUCE TWO GOLD ROOSTERS A MONTH ON GREATER PATHE PROGRAM

THANHOUSER has now joined hands with Pathe. Arrangements have been made for the release on the Pathe program of two five-reel Thanhouser features a month. These will sail under the flag of Pathe's Gold Rooster plays. The first will be launched in August.

The contract was signed on July 12, by J. A. Berst, vice-president and general manager of Pathe Exchange, Inc., and Edwin Thanhouser, president of the Thanhouser Film Corporation.

"I take great pleasure in announcing an alliance with Pathe," Mr. Thanhouser said to an interviewer in his home in New Rochelle. "Our decision was based on a careful investigation of the motion picture field. One of the most important factors that led to our conclusion to release through Pathe, was the fact that Mr. Berst is now general manager of that company.

"I consider Mr. Berst one of the most important factors in the motion picture industry today. Through his long years of association with exhibitors and manufacturers, he has a deep insight into all of the details of the motion picture business.

"I am familiar with his plans for the expansion of Pathe's activities in America and I am glad that we have been able to make arrangements to release our output through a concern with such an enviable reputation."

It is known that another important factor in Mr. Thanhouser's decision was the Pathe accounting system. The accounting system makes impossible much of the waste and inefficiency so common in many companies.

It is known that Mr. Thanhouser was also influenced by the fact that every exhibitor in the United States is visited at least once a month by a salesman from one of the thirty Pathe exchanges.

"It is because of all these things that Pathe has been able to build up one of the most successful organizations in the industry," Mr. Thanhouser said. "Pathe knows how to market high class features as well as serials and I know that the class of pictures we will bring to their program will assure even greater success.

"With our splendid facilities in our New Rochelle and Jacksonville studios, we could turn out eight features a month. Instead we will concentrate on two productions every month. Three of these features have already been made. We have under contract excellent stars, authors and directors."

Mr. Berst was equally enthusiastic about having gained the Thanhouser product for the Pathe program. Mr. Berst made the following statement:

"Thanhouser pictures have been known and admired by exhibitors and public alike for years. The Thanhouser Film Corporation achieved success in the early days of the industry. Each year it has made its success still greater. The Thanhouser people know the picture business from the ground up. The first features they have made for release through Pathe are excellent. Mr. Thanhouser and his associates are broad minded and able men with whom it is a pleasure to be associated in a business way."

Our combination with Thanhouser gives us more productions for the Greater Pathe Program. With Arrow, Astra, Balboa, Blache and Thanhouser—with contracts for picture rights to the stage successes of Al. H. Woods and Henry W. Savage, and with a staff which includes some of America's best playwrights, we guarantee future releases up to the standard of 'At Bay,' 'Via Wireless,' 'Madame X,' 'The Woman's Law' and 'New York,' which rank among the greatest features ever produced. Pathe feature releases compare with Pathe Serials and Pathe News, which all admit are in a class by themselves."

Negotiations looking toward the alliance between Thanhouser and Pathe were begun some time ago between Mr. Berst and Mr. Shallenberger, president of the Arrow Film Corporation which releases its features and "Who's Guilty?" series through Pathe. Mr. Shallenberger is the largest individual stockholder in the Thanhouser Film Corporation.

With preliminary negotiations opened between Mr. Berst and Mr. Shallenberger, the matter was placed before the executive committee of the Thanhouser Film Corporation consisting of Mr. Livingston, chairman, Mr. Thanhouser, and Mr. Shallenberger. At Mr. Shallenberger's suggestion, it was decided that Mr. Thanhouser should conduct the negotiations with Mr. Berst and the highly satisfactory agreements that have now been entered into by the two companies are splendid tributes to the business ability of these two men.

The first two chapters of the "Grip of Evil," and a Gold Rooster play featuring Lina Cavalieri and Lucien Muratore are the most important features of Pathe's varied program for the last of July.

Films Show Grocerymen Their Faults

Showing grocers how to make a success of their business is one of the latest feats which the film has been called upon to perform. About three hundred grocerymen gathered in the assembly room of the Bourse to watch a feature film "Troubles of a Storekeeper, and How to Regulate Them," with an explanatory talk by Frank W. Atkin of the National Cash Register Company of Dayton, Ohio.

The film started with a picturization of the untidy grocery store of the unsuccessful merchant and depicted all the mistakes that result from lax business methods. The old-time "pencil record" system was shown, no check being kept on incoming and outgoing money, bills were sent to customers who had already settled their account, etc., until finally the groceryman reached a point where his bank refused him further advances and his wholesaler refused him further credit. Then along came a salesman of the National Cash Register Company, sold him a 1916 model and all his financial and systematizing difficulties were at an end.

"A Jealous Guy," a one-part Vitagraph, is a speedy comedy of the slapstick type in which Hughie Mack, Vitagraph's heavyweight comedian, who has the leading role, certainly earns his money. He is knocked about and bruised up unmercifully and succeeds in keeping his audience in constant and continuous merriment. Lawrence Semon, in directing the picture, made capital of every comical situation. Interiors are entirely acceptable (until Hughie and his supporting wreckers get busy, but after they have finished very little remains intact).

Exhibitors Danced

Exhibitors and manufacturers held high carnival on the evening of Thursday, July 13, as guests of the Universal Company at a ball in the Hotel Sherman, convention headquarters. The ball was the principal social event of the convention and was also attended by many stars and producing magnates.

The grand march was led by Carl Laemmle, president of Universal, and Clara Kimball Young.

Other cinema celebrities present were: Edna Mayo, Essanay; Rose Tapley, Vitagraph; Mary McLaren, of the Universal Company, and Miss Dolores Cassinelli, of the Emerald Film Company.

Among well-known executives who took part in the festivities were P. A. Powers, treasurer of the Universal Company; George Brandt, general manager; Harry Heichenbach, publicity manager of the World Film Corporation, and Louis Selznick, head of the Clara Kimball Young Film Corporation.

Delegates' Film

MOTOGRAPHY is authorized by V. R. Day of the Essanay Film Manufacturing Company, to announce to those exhibitors who visited the Essanay plant Tuesday, July 11, that the film made at that time is now ready for delivery. Exhibitors caring to purchase the film outright may have it by sending $10 to V. R. Day, 521 First National Bank Building, Chicago, Illinois. There are 260 feet in the negative.

Albert E. Smith, president of the Vitagraph company, narrowly escaped death by lightning a short time ago when a bolt struck his house and shattered the fireplace near where Mr. Smith was standing.

Fifteen hundred feet of film were recently taken at a house party given by Frank A. Seiberling, president of the Goodyear Tire and Rubber Company, at his estate near Akron, Ohio.

Fox Directors Clever Imitators

LITTLE VIOLET DE BACCARI TO APPEAR IN FOX PICTURES

WITH Mme. Sembrich as a godmother, and Enrico Caruso and Antonio Scotti as intimate friends, little Violet de Baccari's ambition to eventually become a great prima donna bids fair to be accomplished. At present this eleven-year-old Italian actress is working with the William Fox Company. The "child with the golden curls," as she is most often described, made her film premiere in the Fox picture, "Under Two Flags," ready for release on July 31. Previous to this she acted on the legitimate stage, among other roles having played the lead in "The Littlest Rebel."

Little Jane and Katherine Lee of the Fox studios did not realize how very important they were to the film company until the edict of the vigilantes that if they left New York they could not return brought them to a realization that four different film productions would be stopped if they did not appear at the studios each morning. On account of the infantile paralysis plague all children leaving New York are not allowed to return, therefore the Lee family have taken a cottage in New Jersey so that "the kids" may continue with their work.

George Walsh and Anna Luther in an unusually interesting scene, taken from Fox's "The Beast," which is on the verge of the country's screens.

When the public views the wonderful scenic effects on the screen they have no realization of the amount of work and ingenuity exerted by the director in producing them. Director James Vincent of the Fox Company desired to show the luminous effects of a powerful light flashing across the waves from a lighthouse. He tried to take the regular light at night but this was a failure; next he devised a scheme of canvas and mirrors to throw the light on the water and along came a stiff northeaster and blew the canvas apart. Finally he evolved the daylight method by discovering that a simple motion of diaphragm of the camera regulated the amount of light in such a manner that the desired effect could be obtained.

Five thousand people watched the making of a film in Long Island City when the Fox Company dynamited the historic old Thomas homestead which has stood for nearly a hundred years, to furnish a scene in Virginia Pearson's latest picture. In the days of the old-fashioned race track of fifty years ago the Thomas homestead was the mecca for the society people of Long Island.

George Walsh has proved his versatility in the new Fox production, "The Beast." After a desperate hand to hand struggle he lifts his opponent bodily and hurls him through a window two feet above his head; next he rides for miles over a rocky road holding Anna Luther with one hand and guiding the horse with the other; then he plunges into a stream up to his neck in the water carrying the unconscious form of Miss Luther; and ends up by nonchalantly rolling a cigarette with his left hand.

In Theda Bara's latest picture, "Under Two Flags," Director J. Gordon Edwards has produced a most wonderful sandstorm staged on the plains of Long Island, and produced by an aeroplane propeller, hundreds of pounds of powdered cork, bran and flour, and a miniature chute, and he defies the public to compare it with a regular Sahara sandstorm.

V-L-S-E Starts Efficiency Campaign

LUBIN TO FILM REX BEACH'S NOVEL "THE BARRIER"

"WHAT would you do if you owned the V-L-S-E?" is the title of an article written by E. Lanning Masters, advertising and publicity director of the Big Four, in the house organ, The Big Four Family.

This is the first step in a general campaign for efficiency in which all employes have joined hands for the general betterment of the company in both service and results.

The article goes on to explain that some of the biggest ideas the world has ever known, have come from the people in the ranks, and the employes of the V-L-S-E are invited and urged to write in to the home office about just what they think is good and what they think is bad in the organization. They are left the discretion of either signing their letters or writing them anonymously.

Heretofore the pages of the Big Four Family have been open to each and every individual in the organization. Scores of articles have been printed in it that were written by salesmen, stenographers, telephone operators and even by office boys. The benefits derived from these leads the powers-that-be to believe this new campaign will be of inestimable benefit, not only to the inside of the company, but to those Big Four exhibitors who feature V-L-S-E.

Tom Mix, the Selig cowboy star, who before he entered pictures was an honest-to-goodness cowboy, is soon to appear in a big western drama to be released through V-L-S-E. Mr. Selig has selected an all-star cast to support Mr. Mix in this production.

The much-heralded film strip of Marjorie Sterrett, the thirteen-year-old Brooklyn schoolgirl who was inspired by the Lubin photodrama, "The Nation's Peril," to start a fund with which to build a battleship for the United States Navy, is now being distributed by the V-L-S-E. The strip is being shown in conjunction with "The Nation's Peril."

The regular weekly luncheons of the Rotary Club of New York city have long served their high business purposes, but that of last week perhaps served a larger one than any that has gone before, for it demonstrated the fact that Samuel (Choate) Spedon, publicity director extraordinary and general representative of the Vitagraph Co. of America, is still the champion after-dinner speaker of the film industry.

The rise of the film industry from the nickelodeon variety to its present position of the fifth greatest in the United States, was the subject of Mr. Spedon's address. He traced the rise of the industry and attributed its rapid growth in the last year or two, to the fact that capital now looks upon the business as something other than a wildcat speculation. He declared that capitalists are just beginning to realize the investment possibilities of a standardized product of motion pictures.

Human interest experience in studio life as applied to the Vitagraph then came in for its share of the address. These were received with particularly close attention because of the intimacy injected into them and the graphic manner in which they were told. Pictures of the Vitagraph galaxy of stars were thrown on a screen and were interspersed with reminiscences and remarks by Mr. Spedon.

These were followed by pictures of big moments in Vitagraph plays. They included portions of feature films released by the Vitagraph through the V-L-S-E, such as "The Juggernaut," "The Badge of Courage," "Kennedy Square," and "The Hero of Submarine D-2."

SPLENDID VITAGRAPHS

Several Important and Powerful Plays on the Way—Peggy Hyland and E. H. Sothern Featured—Alice Joyce Signs Long Paper

Several very interesting Vitagraph features are on the way and when they begin to shimmer upon the screens of the country they will undoubtedly make for comfortably filled tills in the box offices of hundreds of exhibitors.

As a reporter in "The Daring of Diana," a Vitagraph Blue Ribbon feature in five parts, Anita Stewart has a role admirably suited to her talent. Miss Stewart is forced to run the gamut of emotions, but whether confined in the cellar of Stange, the villain, not knowing what next to expect, or resting peacefully and contentedly in the arms of her lover, her portrayal is equally convincing.

The direction of the picture, for which S. Rankin Drew is responsible, is flawless. The scenes which are laid in Paris carry a true French atmosphere, and the photography throughout the production is excellent.

The story at the outset centers about Stange, a shrewd Parisian, who after kidnapping Jason Briscoe, the owner of a New York paper, takes his place, intending to sell the paper and abscond with the profits. Diana Pearson, reporter on the paper whose illegal sale Stange plans, finds and—but we leave the rest to your screen.

Another very important feature soon to come from the Vitagraph fold is that containing the powerful work of E. H. Sothern and the charming acting of Peggy Hyland. The title is expected to be "The Chattel." In it there is a vividly exciting stock exchange scene that will interest the men and a fascinating wedding which will thrum the heart strings of all the women and girls. This is the first Vitagraph feature for E. H. Sothern, who is noted everywhere there is a good stage in America and other countries.

Alice Joyce is a sure enough Vitagraph fixture now. Nobody can steal her, for she has signed a contract that holds her to the Vita. mast for some time to come. And everybody is glad of it.

Emerson Goes to Famous Players

John Emerson, who has been directing Triangle Films, has joined the Famous Players' staff to direct a series of pictures starring Mary Pickford. The first which goes into rehearsal is an East Indian story.

William V. Mong has adopted a plan recently, making two pictures at once, at Universal City. He declares he can do it and make speed.

"Twenty Thousand Leagues"

Technical Force at Universal City Produces East Indian City for Production of Noted Jules Verne Story

Resplendent minarets, domes and columns have been erected on the big Hindu temple which has just been completed at Universal City, the massive structure being part of a mythical East Indian city shown in the forthcoming twelve-reel production of Jules Verne's famous submarine novel, "Twenty Thousand Leagues Under the Sea."

For more than a year Director Stuart Paton has been engaged in filming scenes in this big picture, upon which the Universal Film Manufacturing Company has expended five hundred thousand dollars, the under-sea features of which production he made some months ago at the Bahama Islands. There he invented and operated a cinematographic submarine vessel along the ocean bed, photographing the dramatic acts of players garbed as divers. These under-sea thespians, for the first time in the history of the world, enacted thrilling episodes amid coral caves, on deep-buried reefs and in vast seaweed gardens, the ocean's floor being their noiseless watery stage.

Director Paton now is engaged in producing the sequel parts of this Universal marine spectacle, the filming of which will require perhaps another six months to complete.

The Hindu city, where nearly two thousand supernumeraries will be used in many scenes, is a marvelous creation in architectural arts, and besides the great temple has many two-story buildings and a massive gateway and adjoining battlements. The domes and minarets of the temple have been embellished with glittering pennons, thousands in number, which glitter in the sunshine like a sea of jewels. Within the walls of this city many sanguinary engagements will be staged between the Hindus and British soldiery.

The work of constructing the Hindu city has been achieved under the supervision of H. H. Barter, technical director of the Pacific Coast studios of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company, who, with Frank D. Ormston, art director, designed this most attractive collection of oriental buildings.

In "Twenty Thousand Leagues Under the Sea," Jane Gail, the distinguished Universal star, portrays the part of the heroine, with Allen Holubar and Matt Moore as leading men, while other important roles are enacted by Joseph Girard, William Welsh and Lois Alexander.

Barbers Protest Long Haired Artists

The officials of the Barber's Union, Ely, Nebraska, Local, have notified the Mutual Film Corporation, No. 71 West Twenty-third street, New York, that their body has passed resolutions not to attend the moving picture theaters until the stars in the various companies agree to have their hair cut regularly. A copy of the resolutions accompanied the notification. They say in part:

WHEREAS, We the barbers of Ely, Nebraska, find that actors in moving picture companies persist in wearing long hair, a mar to their looks and a reflection upon our profession, hence we do hereby:

Resolve not to attend moving picture theaters until aforesaid actors agree to regularly have their hair cut.

The resolutions go on to state that their business has been hurt by the increased use of safety razors and they feel that moving picture actors are starting a fad of wearing unshorn locks which will be followed by young men in all parts of the country.

The resolutions were signed by William P. Hicks.

Mutual Actors Enlist

Seven Mutual actors have laid aside the make-up box for the rifle and are now new members of the California National Guard awaiting orders. They are Leonard Smith, Claude Mortonsen, George De Witt, William Cook, Roy Osterman, Joseph Miller and Lester Marsh, who have appeared in a number of the Horsley Mutual productions.

"The Girl of Lost Lake" in five reels has been completed by Universal Director Lynn Reynolds.

William Humphrey is putting the finishing touches on the James Oliver Curwood story in which Marc MacDermott makes his first Vitagraph appearance. When this photoplay is completed, Humphrey will immediately start work on a feature by Agnes de Segurola and Marie de Sarlobous. In the new picture Humphrey will be seen as Napoleon.

"Twenty Thousand Leagues Under the Sea" has come to life on the screen. On the left is a view of part of the set built for it at Universal City. The other is a scene taken while Director Stuart Paton was hot in the filming. His assistant, Martin Murphy, holds the script and Cameraman Gaudio is at the right.

Priest Sanctions Paramount Program

PICTURE PROGRESS FOR AUGUST A WINNER

WHILE he does not sanction all moving pictures the Reverend Father F. B. Dickman, pastor of the Catholic congregation in Rutland, Illinois, does believe that the church should furnish whatever pleasure and social amusements are possible to her congregation. Therefore when the only picture theater in town was burned down his congregation bought the Opera House, equipped it with a picture outfit and Father Dickman started in to study all sides of the picture exhibiting game. While he left the projection to members of the congregation he chose all the pictures himself. In speaking of the value of pictures the Father says:

The educational possibilities of pictures alone are almost beyond comprehension. For those who cannot travel, the motion picture opens up a magic wonderland of beautiful lawns and flowers, fine architecture and sublime scenery. The industries of the world are brought to our doors, and we learn all about them without the weary routine of school drudgery.

Human nature craves pleasure and recreation. The photoplay is admirably suited for this. Any normal young man would rather go to a picture show than to a saloon. The acting out of great truths, both religious and social, hilarious comedy that can drive away the blues faster than anything else can, and a thousand other fine things could never be enjoyed without motion pictures.

My chief reason in hesitating before I permitted pictures in our hall was the large amount of objectionable scenes shown in films that were otherwise good. It is easy to reject the picture that is off color, but to find those that have nothing at all wrong is not always easy, but it is necessary where a church is concerned. I have booked the Paramount Program because I feel that those back of it are trying to give the cleanest and best pictures possible. I pay the Paramount Pictures Corporation a great compliment when I say I feel reasonably sure that I can take their releases as they come without fear of compromising my position as a clergyman. A few of their pictures are not what I like to show, but only a few.

George E. Carpenter, director of publicity of the Notable Feature Film Company of Salt Lake City, and distributor of Paramount pictures in that district, conducted an advertising contest among the Paramount exhibitors of the Salt Lake exchange. He offered three prizes to the best illustrated display advertisement that was used during a certain stated period. Over 100 exhibitors participated.

The first prize was awarded to S. Barrett McCormick of the Princess Theater, Denver, Colorado; the second prize to A. H. Tilton of the Grand Theater, Lewiston, Idaho, and the third prize to the Majestic Theater of Grand Junction, Colorado.

Others to receive honorable mention were Jack Nash, Strand Theater, Trinidad, Colo.; G. C. Lindsay, Star Theater, Eureka, Utah; A. J. Bishell, Orpheum Theater, Glasgow, Mont., and M. H. Todd, Lyric Theater, Cheyenne, Wyo.

An interesting article has been contributed to Paramount Progress by J. A. Maddox, manager of the Majestic Theater of Columbus, Ohio, on the subject of "Advertising on the Screen." Mr. Maddox says among other things that advertising on the screen is a subject that has been discussed, "pro and con," and at length, for a good many years. To the average small exhibitor struggling to make both ends meet, screen advertising has always been attractive, for the reason that his ability for getting money via the box office route has been limited.

"If you buy a newspaper, it is your privilege to either read the ads or pass them by. If ads are thrown on the screen they are forced upon you. I am not losing sight of the fact that screen advertising of the present day is gotten up in attractive fashion. Neither am I losing sight of the fact that some successful exhibitors are using advertising. However, I am inclined to think that they are in the minority. In our city, there is not one downtown theater running advertising matter."

Harry I. Day, Editor of Paramount Progress, contributes an article on "Does Your House Program Create Business?" In his article Mr. Day says that the growth of the exhibitor's house organ during the past year is only one of the indications of the general betterment of the conditions under which motion pictures are exhibited and the improvement being made by the progressive exhibitors on not only their programs but their whole sales promotion plans.

In each city or community different conditions make it necessary to give individual attention to the construction purpose and development along lines which will get the most value in advertising and publicity for the house organ. For instance, there is no local printer in the small town of F—, and the showman must get his program printed ten miles away in the nearest city. Apparently the exhibitor is working under great disadvantage, yet he has an opportunity to develop a community news sheet which opens up unlimited possibilities for advertising development.

Nearly every exhibitor has the opportunity of getting personals in his publication. With the exception of a minority of large metropolitan houses, the motion picture is confined to the town or to a community center of a town where everyone is known to the other.

The greatest value of the house organ is not its use as a program to list the present and coming attractions—any fan can get this data from billboards and newspaper advertisements—but the correct house organ must be a "desire producer." It must create, first, a desire to see moving pictures; secondly, to go to your theater to see them, which consequently links up with the stars and features which you are showing and brings up the box office receipts.

Picture Progress for August promises to be a winner.

"Picking Types Not Guess Work" is one of the big features in the issue, as is "What Is a Film," an article that takes up in detail the construction and manufacture of film from raw material to the finished product.

An interesting story on Marie Doro, telling of her fad of being a "cameralady" in the Lasky studio in Hollywood, is illustrated with pictures of Miss Doro. "Famous Writers of the Film," which tells of the big writers whose scenarios and stories have made the Paramount Pictures famous. There are also a number of lighter stories, "Interviewing a Prop Boy in the Morosco Studio" and "Laughmakers Must Enjoy Their Work," a signed story by Marguerite Clark, an article on "Japanese Methods of Preserving Fruit and Flowers," and "Four Points of the Fashion Law," by Susie Sexton.

PICTURE AFFAIRS IN RUSSIA

Scarcity of Film Stock Is Felt—Government May Prohibit Film Imports—Special Showing of War Pictures.

The film industry of Russia is suffering most keenly from the shortage of film stock. Russia used to import positive stock from England and America and negative from France but the difficulty of transportation is now so great that the scarcity of these materials is severely felt by all film producing companies. Also the film trade is expecting every day that the government will pass a law prohibiting the import of foreign products as a luxury, and although the film industry is constantly growing it is not yet strong enough to survive without foreign assistance. If this law should be passed not only the picture theaters and the public but the government as well would suffer because the taxes derived from the moving picture theaters amount to a very considerable sum.

The new tax on amusements has been working a hardship on the public and a delegation from the Theatrical Committee visited various influential people concerning this tax with the result that Mr. Rodzianko, president of the Russian Duma, promised to reconsider the law during the next session of the Duma.

A special performance of "How Britain Prepared" was given in the hall of the Parisiana Company in Moscow for the press and invited guests including all staff officers of the Russian commander-in-chief. This film will also be shown in the portable cinemas at the front by the "Soldiers' Cinema Committee."

A special performance of pictures from the English front was given in the Marinsky Theater in Moscow, the proceeds from which were dedicated to the Invalids' Fund.

The Russian government is realizing the educational advantages of the moving picture and is installing machines and scientific and classical tragedy films in all the schools.

Bert Williams Comedies Pull

Since the first announcement of the Biograph Company to the effect that it will release a series of two-reel comedies featuring Bert Williams, there has been quite a bit of discussion as to the possibilities of the big star of Ziegfeld Follies becoming a king pin in the comedy field. There is no denying the fact that the public is eager for a big change in the comedy line and while it is yet too early to predict anything for Williams the chances are all in his favor.

In a recent interview Gus Mohme of the Biograph Company said:

I have just returned from a three weeks' trip around the various General Film Company Exchanges in the interest of the Bert Williams comedies and if the enthusiasm both on the exhibitors' and exchange managers' parts may be used as a barometer to measure the success of these comedies, then they are due for big business. And why not? There isn't a more popular or clever comedian on the stage than Bert Williams and the fact that he has been chosen again as the star comedian with Ziegfeld Follies and is turning the people away at two dollar prices in New York despite the hot weather, bespeaks his drawing power.

two-reeler and audiences will like it, especially since it is in a way "different" and because it gives a great opportunity to display the excellent photography of which this company is capable. Then, as a "back-to-nature" lesson, it is a good picture for the vacation season.

George Gebhart plays the name role, the dyspeptic, James Connell, a millionaire. Nita Davis is Agnes, his daughter, and Ashton Dearholt is Tom, in love with Agnes. Connell refuses to give his consent to their engagement until Tom shows himself capable of earning money. At the same time, Connell advertises that he will pay anyone a million dollars who will cure him of dyspepsia. Tom sees the connection between his problem and the offer and his method of working it out forms the play.

Masked and armed, he boards the limited train in which Connell and Agnes are traveling, and forces them to accompany him to his shack in the mountains. There he makes them live an outdoor, wholesome life, even when he has to enforce his rules at the point of a gun. Agnes soon learns who the captor is, but Connell does not, until under Tom regime, his health is recovered. Then Tom reveals his identity and claims the reward of a million dollars. And the boy's cleverness in curing the millionaire and winning the prize also forces Connell to withdraw his opposition to the marriage of Tom and Agnes.

"A Tortured Heart"

Virginia Pearson in a Five-Reel Fox Feature. Reviewed by Genevieve Harris

BEGINNING on a dark and stormy night, and dealing with lost babies, family feuds, gamblers and hold-ups, this play in its theme reminds one strongly of the very popular novels which are issued in ten-cent editions after they have been published in Comfort, Hearthstone, and magazines of that type. As told through the medium of the screen, however, we have substituted for flowery language some of the most beautiful pictures which have ever appeared in a photoplay. The photography is excellent, the exteriors especially lovely. Most of them suggest the fancy of painting, rather than the realism of camera work.

The first scenes, a storm at night, are not so very well done, the lightning effects being very artificial, so that the beauty of the later scenes is a pleasant surprise. The story is laid many years ago, which gives the characters a chance to wear picturesque costmues. Viriginia Pearson appears first as a young woman, then as one of middle age. She has an emotional role, hers being the "tortured heart." Stuart Holmes, as a gambler and hold-up man, is his usual villainous self, although changed in appearance by his old-fashioned make-up, Marion Swayne, a pretty ingenue, has an important role.

While the plot is not very convincing, it is well presented. Will S. Davis is responsible for the story and direction. A baby girl is left on the steps of the minister's home, and against the will of the people of his church, he adopts it. He is upheld in his actions by Lucille Darrell (Virginia Pearson) a young woman of prestige in the town. Lucille becomes the godmother of the little girl, Marjorie, and directs her education as she grows up. No one in the town suspects the truth, that Lucille is really the mother of the foundling.

Then Marjorie elopes with Leon Miller, a gambler. She is soon very unhappy. Miller, in robbing a stage coach, gets possession of a letter to Lucille from her brother, revealing in the secret. He attempts to blackmail Lucille, but she at last tells the story of Marjorie's birth. Lucille had married a man of whom her brother disapproved. In a duel, her brother killed her husband. Then when Marjorie was born, the cruel brother objected to caring for the child of his enemy, and Lucille had given her baby to the minister to keep. Now they go in search of Marjorie and bring her home. The gambler husband is killed, and Marjorie is reunited with a former, more worthy suitor.

The cast of players includes Fuller Mellish, Stephen Grattan, Frances Miller, Joseph Levering, Glenn White and George Larkin.

"The Tarantula"

V. L. S. E. Offer Striking Blue Ribbon Drama. Reviewed by Thomas C. Kennedy

WRITTEN and produced by George D. Baker, "The Tarantula" is an uncommonly interesting six-reel melodrama. "The Tarantula" tells a well constructed and convincing story and the manner of its telling is highly praiseworthy. Both in writing the play and directing its production Mr. Baker did better than well.

Edith Storey is seen to particular advantage as the Mexican girl whose love is won by an American and her confidence in him makes her prey for his unclean affection. During the early stages of their acquaintance she learns that he is terrified by even the sight of a tarantula. When her father orders her out of his home she and her aunt live in poverty and after the death of her baby she is engaged as a dancer at a low drinking place.

Pedro has long been in love with her, and he makes it possible for her to secure an engagement as a dancer in New York. Both have but one thing in mind and that is revenge. The night of her first appearance she meets the American and arranges to meet him in his apartment some time later. Pedro is advised to bring her the weapon she desires to use. In a carved box she carries a tarantula to the meeting place and the man who outraged her dies by the sting of the thing he most fears.

The picture opens in a men's club and an elderly member tells the story, which is visualized to illustrate his statement that the man sometimes pays. A youthful member is dissuaded from running off with the wife of one of his friends. The close-up of the young man tearing up the letter from this deluded wife might better be left out of the picture. It savors a bit of the gush which the pictures of today, most fortunately, are bravely divorcing themselves from.

The main portion of the picture, however, is without a single impediment to its certain success. "The Tarantula" is perhaps one of the strongest in interest and most artistically produced melodramas that has ever been released on the V. L. S. E. program. It would be very difficult to overestimate the high character of Miss Storey's performance. An actress who is never disappointing, Miss Storey is impressive to an extreme degree in this offering. She has the support of a good play, and a good play with Edith Storey in the leading role is a very happy combination.

Antonio Moreno lives up to expectations as Pedro, and nothing more than this was necessary to make Pedro an excellently rendered part. Charles Kent, Eulalie Jensen, L. Rogers Lytton and Harry Hollingsworth are included in a supporting cast of exceptional ability. The players mentioned enact their roles most effectively. The settings and the photography are of a high order. "The Tarantula" is, to be sure, a particularly good picture.

"The Dream Girl"

Lasky-Paramount Romance Features Mae Murray. Reviewed by Thomas C. Kennedy

Theodore Roberts gives an excellent characterization of the dissolute father, and Earl Foxe plays opposite Miss Murray very effectively. Charles West, James Neill and Mary Mersch are included in the cast. Cecil B. De Mille produced the picture. The staging and general direction is a most important factor in the enjoyment this offering affords.

well-known screen folk carry out the author's mood in a convincing way and give to the picture an air of distinction.

Mr. Abramson's story, while constructed along conventional lines, has the advantage of being direct and simple. In its course there are true-to-life situations which are in the main well directed. Here and there also is a touch of originality, seen in allegorical effects, etc. In respect of dramatic value "The Faded Flower" measures up to a good standard.

The story concerns itself with the blighted life of a girl who makes a great sacrifice in vain. Although already in love with another, she marries Mason, an elderly man of great wealth because he promises to devote his entire fortune, if need be, to the curing of her blind mother. After an operation upon the latter, however, the doctor pronounces her condition beyond the aid of medicine. Realizing her sacrifice has been for naught, Lillian's husband becomes a constant reproach to her and her affections toward him cool.

Just as this juncture Mason blasts his chances of winning back what little love his wife had for him, for, on the most flimsy evidence, he charges Lillian's former lover, Parker, with stealing his wife's affections and Lillian with being unfaithful. He is blinded to the fact that Parker is now really in love with his daughter instead of his wife and becomes highly antagonistic to Parker. Under the effect of her husband's depraved jealousy Lillian slowly declines in health until upon her deathbed, when she forgives Mason the suspicion he finally discovers is unfounded. After Lillian's death, Mason, filled with remorse, begs Parker's forgiveness and gladly sanctions the latter's marriage to his daughter.

"The Vagabond"

Latest Mutual-Chaplin Comedy. Reviewed by Thomas C. Kennedy

BY sheer force of magnetism Charlie Chaplin carries the interest of the spectator through the second reel of "The Vagabond." The second half of his latest picture presents nothing typically Chaplin. It is romantic drama and it is all done in a peculiarly semi-serious manner with no decided attempts to contrast the serious with the ridiculous for comic effect.

The first reel is well supplied with slapstick and comic situations of the inimitable Chaplin type and it produces many laughs. Charlie is a violin-playing tramp. After producing some tones on the fiddle, and entering the barroom in time to collect a generous haul on the strength of a gutter-band's efforts, he travels to the country.

He meets with a girl who is held by a gypsy band. She is their drudge and the fiddler rescues her from her captors. Every gypsy man receives a tap on the head with a stout club before this is accomplished. Next we see the two encamped. An artist makes his entry into the romance. He does a portrait of the pretty girl and quite wins her affection, much to the sorrow of Charlie.

The portrait is the means of reuniting her to her wealthy mother. The latter takes her off in a motor. Then true love comes to the girl and she insists upon returning for her rescuer. He is taken into the car and the picture fades here.

"The Vagabond" will, of course, entertain its every spectator. That much is understood, but it is not the equal of "The Fireman" as far as being a laugh-producer is concerned. Edna Purviance is the girl, and there is the usual good supporting cast. The production is satisfactory in all details.

"An International Marriage"

A Five-Part Morosco-Paramount Drama. Released July 24. Reviewed by George W. Graves

THE Oliver Morosco Company has, in the filming of George Broadhurst's play, "An International Marriage," made a picture with an excellent dramatic hold, provided it with a splendid cast and set the whole thing in an atmosphere befitting its strain. Vivacious Rita Jolivet was selected for the leading role and placed amidst a large and effective supporting cast, its most important members being Marc Robbins, a jolly and indulgent father, Elliott Dexter in the heroic role, Courtenay Foote as the defeated party in an exciting marriage gamble and Page Peters in the role of another unfortunate victim. Others making up the cast are Grace Carlisle, Olive White and Herbert Standing.

With its elaborate production, charming star and story which embraces a pleasing admixture of both dramatic and humorous situations in an unconventional plot, "An International Marriage" is bound to come into its own in popularity. Especially noticeable in the picture are the excellent lighting effects and superb photography. The picture was directed by Frank Lloyd, with James Van Trees as his camera man.

The story concerns the unfruitful attempts of the Duke of Buritz, a foreigner of distinction to marry Florence Brent, daughter of a kind hearted but unpolished American millionaire. After much trouble in convincing his family of the desirability of an American wife, the Duke encounters a seemingly insurmountable obstacle in that he will be going against the king's wishes by wedding an untitled woman. But, not to be denied, he arranges to have Florence become titled by marrying his friend, the Count; a mere marriage of convenience. The Count agrees to submit to divorce proceedings shortly after his marriage and the ceremony is performed.

with being obliged to remain the Count's wife. It finally becomes time for Florence's long-suffering American lover, Oglesby, who has accompanied the party to Europe, to step in, snatch Florence from the Count by force, and take her back to America where she belongs—as his wife. The millionaire smiles his approval at this culmination of events, for he has always favored Oglesby, in spite of his wish to let his daughter have her own way in choosing whom she will marry.

"The Marriage of Molly-O"

the same as she might be English had the play been laid in the latter country, but she is not distinctly anything.

However, Miss Marsh is interesting enough in this picture and had she a more interesting story back of her she would be receiving all kinds of praise for her performance. Robert Harron is Larry O'Dea, Molly's man. Mr. Harron renders the part in his best style and he makes the character amply pleasing.

After the death of Mr. Malarkey, the widow and Molly Malarkey are hard put to meet the demands of the agent who comes for the rent and keep the cupboard provisioned. One day the agent's son advances some gold coin to the girl who rather sadly decides to sell the pig in order to pay the rent. Danny is fond of all the girls and he is not keenly honorable in his attentions to any of them.

Molly is more concerned over the young man she believes is quite as poor as she is. At the fair Larry buys her a ribbon and the next evening he calls and makes love to her. But Molly is shy and she runs back to the house. The Malarkey's have now reached absolute poverty. The widow sets out for the city to try and borrow some money and during her absence Danny proposes that Molly marry him and he will make a fine lady of her and make her mother comfortable, so Molly agrees. At the Inn, however, Danny shows that he had no intention of marriage. But Larry is near and he returns with Molly. Not until then does she learn that Larry is Sir Laurence O'Dea, master of all the land thereabout.

Paul Powell's direction is capable in every respect. He has given the piece a very attractive production. Kate Bruce, James O'Shea and Walter Long complete the cast.

"The Quitter"

Metro Western Offering Produced by Rolfe Photoplays. Reviewed by Thomas C. Kennedy

A WESTERN melodramatic comedy produced by Rolfe Photoplays under the direction of Charles Horan is the offering in which Lionel Barrymore makes his latest appearance on the Metro program. Mr. Barrymore is the leading figure in a town where there are men only and the decision of his townsmen to advertise for a wife for him is the basis for a five-reel production of little zest but some ability to entertain.

"Happy Jack" Lewis forwards some ore to a mining engineer in the city. The engineer examines a sample of ore from another mine by mistake and the analysis makes it look as though Lewis has struck it rich. This information is given to a crooked banker.

employer, the crooked banker, forces unwelcome attentions upon her. Just before her arrival the bartender persuades Jack to disappear because the girl might not look anything like her pretty photograph.

The girl arrives and Jack, who stopped at the Junction, discovers that she is every bit as nice as her photograph had led him to suppose, but he is detained by a number of circumstances, the most agreeable of which is his sale of the claim to the crooked banker for five thousand dollars. He buys an auto and comes back to Paradise Gulch. But the complete happiness of the miner and his advertisement-procured fiancee does not come until court proceedings have been gone through. As he had deeded over his claim to the girl before leaving the Gulch he had no right to sell to the banker, but the difficulties are overcome.

This story has, of course, been done many times before in the films and most of those times it was done in less than five reels. There is much padding, but it is rather good padding. Barrymore does two good fights, quite realistic ones. His work throughout is commendable.

Marguerite Skirvin is pleasing as the girl. Charles Prince, Paul Everton, Edward Brennan and Julius D. Cowles are included in the cast. From no standpoint is "The Quitter" impressive, but it contains nothing disagreeable and many things that please and it is from the beginning mildly interesting.

"The Shadow of Her Past"

Pathe Gold Rooster Play Features Lina Cavalieri. Reviewed by Thomas C. Kennedy

THE name of Lina Cavalieri, the star of the Pathe Gold Rooster play released this month, will doubtless attract large attendance at the picture houses where "The Shadow of Her Past" is on the program. Lina Cavalieri, operatic soprano, has been called the most beautiful woman in the world, though this is a distinction she shares with other present day beauties. However, the fact remains that she is a strikingly beautiful woman and her charm of feature and form can be appreciated by the spectators viewing "The Shadow of Her Past."

Lucien Muratore, also of some renown on the operatic stage, plays opposite the star. The production was made under his direction, and he must be praised for giving the story a handsome setting. In the role of the artist M. Muratore is not highly successful. In a cast whose every member over-acts most of the time, he is the chief offender against the golden rule of natural restraint. When he is wounded in the duel with the Duke the emotion, and the pain, he feels is expressed with much physical effort, and it will not be surprising to learn that a laugh or two were created by it at every showing of "The Shadow of Her Past."

The story is a love romance which profits much generally by the tragic ending it has been given. The story is good. It bears up well under the strain put upon it by the players, who over-do their parts greatly. "The Shadow of Her Past" is the romance of an American girl who goes to Rome to carry on her study of music. Her meeting with a painter of great promise is the beginning of a deep, noble love which prospers until Elayne meets with success as a musician.

She is feted by society and her head is turned. A Duke is attracted by her beauty and she casts Peter aside for the nobleman. To her sorrow she discovers that the Duke has no intention of marrying her. Circumstances bring the Duke and Peter to hatred and a duel, in which the artist is seriously wounded. Elayne nurses him back to health and they are about to marry when she realizes that she cannot really belong to him in life, and she dies from the effect of a self-administered poison.

The story plays in Rome and Paris. There is a strong Latin flavor imparted to the picture both by the story, the settings and players. Both interior and exterior settings are exceptionally good. Many of the outdoor scenes are rarely beautiful.

"The Payment"

A Five-Part Triangle-Ince Picture Released July 30. Reviewed by George W. Graves

"THE PAYMENT" depicts in a striking way the lengths to which mad ambition drives those who surrender themselves to it, irrespective of the cost, and the inevitable payment of "the uttermost farthing" to cancel the debt of sin. Its story is comprehensible, direct and it has an ever-increasing hold. Especially forceful and pathetic is the climax, which embraces a situation of great mental tribulation. The story ends with the paying of the full price and no less, which is certainly true to life. Bessie Barriscale is featured. Her performance in the role of Phyllis Page is one of those rare screen portrayals which excite both sympathy for the part and admiration for the player.

Phyllis Page, the daughter of a mill laborer who is at the mercy of his heartless employers, has the fire of ambition burning within her. She wants to get out and show the world that she is somebody, and no obstacle is too great to prevent her from ascending the ladder of fame. She often reproaches her father for being a mill hand and not a mill owner—the result of his being satisfied with a mere place to eat and sleep, as she deems it.

Phyllis comes to the city, obtains work in a fashionable establishment and meets Robert Reyburn, a wealthy lawyer who is fond of flirting when his wife's back is turned. Noting her talents as an artist and her unquenchable desire to become famous, he offers to send her abroad for study if she will be anything he wishes to him on her return. She decides to accept this offer. After Phyllis has become famous and made an entree into society, and after Reyburn has tired of her, she becomes a warm friend of Mrs. Reyburn—a friendship which brings her many pangs of remorse. She eventually meets Mrs. Reyburn's younger brother, Dick, and feelings of deep love between the two set in. Mrs. Reyburn encourages the match, but her husband, knowing that the artist must pay sooner or later for her folly, convinces Phyllis that marriage with Dick is impossible, and that were they to marry, misery must be the outcome in time.

Then, when Dick arrives at the house to propose, comes the awful struggle. Using all the strength she can summon she refuses him and tells him finally that their union can never be. After Dick leaves, Phyllis falls exhausted to the floor, moaning that the price has been too great.

In support of Bessie Barriscale are Charles Miller as Robert Reyburn, William Desmond as Dick, Katherine Kirkwood, Thomas S. Guise and Gertrude Claire. C. Gardner Sullivan was the author of the story, and Raymond B. West directed.

charm, and De Wolf Hopper and Bessie Love fit these parts to the thousandth part of an inch. De Wolf Hopper's acting in this picture, combining pathos with all the comical mannerisms of the character, is a source of constant enjoyment. A cleaner and more pleasing part would be as hard to imagine as would be an actor better, or even as well equipped for it as Mr. Hopper.

Anita Loos is the author of the story and Lloyd Ingraham directed. Three other important members of the cast are Carl Stockdale, Frank Bennett and Loyola O'Connor. A salient point of this offering is that it leaves a good taste in the mouth. There are certainly no regrets in connection with the time spent in its enjoyment. That "Stranded" is predestined to success seems as certain as the fact that most people are human.

H. Ulysses Watts, a peculiar old Shakespearean scholar doing impersonations for a road show, has one sincere friend and sympathizer, a little trapeze artist. Stoner, the manager of the show, has designs upon the latter and tells her that after the show on a certain night she must desert the company with him. In her state of nervous fear the girl falls from a swinging bar and sustains an injury. Stoner takes all available funds and deserts, leaving the show stranded. But help is near, for an old friend of one of the performers presently appears on the scene and generously supplies the money to take the whole company back to the city, with the exception of the injured girl, who cannot be moved, and old Watts, who will not desert her.

Not long after, Ulysses learns that a town not far distant is contemplating a Shakespearean church benefit. Pretending to be a college professor, he comes into his own as a coach for these "yokels," housing his little ward at the village hostelry as his daughter to protect her. The latter falls in love with the hotel manager and the date for their marriage is eventually set. But Stoner turns up and blackmails Watts, threatening to disclose the terrible fact to the sedate townspeople that the girl is an unblushing acrobat and not even Watts' daughter. Not wishing to be unfair, Watts reveals this knowledge to the bridegroom, who does not allow it to deter him from his purpose.

Outside of the house where the wedding ceremony is to take place, Stoner, in a fit of maliciousness, shoots the old actor, who, not wishing the guests to become alarmed or to learn the truth about the girl, enters the gathering and entertains the people with the death scene from Julius Cæsar, at the culmination of which he expires. Meanwhile the bridegroom has subdued the murderer and he is turned over to the authorities. The girl's secret is never revealed.

"The Conflict"

Three-Reel Selig Drama Released July 24. Reviewed by Genevieve Harris

THE struggle in the mind of a young minister when he is offered a position in a fashionable city church and at the same time in a mission in the slums, gives the title to this offering, while the results of his choice, the work in the slums, forms the story. While there is nothing especially new in the situations which develop, the story progresses well and there is sufficient action to hold the attention of an audience.

Fritzi Brunette has an interesting role and plays it with spirit, that of Nell Gail, the owner of "The Oasis" saloon. Charles West appears as Paul Gilbert, the young minister. Vivian Reed is Alice Morgan, a society girl, engaged to marry Gilbert. She breaks the engagement when the young man announces his decision to accept the slum mission. However, the two worlds are not as far apart as she thinks, for her brother, Harold Morgan, played by Jack Pickford, is a friend of Nell Gail, the girl who opposes Gilbert's work in the settlement.

The excitement of the story grows when young Morgan, at the saloon owned by Nell Gail, becomes entangled in a general fight in which a man is killed. Morgan is accused of the murder and is in danger of being convicted at the trial. The dying confession of the real murderer saves him. The tragedy has changed the mental attitude of the characters, and Alice decides to share the minister's work, while Nell Gail gives up her dangerous business and later marries Morgan.

Frank Clark and Harry Lonsdale complete the cast of players. William Robert Daly directed the play from a story by Rosa Raymond.

"Honor Thy Name"

Triangle-Ince Offering a Drama of the South. Reviewed by Thomas C. Kennedy

"HONOR THY NAME" is a finely acted, well produced drama laid in the South and centering about a Virginian who holds his family name above all else. Frank Keenan admirably plays the part of the Colonel who sacrifices his own life to the honor of the name of Castleton. He deliberately causes the horses to run wild while driving with the adventuress who has trapped his son into a marriage.

The scenario by J. G. Hawks presents some rather novel situations and it is a well devised plot. As far as the story is concerned the only unconvincing character is the adventuress. The part is well acted by Louise Glaum—all vampire parts have to be acted, making them real or natural is a hopeless task, but the manner of her handling by the story is not of the best.

Frank Keenan and Charles Ray in "Honor Thy Name."

It is not convincing that she should represent herself to young Castleton as such a demure person and so completely deceive him.

Colonel Castleton, of "Belle Meade." Some months later Castleton receive a letter from his son informing him that he is going to marry a New York girl. The colonel hurries to New York and it does not take him long to see the whole situation clearly.

Rodney hears that his father is in town and he leaves the party at the cafe and the girl to whom he is engaged, to find his father. Castleton observes all this from the balcony of the Cafe de Paris. The girl immediately drops her air of sweet innocence. Castleton soon meets her and accompanies her to her apartment. He plans to be there with Viola when Rodney arrives.

The young man enters the apartment to find Viola embracing his own father. This is a terrible shock to Rodney but Castleton tells him that it was the only course open to him. It was necessary to save him from a marriage he would always regret. But later Rodney does marry Viola. She insists upon having him take her to the Viriginia home. When she refuses to agree to a separation Castleton arranges the fatal carriage ride.

Charles Ray furthers the favorable impression he has made in his former appearances. His part shares importance with that of the father and Mr. Ray does it full justice. Blanche White and Gertrude Claire are also effective. There is a pleasant atmosphere pervading the entire play and there is plenty of pretty scenery. Charles Giblyn produced the picture.

"Davy Crockett"

Pallas-Paramount Romance with Dustin Farnum. Reviewed by Thomas C. Kennedy

MOSTLY because there is plenty of the fresh outdoors in it is the Pallas production of "Davy Crockett" a pleasant and an ejoyable five-reel picture. Wonderous mountain scenery is revealed by the clearest of photography and the offering is further enhanced pictorially by elaborate interior settings. In such an atmosphere of beauty and natural splendor the romance of a picturesque character of history could not be anything but entertaining, even though it is a very stereotype sort of melodramatic romance.

Dustin Farnum in the Lochinvar act in "Davy Crockett."

Dustin Farnum is the vastly courageous Davy Crockett. As far as the personality of things go, Mr. Farnum has been seen to better advantage, though this may be due to the fact that he has not much support from the play, which at its best leaves one without an impression.

The story is based on the stage play and there is little doubt about its being much superior as entertainment than it ever could be in production on the speaking stage. The scene in the cabin which the wolves attack is an incident in the picture as it was in the stage play. The only difference is that the audience sees the outside of the cabin with real wolves barking and jumping at it instead of merely hearing the vocal gymnastics of a group of supers who collect a quarter for their efforts, that is they collect the quarter if they put up enough off stage howls.

The picture tells of Davy Crockett's love for a pretty girl named Eleanor Vaughn. Her father is a wealthy landowner. The father and the girl leave their home in the care of Hector Royston, a close friend, during their absence on a visit to England. Royston is a gambler and his indebtedness to Oscar Crampton gives that dishonest person power enough over Royston to force him to aid Neil Crampton in his suit for Eleanor's hand.

Vaughn dies during the voyage home and in a short time Eleanor becomes engaged to Crampton. However, she is in love with Davy and she makes this very plain to the trapper. So on the day of the wedding he appoints himself a young Lochinvar and kidnaps Eleanor just as the service is to be performed.

The picturization of the tale of Lochinvar, which Eleanor reads to Davy is a remarkably fine piece of picture production. Winifred Kingston is a charming Eleanor, and there is a good supporting cast. "Davy Crockett" is a romance built around a figure whose deeds of bravery stamp him a super-hero, and some of them make one smile a bit, but the picture is a strikingly beautiful one, and for this William D. Taylor, the director, deserves credit.

"Pastures Green"

Two-Reel "Flying A" Released July 24. Reviewed by Genevieve Harris.

THIS offering is a cleverly directed mixture of comedy, tragedy, adventure and interesting outdoor settings. It is a good picture for the vacation season because of the last mentioned feature. The photography of the release is good. Alfred Vosburgh and Vivian Rich interpret the leading roles, while George Periolat has a comedy role which he plays skillfully.

Alfred Vosburgh is seen as Bruce Blake, a young man of wealth, who awakens one morning to recall that he had promised the night before to marry a French dancer. He is not very eager to keep his promise and lays the problem of avoiding it before his faithful servant, Collins. Collins owns a farm somewhere in the mountains and he suggests that Bruce go there for a time. This takes the story into a number of pleasing locations. Vivian Rich enters the picture as a country girl who spends much of her time dressed in boy's clothes, fishing. She and the stranger meet and become good friends.

The comedy element is emphasized by the introductions of Uriah Sharp (George Periolat), a weird character, but amusing, who has taken a correspondence course in detecting and practices his chosen vocation on every possible occasion, going about armed with various disguises. He is the only one who remembers the real Collins, and he knows that Bruce, who has taken Collins' name, is an imposter. Therefore he "shadows" Bruce everywhere. Then, to complicate matters, the French dancer is found dead and Bruce is suspected of murder.

After some little uncertainty, the dancer is found to have died a natural death and Bruce is freed of suspicion. He has, of course, fallen in love with the country maiden, who also is something of an imposter, being really a wealthy gird adventuring. The various mysteries being cleared up, the two are married.

Carl M. Le Viness directed the story. The cast of players includes Josephine Phillips as the dancer and George Ahern as Collins.

Paying the Price

A Five-Part World-Paragon Production Featuring Gail Kane. Reviewed by Hugh Hoffman

THE excellence of the cast and scenic arrangements and photography are especially noteworthy in this production. There is the stamp of class upon it that is unmistakable. Expense has not been spared in the matter of talent, and a number of prominent names appear. Headed by Gail Kane in the leading role, we find a list of names including George Ralph, Gladden James, Robert Cummings, George Mageroni, and June Elvidge.

It will be conceded, in advance, by almost any moving picture fan that this company of players can do some effective work when they are all in one cast. Whatever the story lacks in originality or strength they are purely able to supply in style and force. The principal punch of the picture is the dynamiting of a large rock on the seashore, and also the torpedoing of a derelict vessel. The story revolves around the discovery of a new formula for a high explosive by a young naval officer. There are spies of other governments in Washington who have heard of this formula and are making desperate efforts to get it, by fair means or foul.

The young lieutenant, while still working on his formula, brings home his friend Richard, also a young naval officer. During Richard's visit he captures the affections of the girl Paul, his friend, had hoped to marry. After Richard and Judith are married, her husband turns out to be a cad. To pay his losses at cards he agrees to steal Paul's secret formula and turn it over to a foreign spy. He steals the formula all but one ingredient, without which it is worthless. Richard and the foreign spy go out to watch a test of the explosive, which is to be tried upon a large rock fired upon by a war vessel.

The two conspirators take up a position on an old derelict hulk lying near by. After blowing up the rock and proving the explosive practical, the naval commander decides to try it out on the old hulk. They send a torpedo in that direction and blow it into kingdom come, including the treacherous Richard and the foreign spy. After that the coast is clear and Paul marries Judith, as planned in the beginning.

Gail Kane as Judith, is most appealing and convincing. She is the type of sensible American girl that is so much admired by American men. Gladden James, as Richard, is really very classy, as he usually is in all of the parts he plays. His specialty is juvenile leads, but occasionally he does a juvenile heavy as in this case, and his work is telling.

"His Wild Oats"

Triangle-Keystone Comedy With Ford Sterling. Reviewed by Thomas C. Kennedy

"HIS WILD OATS" is a story telling of a man who visits a moving picture show with the other man's wife, with whom he intends to run off, and is greatly moved by the moral drawn by a screen drama. Then the trouble starts, for they have left a note telling the husband of their love and proposed elopement.

Ford Sterling is the eloping Ladies Tailor. With neither anything striking in the way of production and little that is amusing in the story, Mr. Sterling seldom gets an opportunity to be funny.

Polly Moran, as the flirtatious wife, Guy Woodward, as the husband, and Ella Haines are the other members of the cast in the main play. In the screen drama Vivian Edwards, Joseph Swickard and Harry Gribbon appear.

The fact that the husband is a sharpshooter adds somewhat to the interest of things. Clarence Badger and Ford Sterling are credited with the direction of the production.

"The Chimney Sweep"

Two-Act Essanay Drama Released August 1. Reviewed by Genevieve Harris

WHEN our heroine appears first as a child, then as a young lady with love affairs, we are accustomed to seeing two actresses play the role, but here is a little player, only twelve years old, who is clever enough to act both ages. Tommy Harper, another very youthful player, is the leading man, and first appears as a neglected waif, a chimney sweep, later on the secretary and protege of a wealthy man.

The appeal of this offering lies in the work of the two youngsters featured. It will probably be liked by children and by people who are especially fond of child actors. Even in the grown-up roles, they appear only as "kids" dressed up, but it is amusing to watch their work, though the play itself is very conventional.

Jimmy, a little chimney sweep, falls in love with Joyce Wynne, who lives in a beautiful home and is the daughter of rich parents. Because he thinks she is so pretty, he clips off one of her curls, while she is asleep, leaving a note to tell of his affection. Years later, Jimmy has become the protege of a friend of Joyce's father. He still loves Joyce, who does not know that he

"The Man from Bitter Roots"

William Farnum Featured in Five-Reel Fox Play. Reviewed by Genevieve Harris

THE admirers of William Farnum, especially will enjoy this picture, which presents the star in a very fitting role. As Bruce Bart, the misunderstood but invincible hero, he will win both the admiration and the sympathy of the audience. The story, which is taken from the novel by Caroline Lockhart, provides five reels of swift action and thrilling incidents which hold the attention throughout. There is very little padding.

Bruce Bart and his partner, "Slim" Naudin are prospecting in the mountain. Bruce strikes a rich vein of gold. His partner becomes jealous of Bruce and attempts to kill him. In the struggle, the partner falls on his own dagger and is killed.

The partner "Slim," has a sister somewhere in the East and to her belongs a share of the mine. Bruce plans to go east to find her, but before he does this, he has occasion to save the life of the easterner, J. Victor Sprudell. To him he tells the story and intrusts him with the girl's share of the property. Sprudell goes home and attempts to incorporate the Bitter Roots Mining Company, but Bruce arrives in time to check him. He discovers the girl he has been seeking when he meets a woman reporter sent to interview him. Together they go west and there fight Sprudell and his claim to the mine. Then Sprudell shows the girl, Helen, a book which he claims is her brother's diary, really a clever forgery. In this, the brother tells of Bruce's attacks of insanity. Helen, against her will, begins to fear Bruce and to suspect him of "Slim's" murder.

After a number of exciting incidents, they are successful in gaining possession of the mine. Then a dance hall girl, who had been aided by Bruce, plays detective and wins a confession from the man who forged the diary. So the shadow of suspicion of insanity and of murder are lifted from Bruce. Then he and Helen are married.

The cast of players includes Charles Whittaker, H. A. Barrows, Willard Louis, William Burress, Henry De Vere, Betty Schade and Betty Hart. Oscar C. Apfel directed.

College Makes Two Reeler

By S. G. Parker.

Ike Ashburn, publicity agent of the Agricultural and Mechanical College of Texas, at College Station, wanted to put over something in the way of novel, attractive publicity for this state institution, and he hit upon the motion picture plan.

He got in touch with E. H. Fitzhugh of Dallas, who has been making a number of films locally and in other parts of the Southwest; and the outcome is a two-reel picture of activities at the A. and M. college.

The film shows the cadets lined up for inspection, various military maneuvers, the operation of machine guns and light cannon, infantry charges and other features of a military nature; it shows inoculation of farm animals for various diseases. One scene shows an operation performed on a horse's jaw; cattle being dipped for tick prevention; street parade of the students in College Station on graduation day; football game between A. and M. and Texas University; Southwestern track meet, and a lot of other college activities. The film is so arranged that at no point does it drag in the least; and all in all, it is interesting to any one.

After the production was completed, a private showing was given at the Exclusive Feature Film Service in Dallas.

Arrangements were made for the distribution of the picture through the Exclusive Exchange, and it is booking rapidly, due to the efforts of Mr. Ashburn of the college.

Shortly after viewing the completed picture, Mr. Ashburn sent out fourteen hundred letters to last year A. and M. College students, telling them about the picture, and asking them to go after the picture show man in their town and get him to run it. Immediately the inquiries commenced pouring in.

Mr. Ashburn is putting over a lot of publicity about the picture in local newspapers just previous to the showing, in the several towns. This is a great help to the exhibitor, and also to the college, for the idea with them is publicity for the school and not with an idea of profiting on the venture.

Work on "Purity," the six-act art feature, completed, Audrey Munson, the noted model, is now engaged in the filming of a five-act American-Mutual production. Several of the scenes of this coming feature take place in an artist's studio located on a desolate island far out in the Pacific. Miss Munson in the role of an artist's model appears frequently in the nude in these particular scenes.

One of the biggest features to be produced by the Vitagraph during the summer months will be a special Blue Ribbon Feature by T. Everett Harre. The scenes of the story are laid in Egypt and call for some exceptional settings.

Metro Venetian Village Blown Down

Three One-Reel Subjects Weekly Released by Metro—Ralph Herz to Appear in Short Comedies

THE terrific storm which swept over New York on July 13 wrought havoc with the Italian Village, which the Metro company had erected in the Brighton Beach race track for taking scenes in Romeo and Juliet in which Francis Bushman and Beverly Bayne are playing. This will mean a delay of about a week in the filming of these scenes.

Five mothers of screen folk were made happy by the removal to Hollywood, California, of the Metro-Yorke company of players headed by Harold Lockwood and May Allison.

While Harold Lockwood was greeting his mother in Los Angeles, Miss Allison was greeting her mother in New York. Lester Cuneo, was with his parents in Chicago; Director Henry Otto was in St. Louis, visiting his mother; and Bennett A. Molter, Mr. Otto's assistant, was with his parents in Wisconsin.

The Yorke Film Corporation, producers for the Metro program of Harold Lockwood-May Allison features, has located in the studio and offices in Hollywood, California.

Immediately upon arrival of the company of players the filming of "Mister 44," a picturization of the novel of E. J. Rath, was begun.

Mrs. Blanche Rice, the widow of the late Billy Rice, the famous minstrel and comedian, is in "God's Half Acre," the Metro-Rolfe motion picture in which Mabel Taliaferro is the star. Mrs. Rice has now adopted motion picture acting as a profession, and is also engaged in writing scenarios.

Ralph Herz, the well known comedian, who recently made his debut on the Metro program in "The Purple Lady," supported by Irene Howley. has been engaged to appear in one-reel comedies for Metro. They will be produced by the Rolma Film Corporation, and one comedy will be released every week. Mr. Herz has already begun work on the first subject which is called "The Lady Killer."

The advent of Mr. Herz into motion pictures at this time calls for an almost superhuman effort on his part. He is a popular head-liner in vaudeville, and is now appearing in two performances a day aside from his work in the studio. With the addition of Mr. Herz, Metro is now releasing three one-reel subjects weekly. The others are produced by Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Drew and Max Figman and Lolita Robertson.

Vitagraph Gets Walburn

Raymond Walburn, who is well known as a popular juvenile actor in Broadway stage productions, is now a member of the Vitagraph forces, where he is fast repeating upon the screen the unusual success he enjoyed upon the speaking stage. His first appearance upon the screen was in the three-reel feature, "The Man Hunt." His work was received so well that Vitagraph has arranged to feature Mr. Walburn in subsequent pictures.

Mr. Walburn was born in Plymouth, Indiana. He is a graduate of Purdue University, where he first won recognition for his remarkable histrionic ability in the 'Varsity shows. Soon after leaving school Mr. Walburn went to Chicago, where he obtained a small part in a musical comedy. He left there to go to Los Angeles, where he soon became a prominent member of the Oliver Morosco stock company. It was in this company that Mr. Walburn received his training along with several other artists who are now well known on Broadway. His first Broadway appearance was in "The Greyhound." After that he joined William H. Crane, and was the juvenile in Crane companies for three seasons.

Mr. Walburn has played with both the Charles Frohman and David Belasco forces, and recently turned down an attractive offer to star in an American production in London. Mr. Walburn is a student of the drama and has one of the largest private collections of theatrical boks and writings in this country.

Clune Comes to America

Considerable experience in the film industry in Australia convinced George M. Clune that the really big things in the world of the motion picture are being done in the United States, and as Mr. Clune is desirous of making his mark in the art industry he has come to these shores to learn what there is to be learned and, having learned, to march onward and upward with the silent drama.

For eight years Mr. Clune was associated with the J. C. Williamson, Ltd., concern whose place in the sun of Australia's film circles is held by branches located throughout that country. He answered the call and served with a British regiment in Gallipoli for four months, at the end of which time illness forced him to leave the service.

Mr. Clune then returned to the J. C. Williamson firm, and later became connected with the Fox Film. Just previous to his departure for the United States Mr. Clune was stage manager for "The Birth of a Nation" during its run in Sydney. He is now a resident of Brooklyn, 384 Gold street, to be exact. Mr. Clune places intelligent but not inflated faith in his previous experience in the film industry to help him to his beginning in this country.

Mr. Roskam's new department will require the services of three artists who will work on special color effects for feature films.

A seven-reel feature recently placed upon the market was placed in his hands to be tinted and toned. Also the work on the flag in the ten-reel offering of Wm. H. Complete Adaptation of Stage Successes

Famous Players Star Pauline Frederick in "The Woman in the Case" and Hazel Dawn and Owen Moore in "Under Cover."

FAMOUS Players has annexed Marguerite Courtot as its latest acquisition of star territory. Miss Courtot is well known from her work with Gaumont and Kalem.

The adaptation of two of the five big stage successes the acquisition of which was announced by the Famous Players Film Company immediately after the formation of the new Famous Players-Lasky Corporation has just been completed. They are Clyde Fitch's drama, "The Woman in the Case," with Pauline Frederick as the star and Roi Cooper Megrue's celebrated comedy melodrama, "Under Cover."

"Under Cover" marks Mr. Moore's return to the Famous Players after a long absence and is his first appearance with Hazel Dawn. It is one of Mr. Megrue's most brilliant successes and has attained a great reputation as a play of action and mystery on the stage. It is therefore particularly well suited to motion picture adaptation and has been admirably directed by Robert G. Vignola.

In the cast of "Under Cover," which is released on the Paramount program July 20th, there appear Frank Losee, William Courtleigh, Jr., Ethel Fleming and other well known players in support of Miss Dawn and Mr. Moore.

Pauline Frederick has upset theatrical tradition and all the rules of stardom in "The Woman in the Case" by deciding that she would rather play the less conspicuous role of Margaret Rolfe, the self-sacrificing wife, instead of playing the title role of Claire Forster, which is the part in which Blanche Walsh scored a great hit on the stage.

"The Woman in the Case" is one of Clyde Fitch's most succesful dramas and contains in great abundance the elements necessary to success on the screen—quick action, suspense and great dramatic force. In the cast which appears in support of Miss Frederick there are several players of international reputation, including Marie Chambers in the role of Claire Forster, Clarence Handysides, Alan Hale and Paul Gordon. It will be released August 7th.

"Under Fire," "Nearly Married," and "Rolling Stones," the other plays which were acquired at the same time as these, will be released at a later date, which will be announced soon.

picture producers and actors. To Mr. Powell belongs the honor of originating the name of this club and has been one of the Board of Governors since the inception of the organization.

This club was organized about three years ago with a very small representation among the film actors and has been so successful under the management of such men as Mr. Powell and others, that today it has a membership exceeding 500 of the best known artists of the screen.

Exclusive Features to Release One a Month

Exclusive Features, Inc., which has done some of the biggest booking throughout New York state, makes its initial appearance in the producing field this month, with the drama "Where Is My Father?" starring May Ward.

Joseph M. Goldstein, president and treasurer, had this to say:

"Partly at the suggestion of a number of our regular exhibitors and partly because we were able, by a happy combination of circumstances, to line up a cast which is able to measure up with the best standards of picture making, we have finally decided to produce one-a-month big features. We feel that in the drama 'Where Is My Father?' we have struck a new note. Taken from the immortal novel of Alexander Dumas, we have faithfully translated into pictures the throbbing emotions of the tale. While the theme of Dumas is sensational, it has been handled with subtle fineness and exquisite direction."

May Ward, Exclusive gleamer.

Mr. Golstein pointed out that regularly henceforth Exclusive Features, Inc., will release a feature of five to seven reels every month.

Papers Sponsor War Film

The editor of one of New York's daily papers was so impressed with the power of the film "How Britain Prepared" in making the public realize the need for adequate preparedness that he entered into a co-partnership with the officers of the Patriot Film Corporation which owns the state rights to the film and agreed to sponsor the production in each town in which he has newspapers throughout the state by editorials on the subject and advertisements and news items concerning same.

Working from this beginning, N. J. Robinson of the Patriot Company, made a canvass of all the newspapers in New York, New Jersey, and part of Pennsylvania.

William J. Guard, the general press representative of the New York Metropolitan Opera House, who has had charge of the publicity and advertising of the Patriot Film Corporation, sailed last week for Europe, where he will spend his vacation.

Mr. Guard has been succeeded as director of advertising and publicity by B. P. Fineman. Mr. Fineman was formerly the motion picture editor of the New York Press and in the publicity office of the Fox Film Corporation.

During the convention week in Chicago, Al. Lichtman gave a special showing of the film for exhibitors, at the Colonial Theater. where the picture is now playing. It is said that a great number of immediate and future bookings were the result of this showing. as well as the commencing of negotiations for the rights to several states.

The booth of the Patriot Film Corporation was very well attended during the exposition, a large number of exhibitors being attracted by the tremendous amount of publicity the picture has received from the daily papers throughout the country.

Hegira of Universal Players

Following the announcement made by President Carl Laemmle and Vice President and General Manager H. O. Davis of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company, the Eastern players and directors of the company are gradually being transferred to the Pacific Coast studios at Universal City. Practically every day sees a new arrival at the film capital, where over thirty companies are now producing photoplays.

One of the first to arrive was Director Stuart Paton, with his leading man, Allen Holubar, the leading lady, Jane Gail, Dorothy Phillips, William De Grasse, M. F. Murphy, assistant director, Joseph Girrard and William Welch. Later arrivals include Director William Carwood, Director David LeBrandt, Ben Wilson, Irene Hunt, Edith Roberts, Florence Roberts, Howard Crampton, Lillian Concord, Gertrude Cameron and Hobart Henley.

Raver Studios Growing

The executive building of the Raver Studios at Rockville Centre, L. I., has been completed for several weeks and is occupied by the office force of the company. Every effort is being put forth to complete things so that the first big production can be released some time in the early fall.

A laboratory is being completed that will have a capacity of more than twice the requirements of the company.

While the first production will be of the kind larger than five reels, the name of it is not being announced.

General's Short Reel Star Program

The General Film Company announces that exhibitors are evincing keen interest in their campaign slogan "distinguished stars in one, two and three reels."

The General program for the week of July 17 is made up of these short length features, including dramas, comedies and scenics. They star such players as Edith Johnson and Wheeler Oakman; William Dangman; Mary Pickford and Henry Walthall; Davy Don and Patsey de Forest; Francis X. Bushman and Lillian Drew; Mae Marsh, Alan Hale and Donald Crisp; Harry Myers and Rosemary Theby; George Routh and Evelyn Page; Marie Empress; Sis Hopkins; F. Rankin Drew; Harry Beaumont and Virginia Bowker; and Tom Mix and Victoria Forde.

A New American Developer

Most photographers have not known that for more than a half year past there has been manufactured and sold in this country a genuine high grade developer, similar to Metol in chemical composition, and which is said to be better even than Metol. This product is called "Kathol," and so closely resembles Metol, chemically and photographically, that it is used without change in proportions of any formula, and gives photographic effects at least equal and some say superior to those obtained with Metol. Some of the larger motion picture and photographic concerns have been using it regularly for some months and state that they prefer it to Metol as it will do more work pound for pound, gives no dichoric fog, keeps better in solutions and can be more easily and cheaply maintained at uniform working conditions as to speed, contrast, etc.

Kathol is guaranteed to be a genuine, coal tar product, free from adulteration. The Kathol Manufacturing Co., Inc., of New York City, manufacture this developer entirely from domestic raw materials by an elaborate chemical process at its factory in New York City.

Kathol is the invention of Dr. C. J. Thatcher, a chemical expert who studied chemistry in German Universities from 1900 to 1903 and received his Ph.D. from the University of Leipzig in the latter year, since which time he has been acting as a chemical expert in a consulting capacity regarding conditions in the chemical arts for many large concerns, including The Eastman Kodak Company.

Dr. Thatcher spent several months in the laboratories of motion picture concerns, during which he demonstrated to their entire satisfaction that his developer, when used with a small amount of sodium hydroxide, gave photographic results quite equal to Metol, and contrary to the predictions of laboratory men, without any injurious action upon sensitized coatings, the film or paper bases. Kathol has already been used regularly for some months by a number of motion picture producers, (for example, The Lasky Feature Film Co.), who unqualifiedly commended it, some of whom state that they prefer it to Metol.

Kathol at the present time is selling at about half the prices quoted for Metol. Of course, the raw materials are abnormally high as is the case with all chemicals. The Kathol Manufacturing Company expects to lower the prices of its product as rapidly as cost of raw materials permits. It expects to eventually sell its product cheaper than Metol may be imported.

Films Teach Electric Washing

A motion picture devoted to the electric washing machine and iron has made its appearance under the attractive title "The Education of Mrs. Drudge." This film devotes its 1000 feet to show how a woman shackled to the old fashioned wash tub is emancipated and made happy by the purchase of an electric washing machine and iron. It's advertising of course, but advertising that is subordinated to human interest; and it thereby gets across its double message. The picture has been produced by the Western Electric Company and is furnished to central stations and electrical dealers to further their sales of the commodities shown. Western Electric offices are booking the pictures for advance production.

Consolidated Adds Stars

The first episode of the "Crimson Stain Mystery" which is being produced by the Consolidated Film Corporation at the Erbograph studios, will be completed within a few days. It is said this picture will be one of the strangest and the most unusual ever attempted in the way of a serial. President O. E. Goebel and Treasurer Ludwig G. B. Erb of the Consolidated Film Corporation are working day and night on the production. Maurice Costello and Ethel Grandin, who are playing leading parts in this mysterious picture, are given ample opportunity to present the best work in which they have ever been seen upon the screen.

During the past week Mr. Goebel has signed a contract with Olga Olonova, a young Russian vampire woman. Eugene Strong, a favorite young matinee idol, has been engaged to play the part of the artist in the production. "The Crimson Stain Mystery" will be released through the Metro exchanges.

Gordon Engaged by Metro

Harris Gordon has been engaged to play an important part in the new production starring Emmy Wehlen, which will be made by Metro-Rolfe, under the direction of George D. Baker. Gordon was for two years with Thanhouser, playing leads in Mutual masterpictures. He was with Reliance a year and a half, with Victor-Universal a year, and also appeared with the Famous Players and with Solax. Among his best characterizations have been the part of Dorian Grey in "The Picture of Dorian Grey," Tom Tulliver in "The Mill on the Floss," "The Disciple of Nietzsche," and "God's Witness."

Mr. Gordon was for five years on the speaking stage.

Beatty Handles Thanhouser Press

Jerome Beatty, a newspaper and magazine writer who has had wide experience in publicity work, has been made director of publicity for the Thanhouser Film Corporation at New Rochelle, New York. Mr. Beatty handled the newspaper publicity for Essanay's "The Strange Case of Mary Page." Before that he was a baseball writer on the New York Tribune. Mr. Beatty has had newspaper experience in New York, Washington, Kansas City, New Orleans and Los Angeles.

"The Faded Flower" in Demand

Making history in film circles is what "The Faded Flower," the latest Ivan feature is doing. Although not yet released the magnificence of the cast had prompted hundreds of exhibitors to request for early bookings on this play.

"The Faded Flower," which inaugurates the new Ivan policy of 100 per cent stories enacted in photodramatic form by an all-star cast, has resulted in hundreds of exhibitors writing to that concern congratulating them upon initiating a policy which should meet with universal favor, and requesting that this policy be continued.

Atlas Company Starts Work

Busy bees are flying around the Atlas office, laboratory and studio getting ready for the production of one-reel comedies, which will be produced by Tommy Mullens assisted by Joe Orth. All productions will be released through one of the large companies in New York.

Power's Cashier on Mexican Border

S. R. Burns, cashier of the Nicholas Power Company, is first sergeant of Company D, Seventh regiment of New York National Guard, which recently left for service on the Mexican border.

Mr. Potash Likes Pictures

The most contented-looking individual around the busy Vitagraph studios these days is Barney Barnard of "Potash and Perlmutter" fame. Mr. Barnard is being featured in several Vitagraph productions now in course of production, and how he does love it

"I've lived in a trunk ever since I started work on the stage," said he. "I've made every one-night stand on the map—and a whole lot that they're ashamed to put on a map. But believe me, this is the life. I come down to the studios in the morning, work like a regular fellow and go home to an honest-to-goodness house.

"Of course I wouldn't want Hughie Mack to use me for any of his rough stuff, but when it comes to regular acting the moving picture business is the happy hunting ground of the theatrical world.

"But don't take my word for it. Ask Kernel Nutt," he said, as Frank Daniels came out of his dressing room. "Frank made lots of one-night stands before they even had names for the towns."

And inasmuch as Frank Daniels was made up like a cannibal, Barney sought the safety of his own dressing room, for Frank carried a spear and Barnard knows Frank's playful disposition.

Manager A. Bert Estes made a business trip to Dallas, Texas, recently to secure feature pictures for the Busby Theater at McAlester, Oklahoma.

Among the younger and more vivacious screen sirens, none is more charming than Miss Margaret Gibson of the Horsley studios.

"War" Increases Business

All exhibitors in south Texas towns are rejoicing at the troop movement to the Texas border. In San Antonio there are now quartered some 35,000 soldiers of the various National Guard and regular army. In Eagle Pass, Del Rio, Laredo, Brownsville, El Paso, and intermediate towns the picture shows are playing to big business every day.

Of course the "war stuff" gets over best in these sections; and numerous film men have "dug up" old Mexican war films. In one instance a three-reeler was unearthed, a red, white and blue circular gotten out and a veritable flock of bookings came in. The exhibitors over Texas playing this film get good business at their end of the line also.

The call for every man belonging to a military company in Texas has taken a few men from the film exchanges, operating booths and even from the theaters.

Director Paul Powell, of the Fine Arts-Triangle Company, is rehearsing two scenarios at the same time. Powell was unable to decide which one of two stories to select, so he is rehearsing both of them and will produce the one which appears to the best advantage in the rehearsal. Wilfred Lucas and Seena Owen are to be featured, assisted by W. H. Brown, Clyde Hopkins and James O'Shea.

ATLANTIC COAST NOTES

Ivy Close, the English actress appearing in Kalem comedies, has two brothers in the army "somewhere in France." Before coming to America, Miss Close spent several months doing Red Cross work in French military hospitals.

Motion pictures showing the work of preventing and curing infantile paralysis are being shown in New York by the Universal Film Company. The titles on these films are written in English, Italian and Jewish. Included in the film are scenes showing the affected districts, stricken children, sanitary precautions necessary to prevent the further spread of the disease, how mothers may detect the first symptoms of the disease in their children, "close-ups" of the medical treatment given the children, scenes showing the exodus of children from the city to the country to escape the plague, taken at the railroad and ferry terminals, and the activity of the quarantine, Board of Health and hospital authorities.

Jack Sherrill is to be featured by the Frohman Amusement Company in a forthcoming five-reeler.

Alan Hale, who played opposite Pauline Frederick in "The Woman in the Case," has been engaged to play one of the leading roles in "Rolling Stones," another Famous Players production.

Valentine Grant, who has been visiting in Seattle, Wash., has returned to New York and is preparing for her next Famous Players picture, which will be directed by Sidney Olcott. She will play the role of a Scotch lassie. Her last appearance was as an Irish colleen in "The Innocent Lie."

Alaska is the home of Katharine Hayden, who appears with Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Drew in the Metro-Drew comedy, "Taking a Rest."

Theda Bara had a taste of "western stuff" during the filming of "Under Two Flags," when her horse ran away with her, then stopped running and tried to buck her off. However, she managed to stick on top and was not hurt.

June Mathis, now writing scenarios for pictures in which Mabel Taliaferro will star, was formerly an actress on the speaking stage.

Norbert Lusk, the photo playwright who has been in Monte Carlo for several months collaborating on photoplays with C. N. and A. M. Williamson, has returned to this country with a kitful of plays of all descriptions, the most important one being a serial, which the Williamsons wrote for magazine publication and from which Lusk prepared a picture scenario.

PACIFIC COAST NEWS

Director Lloyd Carleton is completing "The Shepherd," which was prepared for the screen by Eugene B. Lewis, head of the scenario department of Universal City. Dorothy Davenport and Emory Johnson play the leads, supported by Richard Morris and Alfred Allen.

Lillian Concord has reached Universal City from New York and will begin work in pictures. On the legitimate stage Miss Concord appeared in the Belasco production of "The Boomerang," Schubert's "The Midnight Girl," and was starred in "The Red Widow," following Flora Zabelle. For three years she was a headliner on the Orpheum circuit.

William C. Cabanne's father, Sarpy Carr Cabanne, died recently at Hollywood. He had come to California not long ago from his home in St. Louis in the belief that the change of climate would benefit his health.

De Wolf Hopper, it is said, was mistaken for Billy Sunday by a group of church picnickers the other day, and asked to speak on temperance. His speech horrified the audience, until they learned their mistake.

Bernard McConville is the author of "Gretchen Blunders In," starring Dorothy Gish, supported by Ralph Lewis, Frank Bennett and Eugene Pallette.

To provide entertainment for William Sproule, president of the Southern Pacific Railroad, his wife, F. S. McGinnis, general passenger agent of the road, Alic Delmar, and Marie Baldwin of New York, visitors to Universal City, Director Henry McRae, this week staged a train wreck in which a big Mogul engine and a train of coaches including observation car, diner, and a sleeper, and three day coaches, and an express car were sent over a bridge.

One of the oldest actors, in point of years, at Universal City, is W. H. Bogle, eighty-one years of age, a colored man, who plays the role of butler in many of the big productions.

Among the "props" for the Universal picture, "Behind the Lines," is a cartridge clip belt once owned by General Francisco Villa.

Earl Page, an actor with the Universal players, and Bernice Bobeck, a dancer of New York City, were married recently.

William Farnum, recovered from his recent attack of pneumonia, is at work on "Through the Flames," by Henry Christeen Warnack, under the direction of Oscar Apfel.

Roy Stewart, prominent in heavy roles in American Mutual productions for the last eighteen months, has joined the Universal Company and will play the villain in Director Jacques Jaccard's new serial.

Olga Printzlau is now a member of the Ince scenario department.

William Pigott has resigned as scenario writer with the American Company.

Ted Barron, author of "If Time Was Money I'd Be a Millionaire," "Billy," "Georgia Moon," "Lull Me To Sleep" and other popular song hits, has dedicated a song to the Universal's new patriotic serial, "Liberty."

James Buchanan, known as "the globe-trotting jockey," who has driven horses in races all over the world, is to appear in Universal pictures soon for Phillips Smalley and for Allen Curtis, who directs "Joker" comedies.

John Steppling, for the past two years with the American Company at Santa Barbara, and before that with Essanay and Famous Players' companies, has joined the Universal forces as director.

Hal Roach, now director general of the Rolin Company, was carrying mail on horseback in the wilds of Alaska three years ago. Two years ago he joined the Universal players in Los Angeles.

For one of the scenes in the Universal production, "Onda of the Orient," Eddie Polo made a dive from the forecastle of a ship going at full speed, into the ocean, a distance of over fifty feet.

Film stocks, during the past week, have been extremely dull, the best demand perhaps being for Lone Star.

Mutual Film Corporation: There are a substantial number of purchasers of both preferred and common awaiting dividend action, which is expected to take place sometime this month.

Lone Star Corporation: It is stated on very reliable authority that all of the preferred stock will be retired in the fall months. Film No. 4, entitled "One O'clock" is now finished and prints are being made.

Thanhouser Film Corporation: It is understood the films of this company will hereafter be released through the Pathe corporation, this to begin sometime in August. It is stated the new contract is absolutely satisfactory to both parties. Plans call for thirty-five five-reel features during the year, the one and two-reel releases being eliminated at the present time. There are now eleven five-reel features ready for release.

North American Film Corporation: It is understood the judges are now working on the manuscript for the sequel. This will probably be in three chapters of two-reels each, and, based on the popularity of "The Diamond from the Sky," the sequel should score satisfactorily.

Cleo Ridgley and Wallace Reid, under the direction of George Melford, are working on the fourth production in which they are co-starred, "The House of the Golden Windows," for the Paramount program.

Helen Holmes and her husband, J. P. McGowan, held open house at their new home at 4555 Pasadena avenue, Los Angeles, last week, in honor of Mr. McGowans' mother, who is visiting him from Sydney, Australia, and Miss Florence Holmes, Helen Holmes' sister, who is also visiting them.

R. E. Shafer, manager of the Los Angeles offices of the Hammond Lumber company, has offered to accompany the Signal Film company as guide to Eureka, Cal., where the exteriors are to be filmed for "The Manager of the B. and A."

"The Caravan," a story by Raymond Wells, is being produced by the author at Universal City. Lena Baskette, the clever cihld actress and dancer, is featured, supported by Claire McDowell, Jay Belasco, C. G. Briden and Malcolm Blevens. The story, in three reels, has an Egyptian atmosphere.

Crane Wilbur, now starring in two-reel Centaur-Mutual, makes his second appearance in "The Fool's Game," for release by the Mutual July 15. John Oaker and Mae Gaston, members of Wilbur's company, have the chief supporting roles in this production.

Rube Miller, director and fun-maker of Vogue-Mutual comedies, has added Gypsy Abbott to his company of players.

Because the strained relations between Mexico and the United States have made it impossible for him to remain long at El Centro with safety, William S. Hart, the Ince star, has found it necessary to erect an entire border-town at Inceville, for scenes in the current Triangle play by Monte M. Katterjohn in which he is starring. Already a few scenes have been filmed at El Centro, but these will have to be re-made.

Henry McRae and his company of players, including his assistant, Rex Hodge, Marie Walcamp, leading lady, L. C. Shumway, Charles Dorian, Duke Worne, Leonard Clapham, Eddie Polo and cameraman Harry Gant, have returned to Universal City from San Francisco, where scenes were filmed both at the Bay City and en route for McRae's new production, "Onda of the Orient."

Director Burton George has commenced work at Universal City on "The Heritage of Hate," written by Walter Woods, and in which the leading role is played by Roberta Wilson, who for a long time was the leading lady of the Jacques Jaccard company.

Helene Rosson has just completed her first year with the American Company.

"Sunshine Mary" Anderson recently gave a house-warming to her fellow-players, to prove to those who had teased her about her ability to "keep house," that she could do that as well as act.

Charles Hill Mailes, a recruit from the speaking stage, is now playing a heavy role with Robert Leonard in "The Eagle's Wing," a Universal play dealing with the preparedness problem.

FROM BANK TO SCREEN

Special to Motography.

Born in Georgia and educated at the University of Florida, and the Washington and Lee University, Arthur Albertson, Kalem juvenile, is a living refutation of the theory that one can never "make good" in the theatrical profession without going to New York. He had never seen the "bright lights" until his position in motion pictures was assured, and he went north to take the place of leading juvenile opposite Marguerite Courtot in "The Ventures of Marguerite" series.

He held a position in one of Jacksonville's banks, when he was attacked with "movie-itis." He began by doing extra parts with the Kalem Company, and was later advanced to leading roles.

Some of his best parts have been "Elwin Gordon," opposite Alice Joyce, in "The White Goddess," the Italian in "When the Mind Sleeps," lead in the "Thing of Hearts," the dope fiend in "A man of Iron," the "Ventures of Marguerite" series, in which he played Marguerite's lover, juvenile in the "Sis Hopkins" series, and now, leading juvenile opposite Ivy Close in light comedies.

He is five feet ten inches in height and owns to the ripe old age of twenty-four. His hobbies are painting and drawing, and in politics he is a staunch Democrat and is not interested in woman's suffrage;

Hobart Henley plays a young French naval lieutenant in "The Clique of Gold," a coming Bluebird feature being directed by Rupert Julian.

Eugenie Besserer of Selig is one of the few picture stars who does not own an automobile and does not want one.

Vivian Reed's interest in the Mexican situation is keen, for her brother recently left Los Angeles to join his company of militia at the border.

Three baby pumas are the latest arrivals at the Selig zoo.

Harry Lonsdale, on the legitimate stage, played "the Marquis" in "The Chimes of Normandy" for 397 consecutive performances.

The Selig studio has been having a lengthy sick list, attributed to ptomaine poisoning. It included William Robert Daly, Director Heffron, Fritzi Brunette, Guy Oliver, Al W. Filson, Sidney Smith and Harry Lonsdale.

Lule Warrenton has completed her first one-reel film play especially for children, "The Little Musician and His Friend." Little Lois Alexander and John Sterling play the leading roles.

Douglas Gerrard of the Universal forces gave a reception recently in honor of Mlle. Anna Pavlowa. Among those present were M. Dondre, Alexander Volinine, Rupert Julian, Elsie Jane Wilson, Sarah Truax, Grace Kingsley and Anita Loos.

Director Jacques Jaccard has commenced work on the big Universal serial, "Liberty," in which Marie Walcamp is to be featured with Jack Holt playing opposite and supported by G. Raymond Nye, Bertram Grassby, Maud Emory, Neal Hart, L. M. Wells and Roy Stewart. The story carries both an American and Mexican atmosphere, with much action between troops.

Director Henry McRae is producing a five-reel war drama, "Behind the Lines."

Gilbert P. Hamilton, director-general of the Century Film Corporation, with headquarters at Roundup, Montana, is in Los Angeles with his company of players, lead by Dorothy Farley, whom he is directing in a seven-reel picture, "Inherited Passions." Mr. Hamilton has engaged one of the stages at the Christie studios at Hollywood and also has stage room at the Pacific studios on Santa Monica avenue. Among the players are William Conklin, Frank Newburg, Millard Wilson, Mrs. Alma Farley, Charles Mulhall, Beatrice Van and Mrs. Hutchinson.

Fannie Ward has returned to the Lasky studios at Hollywood, after a vacation of several months in the east, and is beginning work on an elaborate production, "Each Pearl a Tear." Jack Dean, her husband, returned with her.

A number of spectacular scenes in the new Dorothy Gish play, "Gretchen Blunders In," take place on a three-mast schooner which proves to be the home of a gang of counterfeiters.

Frank E. Woods, manager of the Fine Arts production department, has gone to New York on his first vacation in three years.

Mae Marsh has the role of a girl who delights to tell fairy stories, in her next Triangle play. Robert Harron, who plays opposite, is a cub newspaper reporter. In the suporting cast are Carl Stockdale, Olga Gray, Hal. Wilson, Ruth Handforth, Bert Hadley and Loyola O'Connor.

Wilfred Lucas and Bessie Love are finishing their work in "Hell-to-Pay Austin," the Fine Arts drama written by Mary H. O'Connor. Paul Powell directed.

"The Undercurrents," a story with a Salvation Army atmosphere and a heart interest theme, has been completed by Director Otis Turner in five reels. Flora Parker DeHaven is featured, with Jack Mulhall opposite.

Complete Record of Current Films

Believing the classification of film pictures by the nature of their subjects to be of greater importance to the exhibitor than clsasification by makes, MOTOGRAPHY has adopted this style in listing current films. Exhibitors are urged to make use of this convenient tabulation in making up their programs. Films will be listed as long in advance of their release dates as possible. Film manufacturers are requested to send us their bulletins as early as possible. Reasonable care is used, and the publishers cannot be responsible for errors.

Brief Stories of the Week's Film Releases

General Program

Otto the Salesman—(ONE REEL)—LUBIN—JULY 24.—Featuring Davy Don and Patsy De Forest. Otto was a hard working ribbon clerk and in love with Mary, a shop girl. But a villainous foreman comes into the plot. The foreman asks Mary to come to his office at six o'clock, and is overheard by Otto, who disguises himself as a bunch of ribbon behind the counter. The foreman tells Mary of the pretty future if she would only care for him, but she leaves, slamming the door. Otto tells Mary he has heard all and asks her to marry him. He must prove himself a man before she will consent. After rescuing her from the foreman, Mary holds out her arms and makes him her hero.

A Sailor's Heart—BIOGRAPH—JULY 24.—Featuring Blanche Sweet and Wilfred Lucas. A sweetheart at every port has ever characterized the sailor, but it is believed that the sailor in this comedy carries the tradition a trifle further. Perhaps he was sincere for the moment in his declaration that each girl he met was the first and only, but with a sweetheart at home and one in another port and a wife in still another, fate dealt very kindly with him. He was the victim of his own impulse and paid back in his own coin, went his merry way.

The Conflict—(THREE REELS)—SELIG—JULY 24.—Featuring Fritzi Brunette and Charles West. A review appears elsewhere in this issue.

A Brother's Loyalty—(TWO REELS)—ESSANAY—JULY 25.—Featuring Francis X. Bushman, Beverly Bayne and E. H. Calvert. Hal neglects his wife and small child, having fallen in with an idle crowd in a cheap pool hall. Counterfeit bills are prevalent around the pool room, and Hal gets one and unwittingly passes it. The detective finds him at the home of his brother, Paul. The minister before the detective arrives persuades the brother to change identities for the sake of his family. Thus Paul is sent to prison. Hal takes his place as the preacher and goes in to the pool hall distributing religious leaflets. By accident he discovers the counterfeiting plant in the basement and the detectives and several policemen raid it. Hal reveals his identity and his brother is pardoned. Thereafter Hal and his wife are among Paul's most devout parishioners.

By Right of Love—(TWO REELS)—LUBIN—JULY 25.—Featuring Muriel Fulton, Dan Moulton and Robert Gray. Muriel, daughter of Fulton, a wealthy manufacturer, imagines herself in love with Farrell, manager of the works, who has usurped authority at the plant and insists upon a cut in the men's wages. Dan Moulton, who lives with his invalid sister Katie is one of the workmen and takes the part of the men in opposing the cut. At a ball at Fulton's home Dan makes his plea and is overheard by Muriel, who sees the vast difference between the two men and delays her acceptance of the superintendent. Finally she yields to Farrell's pleading threats of exposure and goes to Katie to make her wedding dress. Katie is forbidden by her brother to make the dress, but she does so in secret and loses her sight. Muriel and Farrell come for the dress and are driven from the house by Dan. Dan is arrested for assault and Fulton on the discovery of the bribe. Fulton dies from the shock and Dan released on bail, while Katie's eyesight has been restored. Muriel returns home with Dan and finds Farrell, who asks by what right the discharged worker is permitted on the place, she replies: "By right of love. He is now the superintendent of the factory and my prospective husband."

The Billionaire—(THREE REELS)—BIOGRAPH—JULY 26.—Featuring an all star cast. John Doe, the billionaire, who owns a controlling interest in the earth, decides to spend the week-end in gay Paree and Monte Carlo and leaves, taking with him Ping Pong, his valet. Doe and Ping Pong get into a series of amusing incidents too numerous to be mentioned herein, but they finally return home where the billionaire opens a theater, which proves to be an utter failure.

Canimated Nooz Cartoon No. 13—ESSANAY—JULY 26.—Canimated Nooz is able to announce with this issue that it has obtained the services of Mr. and Mrs. Vernon Shanty to demonstrate the new dances on the screen. "Walking the bow-wows" is the dance offered an anxious public. "Get a hammerlock on your partner, a little wicked music, and the rest is simple," Mr. Vernon Shanty declares. Dreamy Dud takes his boss, Carlson, into his confidence this time and permits him to share honors on the screen. The cartoonist appears drawing his famous figures, who perform on his drawing board instead of full screen. Canimated Nooz shares a reel with western scenic.

Will a Woman Tell?—VIM—JULY 26.—Featuring Rosemary Theby and Harry Meyers. Wifey gossips and stirs up the neighborhood and Hubby determines to teach her a lesson, and, having prepared her mind by pretending to be greatly worried, sends her to bed with the injunction not to look out of the window facing the woodshed. Her curiosity gets the better of her, and she sees Hubby bury something in a hole under a tree. That night he talks in his sleep and confesses a murder. Next morning as soon as she thinks he is gone, she confides in a neighbor, who informs the police. The "criminal" is arrested and taken to the scene of the crime, where the box is dug up. On the lid is the inscription: "You can't keep a secret but you can keep this." The laugh is on Wifey, and we hope she is cured of her propensity to tell everything she knows.

It is our aim to make this department as complete as possible, although to do this, we must have the co-operation of all the manufacturers of film in the United States. If brief stories of the films you are releasing this week are not contained in this department, it must be due to the fact that you have not supplied us with synopsis sheets. In that case please see that we are advised of your film titles and release dates, and furnished with a brief synopsis of the story. This department is intended for every film manufacturer, whether he uses our advertising pages or not.

In the Hour of Disaster—(THREE REELS)—LUBIN—JULY 27.—Featuring Romaine Fielding and Mildred Gregory. Nell Rudge, daughter of a shiftless laborer is adopted by James Gordon, a physician and surgeon. At the close of her last term at boarding school Gordon marries a society girl. Danby, an artist, has rented the adjoining country house and meets Nell and falls in love with her. The wife misconstrues the fatherly interest to Nell taken by Gordon and in a flame of jealousy orders her from the house. Nell's shiftless father, now a railroad employe, is discharged for drunkenness and with another discharged laborer rob the tower guard. Nell's train collides with a freight and she is frightfully burned. Gordon's wife, remorseful for her action, tries to intercept the train in an automobile, but too late. A reconciliation is effected at the hospital and wedding bells ring for Nell and Danby.

The Heroes—VIM—JULY 27.—Featuring Babe Hardy and Billy Ruge. Day succeeded day in one happy sequence for Plump and Runt. Occasionally they caught the drift of their teacher's meaning, often they did not, but what matter? Had they not beanshooters, tacks and other little things with which to annoy him? Was not Ray the object of their youthful passion, also a member of their class and did they not rob every orchard for her delectation? One day the circus arrived in town and then began the trouble. Fascinated by the tales of the flashy agent, Ray vanishes and Plump and Runt are left alone. Like true knights they take up the trail and at last locate the circus in a distant town. To their horror they recognize Ray as the high diver as she stands poised for her terrific drop through space. As she hits the water her lovers also dive in and pandemonium reigns. Down comes the tent, over goes the tank, and the villainous circus men count more stars than ever were in the firmament as the reunited trio set out for their peaceful country home.

The Sand Lark—(THREE REELS)—KNICKERBOCKER—JULY 28.—Featuring Henry King and Margaret Landis. Jenny, the sweetheart of Joe Manley, a fisherman, finds a weeping woman on the sands and brings her home. A child is born and Jenny, who has promised not to reveal the woman's presence, is placed in a compromising position when her sweetheart returns. The woman flees and meets a man who takes her to a neighboring beach resort. Joe follows believing the woman is Jenny, and on discovering his mistake forces the man to go with him to marry Jenny. The woman meets her husband, from whom she is estranged, and takes him to see their child. Reconciliation takes place after the man and Jenny's paralyzed father are burned to death in a fire caused by the paralytic as an act of vengeance.

What'll You Have?—VIM—JULY 28.—Featuring Robt. Burns and Walter Stull. Jabbs' steady customers try to persuade him that Robin the bartender he has just discharged is a member of the Black Hand organization and decide to perpetrate a little joke on him. After Pokes' meeting Robin on the street and purloining a watermelon from him, seeks refuge in Jabbs' saloon, poor Jabbs is so scared that he runs for assistance. While Jabbs is seeking help, Pokes makes himself at home in the saloon, sampling everything in sight. When Jabbs finally returns to the cafe with police aid, Pokes is having the time of his life. When the police order Pokes to come outside he threatens them with the watermelon and the police believing that it is a bomb open fire on him with their revolvers. The bullets hit the beer kegs behind which Pokes is hiding, with the result that the entire place is wrecked and both Pokes and Jabbs are deluged with the streams pouring out of the kegs.

Repentance—(THREE REELS)—ESSANAY—JULY 29.—Featuring John Lorenz and Anne Leigh. Helen Neal will not believe in God. Arthur Bennett, studying for missionary work, is a boarder at the Neal home. He loves the girl and she loves him. But he gives her up when she refuses to believe. He gets an assignment to India. The girl realizes that her disbelief has caused her to lose him. After many months an epidemic of disease breaks out in her home town. Instead of fleeing she stays and nurses the sick. Exhausted by her constant labor, she is called upon to nurse Arthur Bennett's mother. In the meantime Bennett has been through just such experiences in India. He catches the disease himself and after recovering returns home to rest. Just as the girl has nursed his mother back to health he arrives. He finds that through all the suffering she has witnessed she has returned to his faith and no further obstacles confront the two.

It Happened at Pikersville—(ONE REEL)—LUBIN—JULY 29.—Featuring Raymond McKee, C. W. Ritchie and Billie Bowers. Sunday morning Spent Spencer, Exhausted Eddy and Vimless Victor, three tramps, steal a bottle of whiskey from the box on the window sill of the home of Jiggs, owner of a distillery. The box is knocked off and the other bottles are broken. Julia, Jiggs' wife, hears the crash and goes after the tramps with a broom. She calls Jiggs, but when he arrives the tramps have escaped. The tramps celebrate, but attract the attention of a cop, who gives chase and Victor and Spencer are caught, but Eddy after being shot in the rear escapes by hiding in an ash barrel. The two are locked up and Eddy finds his way to Jiggs' distillery, next door to the police station, and has a fine time.

Local Color—SELIG—JULY 29.—Featuring Tom Mix and Victoria Forde. Vicky Hoskins, an eastern girl, with story-writing ambitions, goes West to get local color for a story, and Tom, the foreman of the Hicks ranch, plans to joke the eastern girl, and rigs up a dummy and hangs it to a tree and tells her that they were hanging a story writer who came there. Vicky decides to make love to Tom just to see how he acts, and John Hicks discovers Vicky's plot and tells Tom. Hicks and the boys then accuse Vicky of trifling with Tom's affections. A stranger comes to town and he is asked to perform a supposed marriage ceremony between Tom and Vicky, and too late the boys discover that he is a real clergyman, but Tom finds a means to cause Vicky to become content with her lot.

Selig-Tribune, No. 56—JULY 13.—Even though their country is at war, thousands of persons enjoy the races at Vienna, Austria; on the eastern front these German reinforcements are being rushed to the assistance of the Austrian armies in an effort to check the Russian drive; on the western front, according to the latest reports, the Germans have been forced to evacuate these trenches which they have held for months; the beauty of the celebration in New York, N. Y., demonstrates that a safe and sane Fourth is better than a harvest of crippled children; the Mississippi River Valley Power Boat Association hold their annual regatta, St. Paul, Minn.; Ralph De Palma, in his Mercedes, wins the 150-mile race from a field of eighteen contestants at the Minneapolis speedway; roping, broncho busting, bulldogging and wild horse racing marks the gathering of cowboys for their annual reunion at Las Vegas, N. M.

Selig-Tribune, No. 57.—July 17.—Crack girl swimmers race for American tank championship, San Francisco; twenty-five thousand striking garment workers parade in streets and hold open air meeting in Madison Square to convince their former employers there has been no break in their ranks, New York, N. Y.; the world's largest recreation pier, 3,000 feet long, 292 feet wide, and costing $4,250,000, is opened to the public at Chicago, Ill.; the giant German submarine Deutschland, arrives at Quarantine with $1,000,000 cargo of dyestuffs after having traveled 4,180 miles, 1,800 of them under water, Baltimore, Md.; a head-on collision of two locomotives affords a thrill to thousands of spectators who attend the celebration at Speedway Park, Tacoma, Wash.; veterans of the Civil War gather at Santa Rosa, Cal., for their annual encampment; the kind of work these boys are doing on the border, El Paso, Texas, under the supervision of regular army officers, is making our state militia an efficient body of men. Camp of the Fifth, Eighth and Ninth Massachusetts Infantry.

Mutual Pictures

The Vagabond—(Two Reels)—Mutual-Chaplin.—The third Chaplin comedy released by Mutual introduces the popular comedian as a kindly wanderer who rescues a girl from a band of gypsies. Reviewed elsewhere in this issue.

Pastures Green—(Two Reels)—American—July 24.—Featuring Vivian Rich and Alfred Vosburgh. A review appears elsewhere in this issue.

Gamblers in Greenbacks—Beauty—July 26.—Featuring John Sheehan, Carol Halloway, John Steppling and Dick Rosson. Jed Smithers, an artist, becomes disgusted with life in New York and leaves for the country, where he meets Grace Jonsin, a pretty maiden, whose father is a counterfeiter and the leader of a band of crooks. Jed gains Grace's consent to pose for a picture and when it is finished Grace's father and his gang steal it. Jed receives some of the counterfeit money from Cheops, who purchases a picture, and he at once takes it to the police station and it does not take long for the police to trace down Hop's joint. The crooks are finally overpowered and captured and Grace and Jed find happiness together.

Out of the Rainbow—(Three Reels)—American—July 27.—Featuring Ed Coxen, George Field and Lizette Thorn. A review appears elsewhere in this issue.

That Gal of Burke's—(Two Reels)—Mustang—July 28.—Featuring Anna Little and Frank Borzage. Charles Percival, who lives in Boston, starts for the west without the farewells of an uncle and two maiden aunts who feel that he has disgraced them by his reckless habits. Percival secures a position at the Burke ranch and at once Tommie Burke, who is Burke's tomboy daughter, and Percival become fast friends. Percival writes to his relatives and tells them that he is held for ransom of $5,000 by a band of Indians and when he receives the money buys a half interest in the Burke ranch and also secures a controlling interest in Tommie.

A Germ Gem—Beauty—July 30.—Featuring Orral Humphrey. Septimus Flux, a student of germs, who is purely a nut on the subject, receives a telegram from his wife's brother, George, stating that he would soon pay them a visit. When George arrives he kisses his sister and Septimus has a fit and argues with George and shows him the benefits of the sanitary kiss, but George couldn't see it. He resolves to cure old Septimus and that evening he goes to the laboratory and forces Septimus to go with him and they go for a ride in a taxi. They meet a couple of damsels and George makes their acquaintance and introduces Septimus, who held away lest he be infested with the germ. They come to a refreshment, but Septimus held aside, but his lady friend manages to get close enough to him to insist, so Septimus fell. The rest was then different and the man who had once been so fearful of the girl now proceeded irregardless of it. When they return home Septimus kisses his wife and it comes to pass that Septimus Flux gives up the study of germs.

Bungling Bill's Dress Suit—Vogue—July 30.—Featuring Paddy McQuire. Moon receives at the death of his uncle an old dress suit as his share of the estate. He sells the suit to a second-hand clothing dealer and it is stolen by Jerry, a crook, who needs a dress suit to attend a reception at which he intends to get away with a lot of jewels. Bungling Bill, Jerry's upper neighbor, falls through the floor and steals the dress suit. Bill finds a letter in the suit telling him that a lawyer named Daniels has a will which leaves him a mighty sum. He presents himself at the lawyer's office and is treated royally and that evening attends a reception, where he has quite a time playing up to the lawyer's daughter Dolly, who is Moon's sweetheart. Moon and Dolly plan to elope at seven-thirty, the time the maid has told Jerry to be on hand to rob the house. Complications set in, and Bill is exposed as a fraud, Jerry is captured, and Moon gains the lawyer's consent to marry his daughter.

Secret of the Submarine No. 10—(Two Reels)—American—July 31.—Featuring Juanita Hansen and Tom Chatterton. A review appears elsewhere in this issue.

Universal Program

Art for Art's Sake—Nestor—July 24.—Featuring Eddie Lyons and Lee Moran. In this comedy Fadeaway Ann, a noted crook, get two "hicks" to rob a house for her, telling them that in the house are valuable possessions which really belong to her and that she is being plotted against. The "rubes" are caught, sure enough, but so is Ann, who, realizing that the cops "have the goods on her," frees her willing victims.

Lizzie's Lingering Love—(Three Reels)—L-Ko—July 25.—Featuring Alice Howell and Fatty Voss. As soon as Lizzie is released from jail, her intentions to "go straight" are squelched by her old cronies and she finds that it would be better to obey them. She is used as an outpost in the operations of the house-breakers. At last she is ordered to aid in the sacking of a house which she soon learns is that of the man who had formerly saved her life—her hero. How she turns upon her pals and the result make some funny situations.

Cross Purposes—Rex—July 25.—Featuring Jack Connolly and Jessie Arnold. Lisa, in the power of the Grand Duke, is forced by him to procure some papers from her lover, Whitley, a young man in the war office. The latter, perceiving that she intends to drug him, does not drink the concoction, but feigns being doped. The girl's love for Whitley overcomes her fear of the Duke and she refuses to take the papers. Later Lisa and her lover overthrow the Duke.

A Splash of Local Color—(Two Reels)—Gold Seal—July 26.—Featuring Mary Fuller. Bessie Lee, a writer, has had several scripts returned to her from Tom Harvey, editor of "Modern Life." At last, reduced to poverty, Bessie is arrested for nightwalking and sentenced to an institution. Dreading the latter, she marries on the spot a man in the courtroom claiming to be a ranch owner, who later reveals himself as a burglar. After Bessie has proven her love for her husband, he departs, leaving a note for her which says that he has only married for selfish reasons, intending to desert her, but that he has since come to love her and cannot stand living with her platonically any longer. He writes, however, that if she really loves him he will return within a week and reveal his real identity. Bessie writes a story on her experiences which really does "get over." Her mysterious husband finally turns out to be none other than Tom Harvey, the editor, who was out after a story.

Just a Few Little Things—Victor—July 26.—With Wallace Beery and Gretchen Lederer. Fred and Mildred have a quarrel and their engagement is broken. Mildred marries an older man, only to find upon returning home that he is the father of six children. Fred later marries a nurse, to find to his dismay that she is the mother of seven children. One year sees both Fred and Mildred in mourning. After explanations concerning the past they decide to get married, which they do, and send the thirteen off to school.

Priscilla's Prisoner—(Two Reels)—Big U—July 27.—Featuring Cleo Madison. Gerrard Maxime leaves home with a friend because of a quarrel with his father. After wandering around the country for an indefinite period they come to a farm run by Priscilla Graves and apply for food, which is refused. Both notice where she has hidden some money, however. Awaking in the night Gerrard finds his friend missing, and guessing that he has gone for the money, he follows. But innocent Gerrard is caught for the theft and made to work out his debt on the farm. Gerrard falls in love with Priscilla and the story ends happily, with Gerrard's reconciliation to his father and the Maxine money paying off the mortgage on the farm.

Won by Valor—Imp—July 27.—With Sydell Dowling and Sidney Bracey. This story, written by Catherine Carr, shows how Lord Deering, wishing to win a girl by virtue of his real worth and knowing her aversion to titled fortune hunters, takes a position in her father's home as a groom. He has completely won her before his identity is discovered.

Creating Life From a Dead Leaf—(Split Reel)—Powers—July 27.—This picture, produced by the Educational and Scientific Film Co., of New York City, shows how a dried lettuce leaf, crumbled in a glass of water, can furnish nourishment for the growth of a whole colony of bacteria of various species. Views of water fleas, fresh water devil fish, Japanese gold fish, etc., are also shown. On the same reel is:

Jitney Jack and Gasolina—A comedy cartoon by Jack Evans.

A Great Love—Big U—July 28.—Featuring Nobert Myles and Vola Smith. The story, written by Olga Printzlau, is about an artist who has a misunderstanding with his wife. Going into the wilderness to paint without danger of interruption, he discovers Nell as just the kind of a model he is seeking. Nell falls in love with him and he at last has to tell her he is married, whereupon he returns to the city and his wife. The latter has meanwhile given birth to a child, and the third person in the family helps to effect a reconciliation.

The Circular Room—(Two Reels)—Imp—July 28.—Featuring Ben Wilson. Stuart Travers, son of an American steel magnate, loves Maida, the ward of Count Orloff, the latter being head of a league of plotters to destroy the Travers steel plant along with others producing munitions. How the love between Stuart and Maida prevails and the conspirators are brought to justice, is the concern of the plot.

An Unexpected Scoop—Nestor—July 28.—Featuring Myrtle Gonzalez. This story has as its plot the method in which Bert Allen, a cub reporter, gets a scoop on his rival, and also gets the girl, although things look decidedly bright for the rival until his luck changes.

For the Love of a Girl—(Two Reels)—Bison—July 29.—Featuring Harry Carey and Olive Fuller Golden. Cliff Buckley accidentally kills the sheriff. Realizing the position his daughter will be in, Black LaRue, a man born with an obsession for fighting, gives himself up as the guilty one. As his temperament is known about the locality, his story is easily believed and he is taken away to be hanged. But Black escapes, Jane learns of his sacrifice, and tells him that she will be waiting for him when he returns later, the master of his inherited fighting propensity.

I've Got Yer Number—Joker—July 29.—Featuring Wm. Franey and Gale Henry. While Binks is at the Cafe Salome, Spinner appropriates his car and takes some cabaret girls out for a wild and destructive ride, returning the car before Binks is ready for it. When the various charges are preferred against Binks as the owner of the car, he thinks he is guilty, having dreamed about taking the same ride with the girls. But when things begin to look bad for Binks, Spinner explains all.

The Mask of Fortune—Laemmle—July 29.—Featuring Malcolm Blevins and Marjorie Ellison. Fayette Durand, a girl with a mysterious ability to foretell the future, has a break with her father, leaves home and becomes a professional medium. One day Edgar Pearson, of whom she is very fond, asks her about a certain stock and she advises him to buy. Her father, not knowing who she is, asks about the same stock and she gives him the ruinous answer. But Fayette relents and at the last minute gives the opposite advice to both her father and Pearson—which saves her father's fortune and brings about a reconciliation, the father making ample payment to Pearson later.

Mutiny—Imp—July 30.—With Lucille Younge and Jack Holt. As the name suggests, this story deals with a brutal captain whose treatment of the crew leads them to revolt. A girl castaway figures in the story as the victim of the captain who is finally saved from his clutches by the mate. In the mutiny of the crew the captain is seriously injured, but before he expires he asks the forgiveness of his mate and the girl, which is readily given.

The Latest in Vampires—(Two Reels)—Victor—July 30.—With Harry C. Myers, Rosemary Theby and Sidney Bracey. This comedy deals with the trick a burglar uses to escape from a house in which he has been caught by the owner. This he does by framing up a story which seriously implicates the wife as a former vampire. But the crafty burglar finally is caught in the meshes of the law.

Universal Animated Weekly, No. 29—Universal—July 19.—How our citizen soldiers live while playing "policemen" for Uncle Sam, El Paso, Texas; royalty attends memorial service for Earl Kitchener, London, England; Duke of Connaught inspecting Western Canadian Battalions, Ottawa, Canada; dig for dead after ice plant explosion wrecks four-story brick building, Brooklyn, N. Feature Programs

Blue Bird

The Silent Battle—(Five Reels)—Blubird—July 24.—Featuring J. Warren Kerrigan. The struggle of a man to overcome the temptation of drink is the basis of this production. Tom Gallatin, a successful young lawyer, whose craving for drink causes him to finally reach a condition that necessitates his being sent to the country to recuperate. He has been in the toils of Nina, a siren, who resents his leaving. In the country he meets by chance a girl, Jane, who has been lost in the forest. As he is in a similar predicament, they join issues for the time and are finally rescued. But meantime he has fainted from exhaustion, and Jane gives him whiskey to revive him. It does so and also revives latent passions. He kisses her and she is revolted. Later, in the city, he again meets Jane. Another man is endeavoring to win her hand, and conspires with Nina to lure Tom to a ride in an auto at night. The chauffeur has been bribed, the machine runs short of gas and the couple go to a farmhouse where the night is spent. Jane is informed and refuses to see Tom. But at last the siren confesses the truth—that Tom spent the night in the automobile—and Jane forgives him. They meet again in the country and plight their troth.

National Association Meeting

FILM MEN MEET IN NEW YORK TO COMPLETE ORGANIZATION

THE mobilization of all its branches will soon be complete and within a short time the newly formed National Association of the Motion Picture Industry will be a real working organization.

A meeting was held at the Hotel Astor on July 25 for the purpose of selecting a branch committee and directors for each of the five classes designated by the organization committee as properly belonging to the association. These five classes are: 1, the producers; 2, exhibitors; 3, equipment and material manufacturers; 4, distributors; 5, miscellaneous, all those not included in the former classes.

The following directors to represent the above classes, with the exception of the second, were elected at the above meeting: Class 1, producers, Carl Laemmle, Commodore J. Stuart Blackton, William L. Sherrill, William A. Brady, Adolph Zukor, chairman; Class 3, equipment and material manufacturers, J. H. Hallberg, B. F. Porter, Walter J. Moore, Don Bell, Jules Brulatour, chairman; Class 4, distributors, P. A. Powers, Hiram Abrams, Richard A. Rowland, E. A. MacManus, Walter W. Irwin, chairman; Class 5, miscellaneous, Arthur James, W. Stephen Bush, Fred Beecroft, Wid Gunning, Paul Gulick. A chairman for the latter class has not yet been elected.

The committee on organization has formally announced the entrance into the National Association of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America at their convention recently held in Chicago. The exhibitors are allowed ten directors in the association. These men, elected at the Chicago convention, as formerly announced in MOTOGRAPHY, are as follows:

Fred J. Herrington, Pennsylvania; Thomas Furniss, Minnesota; Samuel Trigger, New York; Frank J. Rembusch, Indiana; Charles Phillips, Wisconsin; Maurice Choynski, Illinois; A. P. Tugwell, California; Louis Blumenthal, New York; Louis Levine, New York; Peter J. Jeup, Michigan.

The exhibitors already have a membership of 102 in the new association. The committee on organization urged each of the other branches of the industry to follow the example set by the exhibitors, so that the federation may be quickly organized and possess the great strength and influence for protection and promotion which must come from a united industry.

At the meeting ways and means were likewise adopted to throw the strength of the whole industry against that part of the Federal Revenue Bill which seeks to impose upon all theaters in cities of more than 3,000 inhabitants a tax of one-half of one per cent upon their gross receipts.

Also an informal conference of advertising managers and publicity directors was held. Matters of importance were discussed and a press organization was projected.

The committee at large on organization, which called the above meeting, is composed of the following prominent film men:

Carl Anderson, L. J. Bamberger, A. H. F. Banshof, G. L. Barrows, A. J. Barthell, Fred Beecroft, Mort Berger, J. A. Berst, J. W. Binder, J. Stuart Blackton, George Blaisdell, L. P. Blumenthal, John C. Bolte, William A. T. Brady, William Brandt, Cranston Brenton, J. E. Brulatour, Louis J. Bull, W. Stephen Bush, John F. Chalmers, Harry Cochrane, Henry Cole, E. N. Colley, Charles Condon, Wm. L. Mc Clure Syndicate Sues

Frederick L. Collins, the active head of the McClure newspaper and magazine syndicate, has brought a legal action against several stockholders of the Paramount Picture Corporation.

Mr. Collins alleges in the suit filed by his attorneys, that he holds a contract for the sale of the big film corporation to himself and associates in the McClure syndicate. This contract Collins avers was entered into by Ex-President Hodkinson, of Paramount, and six other stockholders several weeks ago.

On the other hand the newly elected president of Paramount, Hiram Abrams, has issued a statement through his attorneys, denying that Hodkinson and his associates had the right to enter into the above mentioned agreement of sale.

The McClure syndicate has been dabbling in pictures for over three years, having exploited "What Happened to Mary," one of the first serial successes. The syndicate has also promoted various other film enterprises, including the Essanay serial, "The Strange Case of Mary Page."

CONVENTION WAS FUN

Anonymous Exhibitor Saw Funny Side of Big Chicago Show and Writes His Ideas From "Somewhere in Michigan."

Dear Motography: Even if you don't know me, I know you like a book. I'm a mere humble and struggling exhibitor who attended the big convention held in your fair and sweltering village-by-the-lake recently. I'm not even going to tell you the name of my house—"one of the finest," etc.—nor my address. You may have noticed from the envelope that I am located "somewhere in Michigan," and that's near enough.

I just wanted to write and tell you some of the thoughts I had while I was at the big Chicago show. I got a good deal out of the meetings, but there was the funny side of it, too. Here goes:

"OCHS DU LIEBER AUGUSTINE!"

A show man from Iowa said to me—a punning pessimist he was—"Frank J. Rembusch and Fred J. Herrington are a couple of J's, and Lee A. Ochs has a suspicious wooden sound to me."

"Sir," I replied, severely, "you should be punnished!"

IN THE CELTIC ROOM

Old words with new meaning: "How many, please?"

VIVE DER KAISER!

Eugene Le Mire, who has a house somewhere down in the Francais section of your state, stopped at the Kaiserhof Hotel. No one was seriously hurt.

I noticed the following headline in the convention number of Motography: "Civilization in Chicago." I hope the delegates didn't take that to mean anything personal.

As they are all mighty good Celts, I suggest the following names as charter members in the A. O. C. R. (Able Order of the Celtic Room. You were there with the rest of 'em, weren't you, Mr. Ed.?): O'Toole of Chicago, O'Donnell of Brooklyn, Sweeney of Chicago, McCray of West Virginia, Moore of Kansas, McMahon of Connecticut, Maguire of Oregon. If the club is as popular as the room was, there'll soon be a thriving membership.

BUT THEY DIDN'T TELL THEIR WIVES

No one can say the show was dry,
Even should he choose;
The Coliseum, broad and high,
Was filled chock full of booths.

Some fellows claimed that the feature talks at the convention were too long and that there was too much hot air in general, but the Chicago show was a big one and we must remember it takes more gas to run a Fiat than it does to put ginger into a Hennery. It's just natural, that's all. I just pulled down my respirator and let 'em go to it.

Yours truly,
I. M. Gladimehome.

Triangle Makes Hit in Australia

That Triangle plays are setting the pace for ambitious Australian capitalists, bent on producing film dramas is the opinion expressed, this week, by Rudolph Buchner, who as representative of the Theater Magazine of Australia, spent a day inspecting the mammoth plant of Thomas H. Ince at Culver City.

"Australia is in the throes of the motion picture craze," declared Buchner. "The people over there go every day and night. American producers have taught them many things concerning the making of screen drama, but I cannot help myself from emphasizing the excellence of Triangle plays. Your 'Peggy' was one of the most artistic treats offered the public in a century, while 'Hell's Hinges' caused an equal sensation. I am diverting from my subject when I select individual productions; what I meant to say is that there is scarcely room for comparison. In other words, one sizes up well with all the others."

Big New England Theater Deal

A $7,500,000 theater deal has just been completed in New England involving the Gordon and Olympia interests, and theaters of many of the principal cities. By the arrangement practically completed approximately $2,000,000 and more than 20,000 shares of stock in the Olympia Theaters, Inc., changed hands.

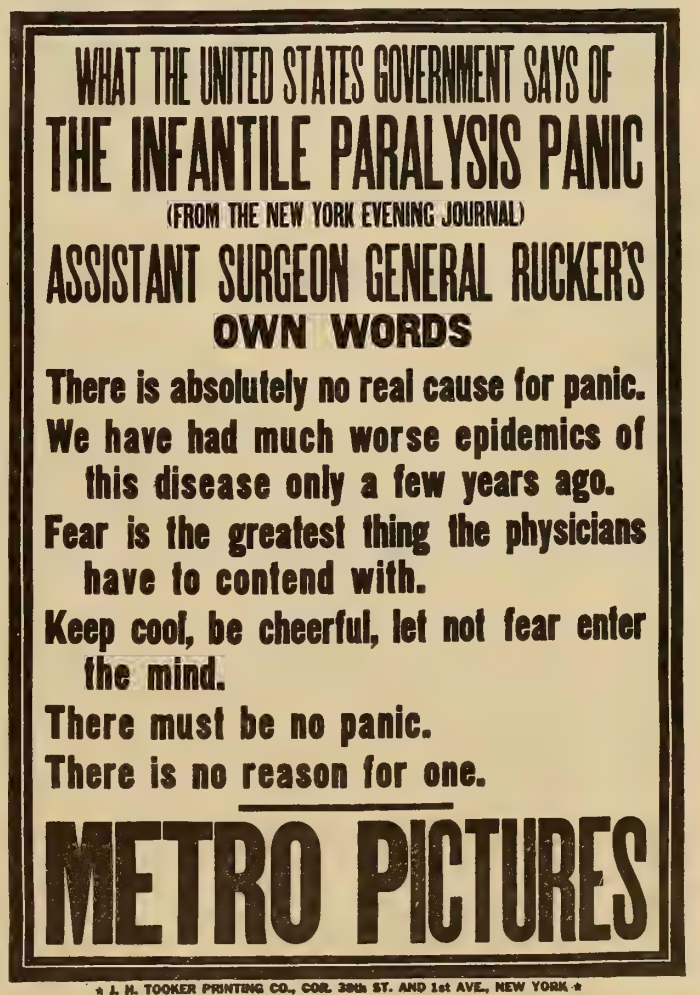
Exhibitors Crippled by Health Law

MANUFACTURERS GIVE ASSISTANCE DURING EPIDEMIC

THE exhibitors of Brooklyn and New York feel that they are being unfairly treated in the fight against the plague of infantile paralysis, for although the health authorities say that the worst of the epidemic is over and that there is considerable abatement of the disease, there has been no abatement in the hardships of local exhibitors.



The Evening World-Universal moving picture wagon fighting infantile paralysis in the New York slums. Pictures were shown and lectures given.

As a result of the order prohibiting children under sixteen years of age to attend moving picture theaters, over one-third of the houses in Brooklyn have had to close, a goodly proportion of the remainder have discontinued matinees and will also be compelled to close before long, which means that many exhibitors will lose their entire investments and in some cases their life savings. The exhibitors have sent a memorandum to Mayor Mitchell putting the case before him and pointing out the hardship which is being inflicted upon the moving picture houses which is not being placed upon any other form of amusement. Also a committee has waited upon Commissioner of Licenses George W. Bell with a request to divide the city into zones and that in those sections which are not affected by paralysis the theaters be permitted to carry on their regular business, inasmuch as there is an ordinance anyway to the effect that no child under sixteen is allowed to attend a picture theater unless attended by an older person.

The manufacturers have appreciated the great burden under which the exhibitors are laboring and are doing all in their power to help. The Universal Company has made a film "Fighting Infantile Paralysis," and has issued fifty prints which will be exhibited in theaters all over the country under the auspices of the newspapers. The New York Evening World in conjunction with the Universal Company is showing the film on motor trucks equipped with translucent screens. A lecturer from the New York Board of Health accompanies the truck, and gives graphic demonstrations of the manner in which the disease can be both prevented and alleviated by mothers in their own homes. The Universal Company is making no charge for the use of this film in theaters or to newspapers which wish to use it. This company has also assured the exhibitors that no one using its service will have to close up on account of his film rental bills.

The World Film Corporation has also come forward with an offer to help share the burden of the exhibitor and invited every contract customer to call on the New York manager for personal consultation to arrange relief measures during the period the health order is in force. It has stated its sincere determination to help every way it can and ask every customer who feels that he needs relief to come to it unhesitatingly, knowing that he is coming to the home of his friends.

The Metro Film Company sent a special envoy to Washington to confer with Assistant Surgeon General Ruckers on the panic and through a widespread distribution of handbills carrying his assurance that there was really no cause for panic has helped to quiet the fear, and it also is conducting a newspaper campaign along this same line.

UNIVERSAL GETS EXCHANGES

Eight Distributing Offices Formerly Owned by Carl Laemmle and P. A. Powers Bought. Fleckles and Lesserman Promoted.

The Universal Film Manufacturing Company has just absorbed eight important exchanges. The sum paid is said to have been $1,000,000 in cash.

Four of these distributing headquarters were formerly owned by Carl Laemmle and four by P. A. Powers. The exchanges purchased from Mr. Laemmle are located at Chicago, Minneapolis, Omaha and Des Moines; those formerly in possession of Mr. Powers are in Indianapolis, Buffalo, Cleveland and Albany. Although these exchanges have been handling Universal films, they have up to date been owned by the individuals instead of the company itself.

Coincident with the absorption of the above offices, Universal has made two important appointments. Maurice Fleckles has been made Universal and Bluebird manager for the Chicago territory, which includes Minneapolis, Milwaukee, Des Moines, Davenport and minor cities, and I. L. Lesserman has been named manager for the Chicago exchange.

Mr. Fleckles originally was a photographer. In 1906 he made his first connection with Carl Laemmle and managed the Chicago Airdome at Forty-seventh street and Ashland avenue. He afterward managed the Halsted Theater at Twelfth and Halsted streets. Later on Mr. Fleckles was made manager of the Chicago Laemmle Film Exchange and when Mr. Laemmle opened his branch offices in Minneapolis, Des Moines and Omaha, Mr. Fleckles was promoted to the position of general manager of all these offices.

Mr. Fleckles is known by practically every exhibitor in the central states.

Mr. Lesserman, who is now manager of the Laemmle Film Service in Chicago, has been connected with the moving picture industry for the last seven years. Previous to that he worked for the Metropolitan Life Insurance Company for sixteen years. In the year of 1909 Carl Laemmle offered him the position of city solicitor for his exchange in Chicago. Mr. Lesserman worked his way forward, making the acquaintance of almost every exhibitor in the locality. He is well liked and is a capable man.

FILM MEN HOLD PICNIC

Minneapolis Exchange Managers and Road Men Invite Film Men of Vicinity to Big Outdoor Celebration at Parker's Lake

Exchange managers and roadmen of Minneapolis and the vicinity, at the suggestion of Manie Gottleib, manager, the Favorite Feature Film Corporation, held a meeting and decided to have a big outdoor celebration on August 2 for all interested in the industry. Film men of St. Paul and all nearby towns were invited to join in the jollification and the men were urged to bring their wives, children or sweethearts. A half holiday was declared on that date and Parker's Lake, Minnesota, was chosen for the scene of the festivities.

W. H. Stafford, L. V. Valvert, Harry Towe and W. J. Egan composed the committee on arrangements. The athletic committee was made up of A. A. Hixon and J. L. Johnston. The publicity committee was made up of T. E. Mortensen, W. J. Egan and J. L. Johnston.

Among the features arranged for were a baseball game between the "Road Hogs" and the "Money Exchangers," formerly the "Flimflammers," a fancy swimming act by Victor Hodupp and Manie Gottlieb, a two-block endurance race for cars under 33,000 cubic inch piston displacement between Harry Rowe, Tom Hamlin and C. R. Gilmour. Harry Rowe's pickaninny band of twenty pieces furnished music for the merrymakers.

ONE CONVENTION A YEAR

Manager Louis H. Frank Notifies Accessory Men of Passage of New Rule to Support One Show a Year

Louis H. Frank, manager of the Sixth National Convention of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America, has sent out a letter to all accessory men in the industry calling their attention to the fact that at the convention just past it was decided that there shall be but one exposition a year and that to be in conjunction with the annual meeting of the national body, and exhorting them to have nothing to do with any other exposition but the one given by the national body next year.

Mr. Frank asks that they keep this new law in mind and allow no state convention of any kind to insist upon their helping them in the day of a display.

Another Broadway Star Feature by James Oliver Curwood is rapidly nearing completion under the supervision of Director Eugene Mullin.

Director Allan Curtis is filming a one-reel comedy with the Universal Joker Company, entitled "Father Gets in Wrong."

Roy McRay has joined the Mutual forces, and will assist Rube Miller in directing. He will also play important roles in these Vogue comedies.

Mutual has acquired some new faces, which will appear in Vogue comedies in the near future. Lillian Hamilton will be Rube Miller's new leading comedienne and will play in connection with Ben Turpin, Harry Huckins and O. Evans.

Nazimova in First Brenon Release

LEWIS SELZNICK AND STANLEY MASTBAUM BRENON'S ASSOCIATES

HERBERT BRENON, who recently formed an independent producing company to be known as the Herbert Brenon Film Corporation, announces that he has secured Madame Alla Nazimova as the star for the first release of this company and also has obtained the world's rights to "War Brides," in which the tragedienne appeared a short time ago.

Mr. Brenon, like practically every other motion picture producer, has been trying for some time to get Madame Nazimova to sign a contract for the films but was unable to do so until she witnessed "A Daughter of the Gods," the last production which Mr. Brenon made for William Fox, and then she made up her mind. She said she felt that a man who could create and produce such a phantasy was the man under whose direction she wished to appear. The actress set her own figure for her services which is believed to be the highest amount ever paid a motion picture star for one picture.

Mr. Brenon has made up his mind to produce no battle scenes in connection with this picture as he believes the public is tired of them, but the appeal will be made through its terrific suspense and tragic yet powerful finish which will give Madame Nazimova an opportunity to prove her right to the title of the foremost tragedienne on the American stage.

The celebrated Mary Garden in famous vehicles will also be one of the unusual features on the Brenon program.

Lewis J. Selznick of New York and Stanley Mastbaum of Philadelphia will be the business associates of Mr. Brenon in this new corporation, and the Brenon productions will be released through the Lewis J. Selznick Enterprises. Mr. Selznick and the young director are old friends and worked together with the Universal Film Manufacturing Company. Although Mr. Selznick is considered by some as a revolutionist Mr. Brenon is absolutely in sympathy with the step he has taken. The campaign which he plans threatens to throw the market wide open, the program manufacturer will suffer but the exhibitor will benefit. The day is fast approaching when exactly the same conditions will exist in this country which now exist in England. The exhibitors will form themselves into various small bodies and these small bodies will engage a representative at a high salary whose duty will be to examine the entire output of the various manufacturers and make up their program as a result of these inspections. This means that the grade of the motion picture entertainment will rise; and the incompetent manufacturer or producer's output can only reach the level which it deserves, while the men who make a production which has a great public appeal will gather in the greatest financial returns and this is as it should be.

Stanley Mastbaum also has a record, which places him as one of the greatest individual exhibitors in America today. Mr. Mastbaum says he is interested in the future of Mr. Brenon's productions for one reason, that whenever one of the productions of this director was played at his house he was sure of handsome financial profits. He has the utmost faith in the plans and ambitions of the young director and as the owner of over forty theaters his judgment in the selection of the stars and plays will be of great assistance.

The entire staff, including the heads of all the departments, whose remarkable work made "A Daughter of the Gods" possible, have remained with their head in the new company and so Mr. Brenon feels, although as he says himself he is no business man, he is supported by people fully competent to handle the business end of the new proposition for him.

PATHE HAS CHICKEN CHASE

"Who's Guilty?" Stirs Up Yonkers When a Prize Rooster Used in the Scenes Refuses to Be Caught.

When it came time to produce "The Irony of Justice," the fourteenth and last of the "Who's Guilty?" series of photoplays produced by Arrow Film Corporation and released by Pathe Exchange, Director "Larry" McGill found the scenario called for a number of first-class chickens—real chickens, not on the Broadway type.

Mr. McGill looked far and wide to secure a pen of fancy fowl, and finally at Ridgefield, N. J., he found on the poultry farm of Henry Hartling more than a thousand Campines of blooded stock.

An effort to borrow seven of these chickens, six hens and a rooster, met with indignant refusal.

McGill then asked the price of the fowls, thinking to buy them outright and sell them after the picture was made with as little financial loss as possible. When told the price the director almost fell dead, for he had selected a rooster for which the owner already has refused a thousand dollars. Mr. Martling, after much persuasion, finally agreed to loan all the chickens provided McGill would send an auto for them and allow him to accompany them to the location. This was done.

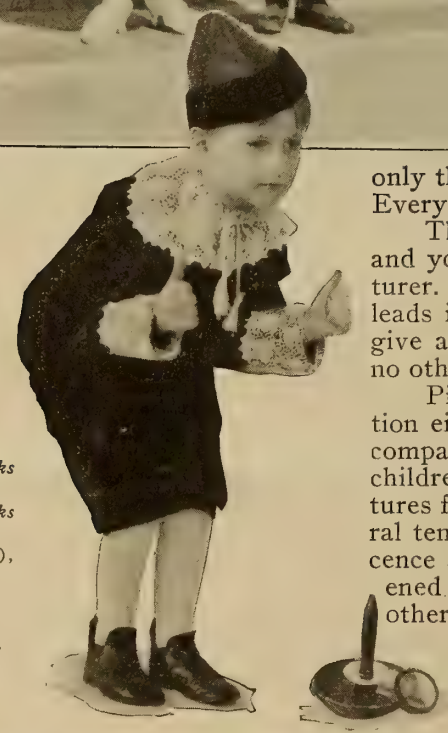
The scenes progressed beautifully, but when the posing was finished McGill's troubles began. Mr. $1,000 Rooster refused to allow himself either to be caught or to be cooped. Instead, he started to investigate Yonkers, where the Arrow studios are.

Work had to be suspended while Tom Moore, Anna Nilsson, Mr. Moore's co-star, Mr. McGill, Mr. Martling, two camera men and all the assistants and other actors on the job went chicken chasing. At last McGill hit on a scheme to get what he was after. He sent Assistant Director Kline to the studio for a huge black cloth and a curtain pole. When these were brought back to the spot where the rooster had lighted and seemed to defy capture, the black cloth was carefully spread out and gradually lifted over his head. Then the pole was stuck out by timid hands. The trick worked. The rooster thought the sun had set, climbed up on the pole and crowed twice.

Universal's big preparedness photoplay, "The Eagle's Wings," is making progress toward completion under the direction of Robert Leonard. The featured leads are played by Herbert Rawlinson and Grace Carlyle, supported by Vola Smith, Charles Mailes, Charles Gunn, Albert MacQuarrie and Rodney Ranus.

Children's Plays

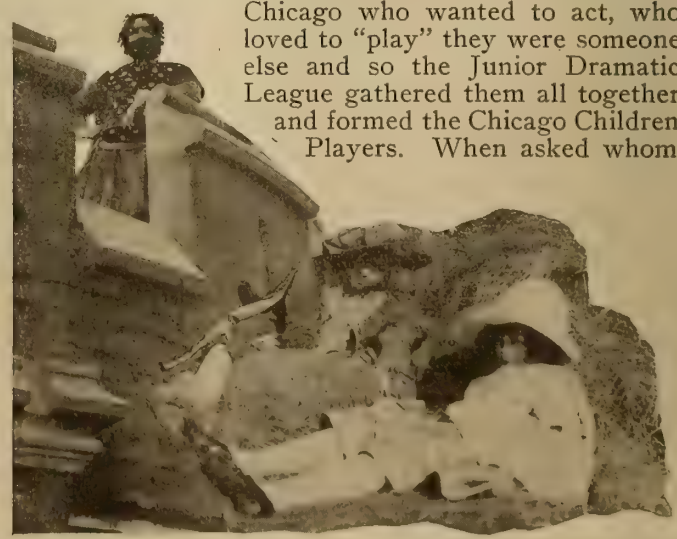
ABOUT ACTORS WHO DO NOT "ACT"



THE children of America are demanding their rights in the motion picture world. They have asked for pictures which will appeal to them, they have told which kind of pictures they like to see, and through their parents and interested club women have exerted their influence on the manufacturer to produce plays especially fitted for them. They have even gone a step further and said that if they cannot get from the older people what they want they will make the pictures themselves. Children are born mimics, they love to dress up, they are always "playing" they are some imaginary person—and what more is needed to make a successful actor? With them it is not acting but simply living in the world of their imagination.

Did we not all as children delight in acting out plays which we had made up ourselves? How many times have we recited the old Mother Goose rhymes and each child impersonated one of the characters, have played about Goldie Locks and the three bears or Red Riding Hood and the wolf. Why should not this natural trend and talent of the children be turned to some account so that they can not only amuse themselves but entertain other children and older people as well? For it is not only the little folks who delight in seeing other children in pictures. Everyone loves to see kiddies on the screen.

This appreciation of the child artists and their great appeal to old and young alike is being realized more and more by the film manufacturer. They marvel at the histrionic talent displayed, the list of child leads is growing, and child parts are being written into the plays. They give an added touch of comedy or heart appeal which can be secured in no other way.



Pictures for children enacted by children are no longer an innovation either on the legitimate stage or on the screen, and a number of companies have been started within the last year composed entirely of children. This is a long step in advance in the campaign for cleaner pictures for with the admittance of the children into the pictures the natural tendency is toward better things—the little child is symbolic of innocence and purity and many a lesson can be brought home, and a hardened heart softened by the little child which could not be touched in any other way. The influence of the little ones is going to be felt more and more in the film world.

Tommy Snooks and Bessie Brooks taking a stroll (above), and Jack-Jump-Over the Candlestick.

Chicago, which is making rapid strides toward establishing herself as the center of the film industry, is not behind in this new phase of the business. There were little children in Chicago who wanted to act, who loved to "play" they were someone else and so the Junior Dramatic League gathered them all together and formed the Chicago Children Players. When asked whom and Children Players

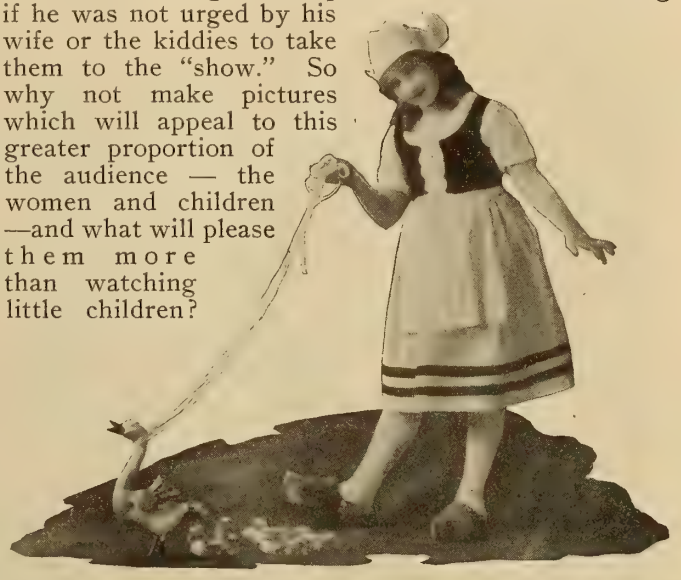
BY B. F. BARRETT



they liked best to impersonate they turned to their first love—the characters and jingle which their baby minds first mastered—Mother Goose and her many children. So Helen Hamilton wrote a play for them—"The Modern Mother Goose." They put it on in a real opera house and the "standing room only" sign was put out at every performance. It was a pleasure to hear the cries of joy from the little folks in the audience as the well known characters came to life. The success of the children in this play and the enthusiasm with which it was received by young and old gave Frederick R. Clark, president of the Fort Dearborn Photoplays Company of Chicago, the idea of using these same children and this same play for a film production so that children all over the country could enjoy it, and under the direction of Mathew C. von Betz, a five-reel film was evolved with these same Mother Goose people. All the characters whom the children love will bow to them from the screen—Mother Goose, Little Boy Blue, Jack and Jill, Little Bo Peep, Peter-Peter-Pumpkin-Eater, Jack-be-Nimble, Little Miss Muffet, Mistress Mary, Jack Horner, Tommy Snooks and Bessie Brooks, and many other people the children can tell about.

There are one hundred and fifty children in the cast ranging from three to sixteen, and they are all amateurs, just their natural baby selves. The only grown person is a formidable-looking giant who captures the children of the Old-Woman-Who-Lived-in-a-Shoe and hides them away in his dungeon, and all pleas to soften his heart so he would release them prove unavailing until the three fiddlers of Old King Cole play for him and their music melts his heart and the children are released. Many of the scenes were taken at the University of Chicago, the tower at Stagg field was utilized for the giant's tower, the Elizabethan room of the Congress Hotel formed the throne room, and the many city parks gave artistic exteriors.

If any skeptical person doubts that the children can act let them just look over the pictures here and decide whether any real-grown-up players could assume better poses or more nearly look the part than these amateur Mary Pickfords and Charlie Chaplins.

The small players are so enthusiastic about this acting and being real "movie stars" that they are not ready to stop but want to go right ahead and act some more, and the Fort Dearborn Company will next direct the children in Little Red Riding Hood, to be followed by Sleeping Beauty.

The efforts of these new companies which are being formed to produce plays for children by children show the unconscious influence the child exerts in the making of cleaner and better films. Under the slogan of "better films for children" and with the kiddies themselves acting in them the producers have no use for vampires and pink slip plays. Their object is not to see how near the danger line they can go and still be able to get by the censors but rather to see how far away from the line they can keep and still give pictures which will appeal to the public. They are working on the principle that the greater proportion of the audience in moving picture theaters is made up of women and children, in fact the tired business man in most cases would not go to the picture house in the evening if he was not urged by his wife or the kiddies to take them to the "show." So why not make pictures which will appeal to this greater proportion of the audience — the women and children —and what will please them more than watching little children?

"There was an old woman who lived in a shoe, She had so many children she didn't know what to do." Above, "Goosey, Goosey Gander, whither wouldst thou wander? Below, the bachelor forced to bring his wife home on a wheelbarrow.—Fort Dearborn Photoplays Company stars.

EXHIBITORS' BRANCH ADDED

North Carolina Comes Into M. P. E. L. at Well-Attended Convention Held at Durham—Rembusch of Indiana Organizer.

Another strong branch has been added to the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America.

Frank J. Rembusch, president of the Frank J. Rembusch Enterprises of Shelbyville, Indiana, and elected one of the ten directors of the League at the recent sixth national convention in Chicago, has returned from North Carolina, where he organized the exhibitors of that state and brought the branch into the League.

More than seventy exhibitors and exchangemen were present at the meeting, which was held at Durham. Following the organization of the North Carolina branch, Mr. Rembusch was also invited to South Carolina, Florida, Atlanta, and Washington, D. C., to speak before exhibitors' meetings with a view to organization of the local bodies, but he was forced to decline on account of the pressure of business at home.

"But I am going to keep right on as I have been," says Mr. Rembusch to MOTOGRAPHY, "working for the best interests of the whole industry, and it is probably a good thing that no office has been thrust upon me which would keep me from talking out in church."

PRESIDENT OCHS HONORED

Large Gathering of Exhibitors and Film Men in New York Honor the National League's New Chief Official.

Three hundred exhibitors, exchange men and film manufacturers foregathered on July 20 at the New York Exhibitors' League headquarters, 218 W. 42nd street, to do honor to Lee Ochs, the recently elected national president.

Mr. Ochs was agreeably surprised at the unusual gathering and was very appreciative of the honor this large meeting conferred upon him.

A fine luncheon was served under the personal supervision of Ike Harstall. After the luncheon President Ochs thanked the exhibitors, particularly the New York and Brooklyn locals, who were of great assistance in bringing the presidency of the National Association to New York. To the film men present he said that he was with them and for them and would see that all got a square deal. He also announced that several large film manufacturers had communicated with him offering him contracts aggregating between $4,000 and $5,000 a week for advertising in the new proposed trade magazine. Mr. Ochs advised those present that the exhibitors' magazine had not been started as yet and he did not intend to start it, except in the event that the present trade magazines attempted in any manner to give anything but a square deal to the exhibitors.

Joe Brandt presented Lee Ochs, in behalf of the Universal Company, a splendid floral horse shoe.

Among those present were:

Arthur James, of Metro; S. P. Reiben, of Big "T" Film; E. Saunders, of Metro; Mr. Shaffer, of World Film; Mr. Seeley, of Pathe; Mr. Bauerbaum, of General Film; Mr. Sennett, of Paramount; H. Clark Mooney, of Kemble Film; E. J. O'Donnell, John Whitman, Louis Blumenthal, Tom Howard, William Brand, of Brooklyn; C. F. Haring, Samuel Bock, Adolph Weis, Mr. Rownheimer, F. J. Dollinger, R. Israel, Otto Lederer, James Kellock, Mr. Martino, B. Zeidman, and many, many others.

Vitagraphs on General

"A heart interest" story with a strong appeal is told in "The Bond of Blood," a Broadway Star feature in three parts which Vitagraph announces for August 5 on the general program. The stars are Leah Baird and Van Dyke Brooke. One of the strong scenes is seen, when Van Dyke Brooke, as a former actor, now down and out, is given a chance to play a part in a new play and finds, on clasping the leading lady, who is supposed to be his daughter, to his breast, that she really is his daughter who has been lost to him for a great many years. A well developed comedy theme, amusingly interesting throughout and with good work on the part of principals and cast, is embodied in "A Hard Job," a one part comedy. William Dangman plays the leading part in his individual and distinctive style and his support is all that could be desired. One member of Dangman's supporting cast unconsciously amuses the audience all through the picture. This is a merry little baby who is seen in almost every scene and never minus a broad smile. The remaining parts are well taken care of by George O'Donnell, Florence Natol, Jessie Miller and Lucille Crane. Frank Currier directed the comedy from Mrs. Owen Bronson's scenario.

Universal Director Henry McRae still is working on a five-reel feature entitled "Behind the Lines."

"Herman's Legacy" is the title of a one-reel comedy drama being filmed at the city by Director Frank Ormston.

What Theater Men Are Doing

AN OPEN FORUM

This is a department of, by and for exhibitors. We want YOU represented here. Other managers and proprietors of picture theaters want to hear YOUR experiences, your opinions and your advice. Write to this department telling us your story, how you started, how you grew and all about your theater and how you manage it. Mention your advertising methods and your lobby displays. If possible send in photographs of yourself and your house. Address, The Forum, Motography, Chicago.

Attractive Ushers in Attractive Costumes

THE girls who conduct the patrons of "Civilization" to their seats at George M. Cohan's Grand Opera House are exceptionally pretty in the attractive costumes designed especially for the play. They are Chicago girls, moreover, not selected as being prettier than other Chicago girls, but illustrating a fair average of Chicago pulchritude.

Their leader is Miss Victorine McNeill, and her principal assistant is Miss Gertrude Jacobs. These two are cousins, living on the North Side, and both have had experience in singing and dancing upon the stage. Ushering is merely a pleasant summer sideline with them.

The "Civilization" girls are also as vivacious as they are pretty. In a body they attended the recent movie ball at the Sherman Hotel, clad in their odd costumes and each wearing a "Civilization" ribbon around her right arm. They were in great demand as dancing partners, and when it was all over a philanthropic and chivalrous admirer took them all to their various homes in his big touring car—so that, as the girls themselves expressed it, they had a perfectly grand time.

A number of theaters the country over have provided their ushers with special costumes, but few have gone to the trouble to create designs so becoming and so appropriate as those for Ince's big war drama.

Eight good-looking ushers at Cohan's Grand Opera House, Chicago, for "Civilization."

Motion Picture Dansant in Oregon

And now a theater has combined the amusement of dancing with that of pictures.

Recently the Heilig Theater of Portland, Oregon, which usually runs all the star road theatrical productions that come to that city, found itself idle as the result of a dearth of plays. Its manager, like a hundred and one others, sought solace in the moving picture, but he wanted to make his advent into the silent drama sufficiently strong and attractive to outdraw the many other high class motion picture houses of Portland. The motion picture dansant idea was the happy suggestion.

The stage of the Heilig, which is one of the largest in the Northwest, was converted into an artistic summer garden, with rustic furnishings and brightly colored buntings. The floor was polished up, and the largest dance floor in the city was the result. The dance floor and the dancers cannot be seen from the auditorium of the theater as the screen is between.

From the day of the opening, a month ago, the innovation has taken strong with the patrons of the theater.

Since that time there has invariably been nearly as many people behind the screen as before it. And the auditorium has been filled at each performance.

The Heilig Theater started by running V. L. S. E. features exclusively, opening with Robert Edeson in "The Caveman," and Frank Daniels in "Kernel Nut's Musical Shirt." "Thou Shalt Not Covet," with Kathlyn Williams followed. During the summer months, the Heilig will show only features and will continue its popular dances.

Exhibitor Favors Closer Organization

James Gilosky, president of the state branch of Minnesota, M. P. E. L., and a prominent exhibitor of St. Paul, is decidedly in favor of organization in the motion picture industry so that every phase of it will be upon a solid business basis.

"Manufacturers should pay only reasonable salaries," he stated to Motography during the Chicago convention. "They are wild upon the salary question now. They spend thousands of dollars upon one star and then they attempt to get their money back. As a result the business suffers all along the line. The exhibitor should pay standard prices just the same as the retailer does in any line of business. The manufacturer should co-operate closer with the exhibitors to see that he does not place his charges out of proportion to the worth of his wares, and to see that he does not boom a picture that does not come up to what the exhibitor is led to believe.

"Do you believe in a scale of prices for picture houses?"

"It is probably practical in many houses to set a scale of different prices for different parts of the house, the same as legitimate houses do. But for the smaller towns and cities it is my opinion that not more than ten cents should be charged."

Fashion Show in Salt Lake City

George E. Carpenter, manager of the Paramount Empress Theater in Salt Lake City, staged a fashion show at his house in July in connection with one of the large department stores of the city. The house is equipped with a large stage which, with appropriate settings, was used for the event. The store took upon itself all the arrangements and all the expense of publicity. That's the kind of co-operation a good many exhibitors would like to get from other merchants. Most of the latter are willing to go half way and as in the above case sometimes more.

Mr. Carpenter is also in charge of the advertising and publicity for the Notable Feature Film Company of 133 East Second street, Salt Lake City. This concern is the Paramount distributor for several of the mountain states. One of Mr. Carpenter's several side line diversions is Real Reels, the peppery little organ he uses as a connecting link between his house and the exhibitors of his territory.

Mr. Carpenter is a former newspaper and magazine man and has always lived in the west, where he has become one of the well-known figures in the film business. He attended the Sixth National Convention of the M. P. E. L. of America in Chicago July 10 to 18 and also the conferences of the Paramount company held in the Windy City at the same time.

A Blind Man's Attractive House

Would you care to run a picture house if you could never catch the least glimpse of what your shows are like? This is just what is being done by Reuben Deisler of Plymouth, Ohio. Mr. Deisler is totally blind, but he built the new Deisler theater and manages it as well as could any showman with two bright eyes that are always "peeled." Mr. Deisler's lack of sight does not in any manner interfere with his business sense and perhaps his sense of the feelings of the public toward his shows is even keener because of his training along the lines of sensing those phases of human nature which he cannot see.

The seating capacity of the Deisler is 225. There are two projection machines. The building contains a nine-room flat on the second floor, is steam heated and fire-proof throughout. The state laws were rigidly adhered to in the construction. The entire cost was in the neighborhood of $13,000. The house has a fine location on the village square. Plymouth has a population of 1,400 and the Deisler has no competition.

The Deisler Theater, Plymouth, Ohio, run by a blind man.

Mr. Deisler is a stickler for kindness in treating his patrons and goes out of his way to give them the pictures they like to see.

EXHIBITOR'S NOVEL CREATION

Orchestra in Cinema Concerts at Orchestra Hall, Chicago, Plays Overture Directed from Screen—Idea Original With Manager Hills.

The exhibitor who has a fair-sized orchestra in his house may be interested in an innovation which has been introduced by the management of the Orchestra Hall Cinema-Concerts in Chicago in the form of an orchestra conducted from the screen. Manager Hills is the originator of this out-of-the-ordinary idea, which has aroused a good deal of curiosity and much favorable comment among the picture-going public.

At a stated time in the program the director, Arthur Dunham, leaves the stage and the members of the orchestra rearrange their seats so that they are all facing the screen. Then on the screen against a background of curtains appears the director's rack and baton. The curtains part and Director Dunham appears, bows to the audience, signals the orchestra, and the music starts, with the whole thing conducted just as if the director were standing before the orchestra in person instead of the animated screen version of himself, and the shadow figure bows and smiles in proper accord with the applause of the audience. Wilhelm Tell Overture and Mendelssohn's Spring Song are the selections given in this manner.

Pictures have been taken and shown before of directors leading their orchestras, but this is the first time the members of an orchestra have looked to a shadow baton in the hand of a phantom director to guide them in their crescendo and pianissimo.

The idea is clever and shows the use which can be made of even the ordinary routine of the every day business to interpolate something new into the program. It bears the mark of the alert manager who is always looking for something different and something out of the ordinary.

Another "something different" in the Orchestra Hall program is the travel picture, "Bringing the World to You" and "Scenes from Many Lands," which are prepared expressly for the Cinema-Concerts and are not shown elsewhere.

Thanhouser's August Productions

"The Fugitive," a drama starring Florence La Badie, and "Hidden Valley," a tale of South African adventure, featuring Valkyrien (Baroness Dewitz), are the first five-reel features that Thanhouser will release under the new arrangement with Pathe. Miss La Badie is supported by Ethyle Cooke and George Marlo. An exciting factory fire is one of the big scenes in the production. "The Fugitive" will be released on August 13.

In "Hidden Valley," Valkyrien, the Baroness from Denmark, is a white goddess who has been captured by savage blacks in South Africa. The picture was made in Jacksonville, Fla. The date of release is August 27.

"The Sweetest Girl in the World"

SO THE EXPOSITION FANS NAMED LITTLE MARY

By Genevieve Harris

THERE was once upon a time an Italian princess who was known throughout her country by the title a poet gave her—la prima donna della monde, the first lady of the world. Today there is a little American girl, whose rank was won by her talent, whose crown is her golden curls, whose rule is over her people's hearts, and it wasn't a poet (nor a press agent), just ordinary folks who have given her a title better than that of Isabella D'Este, for they call her "the sweetest girl in the world."

"Mary Pickford" day at the Exposition—or rather in Chicago, for the whole city was interested, proved a number of things. The most obvious of these was the popularity of Miss Pickford. Then, as William A. Brady emphasized in his speech to the exhibitors, it proved the popularity of the things Miss Pickford stands for: wholesomeness, sweetness, the pathos of real life, and the spirit of clean fun. Another thing that it proved was the power of the motion picture theater. In one way, the tribute paid to the little actress is a tribute to moion pictures themselves. Through their medium alone "Little Mary" is known, and through them she sends her appeal into the hearts of her worshippers, and gives them their ideals.

"The spirit of the crowd" was an almost tangible thing that day in the Coliseum at Chicago. It reminded you just at first of the spirit of a college crowd on the eve of a big game. But you soon felt the difference, for instead of the boisterous enthusiasm of the latter gathering, here was a feeling something akin to worship. Perhaps part of the difference was due to the fact that while the men and boys were by no means conspicuous for their absence it was the women and children who formed the larger number of the audience. They love her as do their daughters and their little sisters. This was the spirit you felt in the crowd.

Long before the hour set for the arrival of the Pickford party, the walk before the Coliseum was packed with "fans," patiently waiting in the sunshine of the hottest day of a very hot week. One woman, seemingly about to be melted by the heat, remarked to her companion, as she caught sight of the writer's press badge, "She will probably write something to ridicule the foolish people who stand out here in the sun." Nevertheless, braving the heat and the chance of seeming ridicule, she stayed in line until the awaited one arrived. But such devotion as hers, and her many companions, is too significant to be treated lightly.

"And if it weren't for the motion pictures, we should never have known her," said another of these "ladies-in-waiting" to Queen Mary. And then, as the police men begged the crowd to "stand back and leave a pathway," a closed automobile rolled up to the entrance, and the spectators held their breath. They released it in one gasp of disappointment as the door of the car opened and one lone man emerged. There was another period of waiting, another car, another breathless moment, and then—

Accompanied by a small bodyguard of men and women whom nobody noticed, there stepped forth into the midst of the throng a white-clad, golden-haired little girl, rather frightened by the reception given her, but smiling her thanks for their cheers, Miss Mary Pickford, "the sweetest girl in the world."

Pauline Frederick said of America's Mary, "When she looks at you with those great eyes, with the weight of the world behind them, you just can't help loving her, that's all."

Somehow her guardians led her safely through the throngs to the Paramount show space. There she shook hands with those fortunate enough to reach the railing of the booth, and autographed photographs for them. To those beyond reach, throughout the building, she threw flowers and kisses, while from the packed balconies above her to the farther corner of the floor, her admirers, especially the children, called out greetings to "Mary."

"She is just like her pictures, isn't she?" someone said. "Now doesn't she look just as she did in 'Tess of the Storm Country?' "

"Oh, she is more beautiful than I thought," said another. "She's a 'golden beauty'."

"She is the sweetest girl in the world."

"Mother, I've just got to go down and shake hands with her," said a little girl in the balcony, and at last the mother gave her consent. Through the close packed crowd the youngster made her way alone, shook hands with her idol, and returned radiant. Oh there were any number of children made happy that day!

But all things must end, and at last Little Mary's reception was over. Two big policemen carried the little star on their shoulders to her car, while the spectators shouted a regretful farewell. One little girl, who had been unable to reach the booth, rushed pell-mell after Miss Pickford and her escort out into the street.

The secret of her magnetism? Well, no one has ever solved the mystery of charm, but no one who saw, and felt, the reception given her that day can doubt that Mary Pickford possesses it. And it isn't charm alone. She has given much to these people. Perhaps her friend, Pauline Frederick, discussing her that morning, went to the heart of the matter.

"Mary is a most lovable kiddie," she said, "and she deserves all the regard the people have for her. Success hasn't come in a day. She has worked hard. She has given seven years of her life to pictures and there is no one who can supplant her in a day. She is a clever actress, and when she looks at you with those great eyes, with the weight of the world behind them, why, you just can't help loving her, that's all."

OCHS ADDRESSES LEAGUE

Urges Ohio to Unite and Join the National League—Preliminary Meeting Will Be Held for Purpose of Consolidating.

Lee Ochs, president of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America, in his address before the local branch of the league at Cleveland, Ohio, called upon Cleveland to organize the state of Ohio, which is completely disrupted. Mr. Ochs claims that Ohio with its censorship and lack of unity has retarded the motion picture industry at least ten years, and urged the state to get together.

Among other topics touched upon Mr. Ochs summed up the results of the Chicago convention, discussed the elimination of the deposit system and explained the effect upon the exhibitor of the new by-laws as drawn up by the committee of thirty in New York.

Mr. Ochs' address spread confidence among the exhibitors and created a more harmonious spirit between exhibitor and manufacturer. H. Serkowich, secretary of the Motion Picture League of the Chamber of Commerce of Cincinnati, composed of all the motion picture theater owners of the six cities in the Cincinnati district, asked for a meeting to be attended by all the theater owners from every county in Ohio and will invite them to buy a charter and join the League. This meeting will be held at Mansfield and it is expected that exhibitors from Indiana, West Virginia, Kentucky and Michigan will attend.

It is also probable that during the Mansfield meeting a Central States exhibitors' convention will be called to meet in Cincinnati in September.

V-L-S-E Manager Dines Stars

Sidney E. Abel, Chicago manager of the V-L-S-E, one of the most active film entertainers during convention week, entertained the stars of the Vitagraph and Essanay companies and the representatives of the V-L-S-E at a dinner given in the Chicago Athletic Club on the evening of Sunday, July 9.

Speeches were made by almost everyone who attended, and satisfaction was expressed by the stars present at being associated with the Big Four and its wide distribution.

Among those who attended were: Edith Storey and Mrs. Storey, Antonio Moreno, Rose Tapley, Miss Wagner of the Vitagraph, Sam Spedon, special representative of the Vitagraph, John Rock, western representative of the Vitagraph, and Mrs. Rock, Nell Craig, Fred E. Wright, Bryant Washburn and Mrs. Washburn, and Richard C. Travers of Essanay, and Gordon Laurence and Sidney E. Abel of V-L-S-E.

Farnum's Last Fight

William Farnum makes a stirring and memorable farewell to his strong-arm roles in Fox's "The End of the Trail." The fight which occurs in the last part of the photoplay is certainly one of the most dramatic encounters ever put on before the Cooper-Hewitts.

Farnum, in the character of a trapper of the north, comes upon the Devil Cabot (Willard Louis) in a saloon at the trading post. Cabot has done him irreparable injury. When Cabot sees the man, he dashes out the lights. Both draw revolvers and the darkness is illumined intermittently by the gun fire. When the weapons are empty, they clash hand to hand. One of them falls. A candle flares at the window and the awed crowd outside sees the trapper bending over the dead body of his enemy. The end of the trail has been reached. Director Bertram Bracken discovered a novel but expensive way of getting realism into the movies not long ago. In one of the scenes of a William Fox photoplay which he was screening, Mr. Bracken wanted to show several negro boys at the pastime known by some as "craps," and by others as "rolling the bones."

He tried several times to get a scene that embodied a little life and liveliness but couldn't quite get the atmosphere desired. So he sent an assistant to the nearest bank for the change of a ten dollar bill. He divided the money among the boys and told them to shoot. Enough action to move a locomotive resulted. The only element of atmosphere that will be lacking when the scene is flashed on the screen will be the characteristic cries for "baby's new pair of shoes," and so on.

Theater Owners Warned

F. O. Nielson, of the Feature Film Company, Chicago, reports that a former manager of the Family Theater at Lafayette, Indiana, passed a worthless check for $30 on him during the Chicago convention. The same man, it is said, beat his house out of nearly $90 before he was discharged by the owner of the Family, D. W. Maurice, who also has the Lyric Theater in Danville, Illinois. Other managers and owners are warned to keep an eye out for the absconder, who probably will apply for a position at other houses throughout the country.

Screen Editor

Wyndham Gittens arrived at Universal City this week, having been sent to the coast by Vice-President and General Manager H. O. Davis to serve in the capacity of screen editor for the Universal Company. As screen editor Gittens will co-operate with Eugene B. Lewis, scenario editor, and watch the film of all productions during their progress. He will also act as critic of the films and advisor to the directors.

Leading batsmen and pitchers of the big leagues are to be featured along with other athletes in a series to be produced by the Sunbeam Motion Picture Corporation of Cleveland.

Protecting the Exhibitor in Distress

ANY distress of society becomes the distress of the picture theater man. He depends for his livelihood, indeed for his escape from bankruptcy, upon the desire of the people for entertainment and their ability to gratify it. Children under sixteen years old comprise a large portion of society, and therefore a large portion of the theater man's business. Anything which prevents their attendance also tends to keep their parents away, and that means acute distress in the show business.

Greater New York is in the throes of an epidemic of children's disease so severe that other communities for hundreds of miles around are terrorized. The New York board of health has forbidden the admission of children under sixteen years to places of entertainment. That means, of course, that the exhibitors of the metropolis must lose money unless they can cut their running expenses. There is no other way out.

Exhibitors under contract for program service cannot cut their expenses. Only the fellow on the other end of the contract can do that—and if he does, it merely means that he transfers the burden of financial loss to his own shoulders. There is not much incentive to do that.

Nevertheless, that is just what is being done. That is why we are writing this. Such an example of commercial altruism deserves all the commendation we can give it. In an extraordinary emergency, the film distributors are doing all they can to equalize the load and carry over the established trade until the return of health and prosperity—which we devoutly pray may be soon.

It often takes a crisis to bring out evidences of co-operation and harmony. Evidently the old principle of every man for himself, and the devil take the hindmost, no longer prevails in the film business. It is a good omen. If the selling and the buying ends of the trade can co-operate in an emergency, they can work together in the every-day affairs of business.

The film distributors, of course, will reap more than a mental and moral reward for their consideration. They will succeed in maintaining their trade without the loss of customers through failure, and incidentally will increase the confidence of their patrons in their intention to deal squarely. They are demonstrating that rapacity for the immediate dollar is not the ruling passion of the industry; that it builds upon a future greater than the present. For instilling that principle into the minds of some who may have doubted it, they deserve a vote of thanks.

If the men who represent the producing end of the picture business can see the wisdom of protecting their customers against the losses due to natural and unavoidable causes, they should be equally ready to admit the justice of helping to eliminate the avoidable causes of loss. The exhibitor's loss of business due to epidemic is no greater than his possible loss due to ill-advised competition and the intrusion of foolish rivals in an already well-filled territory.

We are confident that the interests who have already proved their far-sightedness and business probity by supporting their established customers through a lean period will see the advantage of protecting them when inadequately informed competitors force the division of a patronage which is too small to divide.

The lean period of epidemic is short at its worst—for which we are all thankful. The lean period of cut-throat competition is a period of destruction, and there is no health or prosperity ahead of it. The distributor who tries to keep his old customer and gain a new one in the competitor soon loses both in failure. The distributor who protects his old customer loses only the new order that he never had.

The co-operation of distributors through the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry offers a way to solve the greatest problem and eliminate the greatest evil of the exhibiting business. And the action of the distributors in the New York emergency shows they have the will to help.

The Exhibitor's Responsibility for Film

A DISTRIBUTOR of high class pictures reports that it receives a great many complaints about the condition of its films. Shrinkage of over fifteen per cent in length, stretched and torn sprocket holes, and scratched or oil-spotted emulsion are the subjects of most of the protests. Every film exchange is all too familiar with this condition, for which there is little justification.

Motion picture film is a very perishable commodity. It may be easily burned, torn, scratched, warped or stained. But it is equally easy to avoid such abuse if it is properly handled, with only reasonable care. That every exhibitor owes it to himself, to his exchange, and to the big business of which he is a part to see that such care is exercised, should go without saying. Unfortunately, it apparently does not.

In addition to these abuses, it frequently happens that the exhibitor who is responsible for them neglects to return the film until such a late hour that the exchange is forced to rush it out again to the next customer. Under those circumstances proper inspection is impossible, and the careless first exhibitor adds another to the black marks against him by making it impossible for anyone else, however willing, to repair the damage he has done.

The film-spoiling exhibitor may not be much more common than the reckless automobile driver; but like that undesirable member of society, he leaves a large and unpleasant smudge on the fair face of the world. It should be possible to eliminate him by appealing to his sense of justice and fairness; for we believe his mal-activities are chargeable solely to carelessness, and maybe ignorance, and are seldom dictated by malice or cold indifference.

It must be apparent to every exhibitor that if he took the greatest possible care of each film while it was in his charge, and assumed all responsibility for its condition, all others doing the same, the whole business would be pleasanter and happier, and everybody would be better off. We know all right thinking exhibitors, who have the good of the industry at heart, will thoroughly agree with us on that point. The producers can make good films; they must make good films, for their customers incessantly insist upon quality. But only the exhibitors can keep them good after they are made. The idea of an exhibitor crying constantly for better pictures and then allowing his operators to cut them, smear them with oil, rip their sprocket holes, scratch their surfaces, crush them into a can and finally drag them back to the exchange at the last moment is so unreasonable that it is offensive. We would scarcely believe it without proof. As it is, we cannot conceive that the evil is very widespread.

But whatever amount of this abuse there may be is too much. Outside of unavoidable accident, there is no reason why a film should not stand an indefinite number of runs and a great amount of handling. We still have before us the record of the "Birth of a Nation" operator in Chicago, who ran the same film several hundred times without a sign of rain, an oil spot or a torn sprocket hole.

No doubt the gradual development of a higher average grade of operators, who will take a pride in the excellence of their work and their care of the film, and the growing realization of the exhibitor that he is morally responsible for the acts of his operator and for the film that is in his charge, will ultimately solve this problem. We trust that all exhibitors, however, will make a strong effort to hasten the millenium by encouraging immediate improvement.

"Split Reel" Notes for Theater Men

HOW OTHERS ARE STEERING THE SHIP

EXHIBITORS in Detroit, Cleveland, Buffalo and Indianapolis will soon meet George Weeks, who is to have charge of those Universal offices.

J. W. Edwards, manager of the Aledo Opera House, Aledo, Illinois, has installed a motor to run his picture machine instead of the old way of turning it by hand.

A new film company to be known as the Cosmo Picture Corporation has been incorporated at Sioux City, Iowa. G. E. McDonald, E. Swartz and H. B. Mayne are the founders.

Teachers and principals of the rural schools of Minnesota are taking a course in operating motion picture machines at the school of agriculture. The course lasts for one week.

The Watch Tower Amusement Company of Davenport, Iowa, has dissolved as a corporation but will continue to be operated under the exclusive direction of G. R. Stephenson.

The general synod of the Christian Reformed church in session at Holland, Michigan, condemned all moving picture shows, vaudeville shows and legitimate theatricals.

Charlie's capers were too funny for William McNamey of Philadelphia. He laughed so hard at the comedy that he was seized with a hemorrhage and taken to a hospital. He will recover.

The industries of Cumberland, Maryland, will be exploited in the films. Mr. Talbott of the Talbott Film Manufacturing Company has been taking pictures of the city officials, and the police and fire departments.

Efforts are being made to organize the motion picture exhibitors of Dayton, Ohio, into an association. The exhibitors state they favor uniform program size but for two years they have been unable to maintain organization.

The authorities of St. Paul are investigating several fires which have done considerable damage in moving picture theaters. The pipe organ in the Crystal Theater was entirely destroyed by fire and $1,000 damage was done to the Eagle Theater.

A board of motion picture censors for Gadsden, Alabama, was asked of the city council by a committee of the local W. C. T. U. It was opposed by managers of the motion picture shows. The subject was referred to the judiciary committee.

Kenneth Sink, manager of the Pastime Theater, Greenville, Ohio, has installed a new Power's Six B model projection machine in his house. This installation places the Pastime on a par with any city theater as far as perfect pictures are concerned.

Philip Kohler, proprietor of a hotel at North Beach, New York, was fined forty dollars and costs for operating a moving picture machine without a license. Kohler was giving an exhibition free of charge at his hotel for the entertainment of his patrons.

James Carpenter, moving picture operator in the Liberty Theater, Marysville, California, proved himself a hero when a film exploded and the theater caught fire. Carpenter remained at his post and gave warning. He was badly burned about the face and may lose his eyesight.

The delegates from the Advertisers' Club of Milwaukee, on their way to the convention in Philadelphia, were entertained by moving pictures exhibited in the dining car in the evening. The pictures were shown by W. F. Dunlap of the Klau-Van Pieterson-Dunlap Company.

Charles Rohrer has installed a mercury arc rectifier on the motion picture machine at the Liberty Theater, Marysville, California. This makes a notable improvement in the pictures exhibited as the rectifier removes the flicker, gives a clear film and removes the strain on the eyes.

All the moving picture theater managers of Baltimore, Maryland, joined together and promised on a certain day to give every cent paid in admission fees at their theaters between five and seven to the Fresh Air Fund society. The result was a good sized donation to the fund.

The Empress Theater, at North Bend, Nebraska, was damaged by fire to the extent of $3,000. The flames were discovered just as the crowd was leaving the picture house. The fire burned out a corner of the building and destroyed the scenery and practically everything on the stage.

The opening of the moving picture theaters on Sunday in Danville, Illinois, was a great success from the manager's standpoint. Every theater enjoyed a tremendous business and interest in the program for Sunday afternoon and evening exceeds all of the remainder of the week together.

The public welfare committee of Los Angeles is considering the question of providing for the issuance of revocable permits to theaters and other places of amusement. It has been suggested that such revocable permits be issued by the police commission in order that the police department may be in a position to keep close watch on the conduct, particularly of the smaller places of amusement.

The exhibitors of Brooklyn have petitioned the Public Service Commission to permit the Edison Electric Illuminating Company to make a reduction in rates for current used by motion picture houses. They claim that the rule of the Health Department that no children under sixteen years of age be allowed to attend picture theaters because of the plague of infantile paralysis will result in closing up the majority of these theaters unless they are permitted in some way to reduce their operating expenses.

E. H. Sothern has started work on his second photoplay under the direction of Fred Thomson. Archibald Clavering Gunter is the author of the story which we are informed is one of mystery. Adele de Garde, Brinsley Shaw and Charlotte Ives appear in Mr. Sothern's support.

The Ministerial Association of Syracuse, New York, has asked the mayor and the commissioner of public safety to close all moving picture shows on Sunday. The mayor and commissioner, however, have declared in favor of the Sunday theaters but have compromised by promising to close promptly all objectionable shows that may advertise attractions for Sunday.

The Parent-Teachers Association of Coalinga, California, promised to install a moving picture machine in the grammar school this fall and has hit upon a novel way of raising the money. Since paper is becoming a scarcity and is rising in price it has set all the school children to collecting old magazines, newspapers and so forth and delivering them to a warehouse where they are sorted and sold.

Charles Thall, for the last two years manager of the Minneapolis office of the Kleine-Edison Feature Film Company, has accepted a position with the Elliott-Sherman Film Corporation of Minneapolis to handle its California territory. Mr. Thall will be succeeded by Henry D. Graham, formerly manager of the Merrill Theater, Milwaukee.

Films valued at slightly more than $16,000 and destined for the many picture houses in Akron and Barberton, Ohio, were totally destroyed by fire that broke out while the films were being transported by auto truck from Cleveland to Akron. William Littrick, who has the contract for carrying the films, was on the truck at the time but escaped any injury.

The question whether a license should be denied a motion picture theater for a locality where it is likely to lose money was involved in the application of L. J. Blumberg, Jr., for a house in Minneapolis. Rival theater men were present to argue that there is one theater in the locality at present and another would mean bankruptcy for both. The license committee was dead-locked over the application.

City Attorney G. A. Bangs of Grand Forks, North Dakota, is looking into the legality of the appointment of a board of film censorship by Mayor James A. Dinnie, as suggested by a number of the ministers and other residents of the city. According to the request presented to the mayor this committee would be representative in character, including ministers, a member of the city council, three women and one business man.

Five hundred saloons in New York City and 100 in Brooklyn were crowded out of business last year by motion picture theaters, according to O. G. Cocks, secretary of the Motion Picture Board of Review, which has offices in New York. The percentage of drinking places eliminated in smaller communities is even larger, he declared. The moral atmosphere of manufacturing towns has been noticeably improved because of picture houses.

At a meeting of the officers and directors of the Gregory-Mahler Film Company, of Milwaukee, an entire reorganization of the company was effected, new officers and directors elected and the name of the company changed to the Badger Photoplay Corporation. T. W. Sheriffs, president of the Sheriffs Manufacturing Company, was elected president; A. T. Hummer, vice president; E. M. Falbe, secretary and treasurer; and O. A. Thomson, general manager.

"Black Friday," a story by Frederick Isham, and prepared for the screen by Eugenie Magnus Ingleton of the Universal City staff, is under production by Director Lloyd B. Carleton. In this five-reel drama of the period of 1871 the featured leads are played by Dorothy Davenport and Emory Johnson, supported by Gretchen Lederer, Virginia Southern, Richard Morris, Marc Fenton and others of the Universal stock company.

Ministers, club women and new thought leaders of Cleveland, Ohio, recently held a meeting to plan ways of getting better pictures for that city. Their motto will be "To preserve and promote the good, and minimize the harm in motion pictures." Their object is to keep bad plays out of the theaters and put good ones in instead just as bad books are kept from library shelves to make room for wholesome ones that are just as entertaining. The motion picture men were not invited to the meeting but it is planned to make them advisory members of one or two of the committees after an organization is completed.

The war has affected the motion picture business in a novel manner, aside from the question of photographic supplies and chemicals. When Rollin S. Sturgeon, director-general of the western Vitagraph, planned to produce a five-part feature by Cyrus Townsend Brady, he found that the sailing craft necessary for some piratical scenes could not be obtained. All the Pacific ports have been combed and old hulks formerly thought useless have been put back in the carrying trade, either on long time contracts or at such high charges that their use for pictures was prohibitive. Even the old schooner, "Alden Bessie," stand by of producers for hundreds of marine scenes, is sailing along the South American coast. Sturgeon has been forced to lay his plans aside until shipping conditions moderate.

Director William C. Dowlan, of the American-Mutual studios, has completed the first Mary Miles Minter Mutual star production, "Youth's Endearing Charm," and has started work on the new five-act Mutual feature "The Light," in which Franklin Ritchie, Helena Rosson, Nigel de Brullier, and Eugenie Forde have the principal roles.

William Russell's Mutual Star production, "The Torch Bearer," has been finished by Mr. Russell and his co-director, Jack Prescott. Russell is seen as a top-notch amateur boxer in this feature.

A drama of business and politics, "The Franchise," starring Winifred Greenwood and Edward Coxen, is being filmed at the American Mutual studios.

At the Mustang-Mutual studios Director Frank Borzage has completed "Nell Dale's Men Folks" and is now working on "Matchin' Jim," in which he plays the title role and is supported by Anna Little. Both are two reelers.

First Aid to Theater Men

BY S. L. ROTHAPFEL

OUR correspondent has opened up a very interesting question in his sale of reserved seats in a picture theater. This is a problem which no doubt will be discussed a great deal in the next few years—it is a coming problem of the moving picture theater manager. If any of our readers have worked it out along these lines or in a different manner we will be glad to hear from them, or if you have not tried it out we would be glad to get your ideas as to its feasibility.

49. My new house will be ready for its premier in about three weeks. It is strictly a neighborhood house. Since the contractors started to erect it three months ago I have been doing missionary work in the neighborhood and have sold numerous yearly tickets. These tickets are good for two admissions, with a reserved seat, on a stipulated night each week for fifty-two weeks. I have collected ten dollars for these tickets. Experienced motion picture men think I am wrong in selling these yearly tickets. They say I will lose money because I will be compelled to reserve the two seats through the entire day each week as designated in my agreement. The agreement stipulates that the yearly tickets are good for but one show each week. The reserved seats are locked on the day specified until called for by the annual purchaser. When they are vacated by the annual ticket purchaser they become my property to rent the same as every other seat in the house. I have sold six hundred of these annual reserved seat tickets, the same netting me three thousand dollars in advance. Do you think my plan is right or wrong from a business standpoint?

Your proposition is a very interesting one and I will be anxious to hear from you again after you have experimented with this for about six months, to see how it works out in your case. Your experience may open up an entirely new idea for a number of theater men where such a scheme may work to great advantage. Of course different conditions would alter the matter a great deal and its success would depend to a large extent on the manner in which the exhibitor managed it.

Let us look at this subject from both sides as to the possible advantages and disadvantages. In the first place when you were building your house you probably needed all the money you could lay your hands on and the three thousand dollars no doubt was a great help. By your sale of these special reserved seat tickets you assured yourself of a certain amount of profit from your house and instead of waiting until the theater itself could earn it you got the money before the house was even completed—in other words you sold your production before it was perfected and had that money to use in developing it. This certainly looks like good business methods. It may cut down on your profits a little later, but by that time you may be in a position where you do not need the money so badly and will not feel the loss.

When you have completed your new house and it is ready for the reception of the public the next step is to get the people to come and keep on coming. You have sold six hundred tickets calling for that many seats each week—you are practically sure of that many people. As you show each night in the week this means that an average of about eighty-five people a night is assured. This forms a nice little foundation for your audience, and with eighty-five people starting for your theater each night when it first opens you know they will tell others, pick up friends as they come along and where the crowd is going others will follow. You have created an interest in your theater among six hundred people. You have helped to form the habit of attending a theater at least one night a week among six hundred people, and probably if they like your program they will not stop at that one night but will come on other nights when they have not a reserved seat and bring their friends with them. You have made regular patrons of these people for a year, and after they have been going to one theater for one year it begins to seem like home to them, they know what class of pictures you show, they know practically as much about the theater as you do, they know you personally, they begin to take a personal interest in that theater and you have probably made permanent patrons for many years to come—and what counts in the residential district is the family theater in which each member of the family feels at home and in which they take a personal interest.

Let us look at this from the other side. Taking the average before mentioned there are eighty-five seats in your house every night that may not be occupied at all. These seats you have received a little less than ten cents apiece for. You no doubt run three shows an evening, which would mean that each one of those eighty-five seats should net you thirty cents apiece. You have received, say, eight dollars from those seats, which should have netted you about twenty-five dollars—there is a loss of seventeen dollars which you stand to lose each night in the week, which amounts to $119 a week. Of course this is the maximum figure, for it is very improbable that every one of those seats would have to be locked the entire evening.

You stand the chance of having to leave a number of those seats locked during the entire performance. Also your programs, we will say, start at seven, eight-thirty and ten. The holders of those seats are liable to come in in the middle of one show and so stay over in the middle of the next to see the whole program, which will mean that you lose the sale of those seats for two performances during the evening.

If you could stipulate that these seats were good only for the performance beginning at seven or the one beginning at eight-thirty that would make a very great difference in the net loss. People attending the legitimate theaters are used to getting there at a stated time to see the beginning of the play; cannot you educate your people to do the same thing? If you could make an arrangement of this kind then your scheme is pure gain because whether they are occupied or not you would be sure that you received money from those eighty-five seats for one performance each night and a nice little revenue is assured you. This is a matter which could, however, only be managed by the individual theater and depends entirely upon conditions and the people. Also if you could persuade a number of these people to take the seats on the nights when your audience is the smallest it would be very profitable, for you would be assured of a certain number anyway on a poor night—it might mean that there would not be any poor nights.

There is another point to be taken into consideration, your theater is situated in a residential district where probably at least three-quarters of the families go away for a summer vacation of any length from two weeks to three months. It is very likely that a goodly number of these six hundred seats have been sold to the summer vacationists. The wise manager will know just when every regular patron is going on his vacation and how long he is going to stay. In other words those reserved seats have been paid for by the year. If the people holding the tickets are out of town for three months you do not have to hold them and can make four profits instead of three out of them each evening.

The wisdom of this proposition appears to come down to a matter of conditions and good management. In your case I think you have shown good business judgment. In some other case it might not work to advantage. The shrewd manager will be able to figure this out for himself. The one big point of caution is not to oversell your house. A little of this system is all right, but too much of it would mean a great loss to the theater manager.

50. I have run up against what I believe is rather a unique situation in my theater business. I started in the field about four years ago in a residence district, where the inhabitants were all rather poor people—that is, the men were getting pretty fair wages but they were buying their homes on the installment plan and there was not much left over for pleasures. So when I opened my house I only charged five cents admission because that was all I thought the community could afford. I have been doing a good business right along and although there is another house here now charging ten cents my patronage has not fallen off very much. But the district has changed, while they are not affluent the people are thrifty and they are now most of them in much more comfortable circumstances and there is no reason at all why I could not just as well have ten cents from them. They are paying the new manager ten cents whenever he has anything they want to see, but they stick by me pretty well, and I get more of the business than he does, but it takes twice as many nickels to make the same amount of profit. I am wondering if I make a radical change and charge ten cents if it will spoil my patronage.

If you make this change do not jump abruptly to the higher price for this is liable to antagonize your regular patrons. If they have been coming every day for a year and depositing their nickel and then some day walk up to the window and see a sign "admission ten cents" they are liable to be very much disgruntled and feel antagonistic toward the house. Break the news to them gradually. Let them be fully warned beforehand. Also make them think you are giving them a much better program and much better service for their money so that the ten cents will seem to be covering a great deal more. In your case I suppose you have been giving them about four or five reels for a nickel, then if you change to features this will mean from five to seven reels, so point out the fact that you are going to give them more for their money, and better material. You did not say what sort of program you have been running, but I imagine a variety of short reel material. In making the change you might add some longer features and so make quite a radical change in the style of program.

You have rather a peculiar situation with which to cope but you ought to be able to utilize this peculiarity in helping you to get by with the added admission price. The residents are, no doubt, justly proud of the fact that they have prospered, have gained the point where they are comfortable, with their homes paid for, money in the bank, and enough over to pay for what pleasures they want, and this will make a good talking point with you. You must have a speaking acquaintance at least with most of the patrons of your house if they have been coming regularly for the last two years. Talk with them about this change, put it on the basis that you have stood by them when they were not able to pay more than five cents for a show and now they have grown prosperous and are able to support a better theater that they want a better program as they have wanted everything else about them to be the best they could afford, and so you are going to give it to them, but that it will mean you will have to charge a little more money but you believe they wont feel the ten cents now as much as they did the five cents three years ago, and ask them to stick by you.

Take them into your confidence and tell them that you have to pay more for these features and for the better class of pictures and so you will have to charge more to make the same profit. Make them believe you are asking their advice and want to talk the matter over with them in a friendly manner. Impress them with the idea that you are counting on them as regular patrons and you feel that you cannot afford to lose their business. Point out the fact that a higher grade theater will help add to the general atmosphere of prosperity of the community. Tell them that you are going to make some small changes in the house in the way of redecorating and so forth, as well as in the program, and make them feel that you are trying to raise the standard of the house in every way, and this will make a logical reason for the higher admission. For about a week or ten days before you make this change run a slide at every performance announcing that after a certain date the price will be ten cents, stating why, and the greater advantages they will receive for their money, so that every person will feel they know all about it and that nothing is being sprung on them unsuspectingly. Also in all your newspaper advertising make a point of announcing both the change of price and change of policy. If you issue a program carry a statement in this two weeks. Make the audience believe they are going to get something better for their money, and see to it that they do, and there is no reason why the change in price should hurt your house at all.

If your attendance is a good deal smaller in summer as it is in most theaters it might be a good idea to close for the month of August and let your new price come with the new season when you open in the fall. There may be a little falling off in your receipts during the first month, but I think you will find that most of your old patrons will stick to you and those who are a little peeved at first will soon come back again.

Mutual has divided the Vogue comedy players into two companies. Rube Miller will direct one company with Roy McRay as assistant and with Ben Turpin and himself as chief funmakers. Lillian Hamilton, Harry Huckins and O. Evans make up the cast.

Henry Kernan and Jack Gaines will direct the other corps. Paddy McQuire, Arthur Moon, Ed. Laurie and Gypsy Abbott have the leads.

In "The Temptation of Adam," the three-reel Selig drama now in course of production under the direction of Al. Green, at the Selig Los Angeles studios, Kathlyn Williams is given a wonderful opportunity for powerful dramatic work.

The Photoplay Scenario

CONDUCTED BY B. F. BARRETT

Former Editor of Photoplay Scenario Magazine.

Note—This department will appear hereafter in each issue of Motography, and will treat of all subjects of interest to the photoplaywright—whether amateur or professional. You are invited to suggest any subjects you desire to have discussed, or ask questions on any matters relating to the writing of photoplays which have been puzzling you. The department is also open to you at any time for the expression of your own ideas or the submitting of ideas of others which have helped you, and will be interesting to other photoplay writers.

Make a Business of Photoplay Writing

THERE are a few questions I would like to ask the scenario writer who does not seem to realize that the writing of a salable photoplay is not a frivolous thing demanding little thought and labor, and that the marketing of his scenario should be handled along business lines just as any other commodity placed on the market.

Too many free lance writers are endeavoring to place all the blame on the film companies. The producer has enough sins to account for without being saddled with those which rightly belong to the writers themselves. The film companies may not be perfect but be sure you are perfect yourself and playing the game according to rule before you cast animadversions at the scenario editor who rejects your play.

DO YOU REALIZE

Do you realize that photoplay writing is a serious profession? Do you realize that it enfolds a large number of contestants—all manner of minds and imaginations and, therefore, is a widely competitive field?

Do you realize that the public is the real and final arbiter who rules film production?

Do you comprehend the make-up of that public—its likes, dislikes, emotions and vagaries?

Do you keep pace with the changing characteristics in film production?

Do you realize that moving pictures are the product of a business, carried on along coldly commercial lines, whose will must be subservient to the demand of the great moving picture consuming public?

Do all these factors enter into your plans when creating a scenario?

PHOTOPLAY WRITING IS A BUSINESS

You create a scenario to sell it. It must enter a great mart wherein barter rules. It must carry selling quality that will enable it to compete with many others.

Let us look a little further into what this means—this fact which must be recognized—that photoplay writing is part of a business, a great business, depending for its success upon well defined commercial rules.

It is not sufficient that you gather from the recesses of your mind a bright idea—a brilliant suggestion for a theme upon which a photoplay may be built. It is not good business that you should put your time and your energy into the creation of a photoplay with this simple basis as a reason governing you. Lack of good business principles means lack of merit and loss of reward for you.

To illustrate this let us step outside the film field. Let us take as an example a manufacturer of food products. He wishes to enlarge the scope of his business. He decides to produce another commodity serving the same purpose as that now being manufactured by him, but which will not rob him of the trade he has already established. Having arrived at this decision, does he merely set his mind to thinking of something that in his estimation would be a good thing, and having found it, proceed with its manufacture? Does he just order his creative department to evolve a new product, and having done so, plan for its marketing?

Suppose he creates such a new article of consumption, or a new form of an article already in use. Does he jump into the manufacture of it and invest money in the establishment of new machinery and space for its production, spend money in advertising campaigns, without doing something else first? Not if he is wise in the ways of business.

Then what does he do? He investigates, looks around, studies the buying public. He may do this before he sets about thinking out a new product, or he may "discover" the new product first, but in either case he does not spend time nor risk his money in going about the production of that article until he has done this other thing first. Why? To see if there is a reason justifying his putting up this new product—a good sound business reason for his fostering and fathering it—a reason based upon the fact that it will meet with the approval of the great buying public.

Let us take another illustration.

Does a successful author jump immediately into the writing of a book because he has a certain brilliant thought regarding a theme for that book? Remember, we are taking the case of a successful author, one who has made good financially. Would he not be running the risk of producing something similar to what may already have been given to the public, or even a greater risk in spending his time creating something for which there would be no demand? In other words, would he not first of all canvass the realm of the reading public in order to decide whether his theme presented possibilities that would permit his book to sell—that the field of literature offered his prospective work a chance to sell?

GET DOWN TO BUSINESS

And so with your scenario. Perhaps you have a bright idea, a suggestion of a theme for a splendid photoplay. Its possibilities enthuse you; you weave a plot around your central thought and it unfolds a magnificent drama or subtle comedy—to you. But do not let this ardor rule you. Get down to business. You expect your scenario to sell—you create it with this idea. Apply to it, in its inception, therefore, the rules governing the marketing of scenarios. Test it from every angle and if it does not measure up to standard, be not afraid to discard the idea, to set it aside and discover another.

Accept the cold facts, the business angles that must necessarily guide you in your creation and development of scenarios to sell.

CAN YOUR SCENARIO STAND COMPARISON?

After you have completed the thoughtful and careful preparation of your scenario how much time and consideration do you give to the final manuscript—the preparation for submitting to the film companies? Do you dash off a manuscript and send it to the first company that occurs to you, or do you carefully consider this last and most important step of scenario writing—the putting of it into proper and attractive form?

Having spent hours of time and study on the building up of your plot, and the technical construction of your photoplay, do you feel that your responsibility ends? Do you think that the scenario can take care of itself after that? If so, you are wrong—for your guiding of your scenario along its path to success is not yet over.

You have now reached the point where your fledgling must be pushed out of the home nest to use its own wings and take its own place in the world. There are a great many people living in small towns who are respected and looked up to, and so become surrounded with a roseate atmosphere reflecting a very high idea of their own value and standing. As long as they remain within that small circle, among those same people, they remain upon that pedestal. But let them go out into the world where competition is greater—where bigger things are done—where they are competing with other men who have risen in the world; and they begin to realize their true worth; see their own shortcomings; and comprehend how limited after all are their own worthy qualifications.

Let us apply this example of human nature to your scenario. It has passed muster with you, it has been praised by your personal friends, but when it leaves you and your small circle and passes out into the greater places of the world, will it pass muster with the film company? Will it stand competition with other scenarios and rank as better than the hundreds with which it will be compared?

Remember that your script does not go as a single manuscript into the hands of the studio editor. It goes as one of hundreds and must be built to stand this competition—to invite comparison with all the others and stand the test of the process of elimination. thereby to win the final judgment of being "one in a hundred." It must take its place in the ranks and fight its own way among the throng of manuscripts—stand up against a many-sided competition.

THE PROCESS OF ELIMINATION

If you were offered your choice of a number of objects how would you reach your decision as to the one you wanted? It would probably be reached through a process of elimination and gradual culling and narrowing down until you would decide which of two best fitted your needs. Undoubtedly you would base your first choice on the ones which superficially attracted you most, because of their charm of make-up or form, or because they possessed some unusual qualification, some peculiarity which made them different from the others, and so caught your eye among the vast number. It might be a note of simplicity which caught you, or a clever lay-out, but in making your choice all objects which for some reason were pleasing in appearance would be laid aside for further and more analytical inspection. After this more careful scrutiny it might be that some of those attractions would prove valueless, and objects which at first seemed superior would develop flaws which would unfit them for your use. But the first impressions were good—they pleased you to such an extent that you laid them aside for more careful attention, even though they later proved that fundamentally they were not as good as some of the others.

This principle applies to your scenario. It is chosen by the same process of elimination. It is another case of the survival of the fittest.

What is worth doing is worth doing well. Build your scenario to stand the test when it becomes one in the ranks of many lined up for the film company editor's inspection. Make a business of this profession, and work along business lines. If your scenario is worthy of recognition it will receive it; if it is not able to stand comparison it will be returned to you.

Mutual Prize to Be Awarded Soon

The Mutual Film Corporation announces that the award of the $10,000 prize for the sequel to "The Diamond from the Sky" will be made in a short time. No less than one hundred thousand scenarios were received in this contest up to the closing date, February 20, 1916.

Out of this mass of stories will be chosen the one which will win the big prize. The board of judges will include Guy Lee of the editorial staff of the Chicago Tribune, Benjamin Judell of the Mutual Film Corporation staff, and the third will probably be a Chicago woman of note.

The contest brought out the biggest response that any photoplay scenario contest has ever developed, and those who have looked over the scripts say that the work of a large number of new writers of merit have been received and that there are many manuscripts of unusual merit from all over the country. The prize may go to some obscure contestant who never before has known the fame of the published word or the screen. In fact the large number of "first efforts" among the submitted scenarios would make this appear probable.

Horsley Wants Five-Reelers

David Horsley, Main and Washington streets, Los Angeles, California, announces that he is in the market for scenarios of five-reel length in full continuity form, suitable for Crane Wilbur. Dramas for sociological and psychological nature are desired. Prompt consideration will be given all scripts sent in and payment will be made upon acceptance.

Due to the return of Margaret Gibson, the dainty little star, five-reel scenarios written around her will also be given attention.

Director Wm. Robert Daly is now at work upon a story of the early gold rush to British Columbia, entitled, "The Child That Found Its Father." Fritzi Brunette has long had a desire to play a "boy's" part, and her wish will be gratified in this Selig production, for she will appear through the greater part of the story clad in masculine attire.

Mutual's August Program Story

HELEN HOLMES AND WILLIAM RUSSELL APPEAR IN SPECIAL PLAYS

"JUDITH of the Cumberlands," a five-act drama with Helen Holmes the featured player; and "The Strength of Donald McKenzie," starring July 31.

In support of Miss Holmes appear Leo D. Maloney, Paul C. Hurst, Thomas G. Lingham, William Brunton, Clara Mosher, Harry Lloyd, Sam Morje and G. H. Wischussen.

Charlotte Burton appears opposite Mr. Russell supported by Jack Prescott, Nell Franzen and Harry Keenan.

A three-part offering of this same week is "The Madonna of the Night," in which Nita Davis and E. Forrest Taylor are the co-stars.

"Judith of the Cumberlands," powerful new five-part Helen Holmes-Mutual star production.

Two-reel American releases include "The Dreamer," featuring Edward Coxen and Lizette Thorne; and "Sandy Reformer," in which Art Acord and Helene Rosson are co-stars. Centaur's two-reel offering on August 5 is "Fate's Decision," featuring Margaret Gibson, supported by William Clifford.

Single-reel comedy releases for the week include Vogue's "Painless Extracting," with Rube Miller as chief funmaker; Beauty offers "Daredevils and Danger," featuring Johnny Sheehan and Carol Halloway for release August 2, and "Just as He Thought," starring Orral Humphrey, to be released August 6; Cub's contribution is a George Ovey comedy "When Jerry Came to Town," ready August 4.

Mutual Weekly No. 83 and "See America First," the Gaumont single-reel offerings for release August 2, and the regular weekly release of "Reel Life" for August 6 complete the program.

Charles Chaplin is one actor who is willing to admit that publicity helped him to rise in his profession. Charlie says that publicity is the most essential thing in the career of a man whose popularity depends upon keeping himself before the public, and the press has been for countless years the chief of all publicity mediums. He calls attention to the fact that in no country has the system of syndicating reached such heights as in America, and it is due to this multiplication of each item of importance that a public character like himself is enabled to keep a vastly wider public accurately posted as to his movements.

Anna Little, who will shortly be seen in "Nell Dale's Men Folks," recently completed under Frank Borzage's direction, had a narrow escape from injury while taking a prominent part in the Flying A Rodeo presented by the American-Mutual Company's cowboys on July Fourth. In "A Race for a Bride," one of the features of the rodeo, she was pursued on horseback by a score of cowboys, the first to overtake her carrying off the "bride" by snatching her from her saddle. Pete Morrison, one of the star performers of the Flying A corral, outdistanced his rivals and lifted Anna from her galloping mount, but his horse overbalanced and started to fall on her. Another rider, Manuel Sampson, spurred his horse alongside at the risk of crushing her between the horses and with one arm lifted her uninjured to his own saddle.

Clarence Kolb and John Dill, now working on "The Three Pals" in the Santa Barbara studio of the American Company, came originally from Cleveland, where they were boyhood chums. Their first appearance on the stage was in answer to an advertisement of Fred Irwin's burlesque show, which offered sixty dollars a week for the cleverest team of German comedians in the city. From here they went into vaudeville and later into musical comedy. For the last seven years they have been appearing in vaudeville and now have come to the films with a promise of a series of six five-reel productions. Aaron Hoffman, the playwright, has been retained by the Mutual Company to write comics exclusively for Kolb and Dill productions.

Fox Clambake

Studio Manager Altman, with the Cliffside studio of the William Fox Corporation, is arranging a clambake for all employes of the Fox Company. The scene of the food-devastation will be a large field on the Jersey shore. Members of the Fox forces are anticipating the event keenly and hundreds of habitually calm clams are shuddering in their shells.

Director Joseph De Grasse has completed Universal's "If My Country Should Call," in five reels, featuring Dorothy Phillips and Lon Chaney.

The Smalleys have commenced the picturization of James Oppenheim's story, "Idle Wives."

DIXON FILM AIDS SOLDIERS

"Fall of a Nation" Utilized for Benefits to Aid Soldiers' Fund—State Rights Selling Fast All Over the Country

The Liberty Theater, New York, wound up its summer season of "The Fall of a Nation" with a series of patriotic events. On one evening Mrs. William Cumming Story, president general of the Daughters of the American Revolution, addressed the audience of the theater between the acts on the subject of "Soldiers' Relief." She praised the play as right in line with the military efficiency propaganda, a cause with which all the patriotic societies are warmly sympathetic.

The boys at the front showed they were thinking of the folks at home and the old "vets" of other years by wiring Wallace M. Powers of "The Fall of a Nation Staff," through Corporal E. C. Kavanagh of Company E, asking that he give a special performance of the film for the stay-at-homes. Accordingly about a hundred veterans and relatives of the guardsmen on active service were the guests of the management.

A plan is under way whereby the big war spectacle will be utilized to aid the Soldiers' Relief campaign in a substantial way. The Woman's National Committee of the American Defense Society is arranging a performance of the play for the fashionable summer colony at Long Beach and the National Drama Corporation will turn over the entire proceeds to the fund for aiding needy families of soldiers.

Thomas Dixon decided upon July 24 as the release date for the country-wide distribution of "The Fall of a Nation" and Greater New York and New England exhibitors are booking it rapidly.

F. E. Backer, managing director of the Nation Film Corporation, purchasers of the New Jersey state rights of this film, will show the spectacle in the Ocean Grove Auditorium on August 7 and 8. This will be the first presentation of any of the great current pictures in the Jersey shore resort section.

J. Frank Hatch, proprietor of the J. Frank Hatch Film Company of Newark, N. J., has purchased the Ohio state rights of "The Fall of a Nation." He will at once begin an active campaign for the exploitation of the Dixon-Herbert spectacle in that state and will start operations with runs at first-class prices in Cleveland, Cincinnati, Columbus and Toledo.

The eviction of the tenements in the historical prologue of "The Fall of a Nation," the Dixon-Herbert spectacle.

In response to the requests for direct bookings from scores of exhibitors in Southern California, the National Drama Corporation has established a "Fall of a Nation" film exchange for that territory, with Jordan Dixon of 1401 Northwestern avenue, Los Angeles, in charge. Mr. Dixon was identified with the successful run of the play at Clune's Auditorium.

CHICAGO SHOW GREATEST

George Kleine Believes Just Past National Convention Best Ever Held by Industry—Deplores Overproduction and Business Chaos

George Kleine, during his last regular two weekly visits to Chicago, stated that the just past motion picture exposition was the most successful one ever held. He regards it, too, as much better managed than the affairs in New York this spring. He said:

The film business is in a most chaotic state, and conservative people are just keeping quiet till things shake down a little. This is due, and it is the first time it has happened, to the introduction of outside money into the situation. Before that all of us struggled along, working on the money we made, putting that back into our businesses. Then when Wall street and the public got to pouring money into the picture business, conditions were radically changed and the chaos will last as long as people continue to put up money, which it doesn't hurt companies to lose at all, because it comes too easily.

There is altogether too much overproduction. Novelty is the essence of the motion picture business and there is small chance for novelty with some ten thousand scenarios a year being produced. The picture entertainment is essentially a light thing. It isn't something that father and mother plan for two days before; it is something that people just drop into and want to find entertainment in. It wears me out ot watch most of these current dramatic productions.

But the neighborhood house is a great factor in the life of the people. It reaches them with an intimacy that not even the newspaper achieves. They come to love it, and to know its plays, its stars, and its policy. Why, I see this, even among our friends.

Now, if ever the picture interests do get welded together, if exhibitors become broad minded, intelligent people and producers act wisely, amongst them they can wield the most tremendous power, for they can reach the public as can no other medium.

Mr. Kleine contributed his Harry Watson "Musty Suffer" company for two days to the exposition.

Exhibitors Buy Screens

The Minusa Cine Products Company, manufacturer of the Minusa gold fibre screens, recently has installed its screen in a number of representative theaters. The Real Amusement Company of Colfax has purchased its second Minusa screen, which will be used in its house at Newton, Iowa. An order from the Criterion Theater, Atlanta, Georgia, makes the fifth one placed in that city. Additional orders have been received from Mr. Watts, proprietor of the Vaudette Theater, Springfield, Illinois; George M. Shorey of the Gay Theater, Knoxville, Tennessee; A. F. Meghan, owner of the Rialto Theater, Denver, Colorado; the Vista Theater, Chicago, Illinois; Herman Fitchenburg for his new theater in New Orleans; the Frolic Theater, Jacksonville, Florida; two screens, one 9 x 12 and the other 10 x 14 for Houston, Texas, houses; and the Clinton-Mortimer Corporation of Rochester, N. Y., for their new Picadilly Theater.

Make Public Its Own Censor

MARGUERITE CLARK AND PAULINE FREDERICK IN NEW FILMS

"THE American public does not want immoral pictures, nor is it Puritanical enough to protest against such a theme as 'Carmen.' What the American public does insist upon, however, is that unusual situations be handled artistically and not with any pandering to immorality that might create approval from the few." These are the sentiments of Professor Franklin Henry Giddings, head of the department of Sociology and History of Civilization of Columbia University. Professor Giddings believes the time is approaching when it will not pay to produce immoral pictures. The national conscience has been demanding for some time that the screen be at least as clean as the columns of a well-edited newspaper.

In a campaign for cleaner films the Paramount Company is trying to give the public the best it will accept and to educate it to a desire for better and cleaner pictures. In order to allow the public to be its own censor this company has arranged a system whereby it will receive criticisms from every exhibitor on every production. These criticisms are made out on cards, the exhibitor filling in the rating his audience places on the picture—there being seven ratings—from "paramount" to "inferior." Each rating represents a certain percentage. These blanks are gathered from all parts of the country, the percentage of each play is determined and the Paramount producers base their decision as to the nature of future productions on the results of these criticism blanks.

Variety will be the watchword of the Paramount program for the week of August 7. The Famous Players offer two features to head the list, Marguerite Clark in "Little Lady Eileen," and Pauline Frederick in "A Woman in the Case." The short reel subjects will include the twenty-sixth edition of Paramount Pictographs showing five leading subjects, "Better Babies," showing how to make a bed as it is made in hospitals so that it is physically impossible to kick the sheets out at the bottom; "Living in the Air," depicting the conglomeration of New York's roofs upon which people eat, sleep, dance, drink, raise birds, fish and chickens, farm, play baseball, etc; "Yachting," "Tree Surgery," and "Breaking the Freight Tie-Up."

The Burton Holmes Travel-Picture takes the audience on a trip from Carlsbad to Moravia, starting with scenes in and around the wonderful springs and at Marienbad, the goose farms of Bohemia and the quaint costumes and customs of the Slovaks of Moravia.

Paul Terry contributes "Farmer Alfalfa's Egg-citement" as the Paramount-Bray Animated Cartoon for this week.

Inside of six months the Burton Holmes Travel-Pictures have worked the same revolution in travel-films as Mr. Holmes did in the lecture world some years back. The releases for the next six months promise just as much if not more entertainment than those that have already been issued. The trip from Carlsbad to Moravia will be followed in weekly succession by "In South Tirol, the Italian Corner of Austria;" "Climbing the Austrian Alps," "In Switzerland," "In Southern Italy," "Life on the Island of Capri," "Seeing Naples," "Vesuvius in Eruption," "A Grecian Journey," "The Olympian Games in Athens," "Marathon Day in Greece," "In Modern Egypt," "The Real Streets of Cairo," "Round About the Pyramids," "An Egyptian Round-up," "Up the River Nile," "Luzor and Karnak, or in Ancient Egypt," "On the Nubian Nile," "The Sunny South of England," "Motoring in England or English Town and Country," "Glasgow to Edinboro," "Bonnie Scotland," "A Scotch-Irish Reel" and "In Old Ireland."

For the Christmas and Yuletide holiday weeks Mr. Holmes is preparing special reels of exceptional worth, and importance for that time of the year, the announcements of which will be made shortly.

The Paramount Pictographs also promise some interesting features in the near future. One of these will be horseback riding taught by pictures, under the title, "How to Stay on a Horse's Back." Instructor Harry Weedon will show the right way of holding the lines of the saddle horse when mounting and while riding through the park; how to place and keep the feet in the stirrups and how to train a horse to perform real tricks. Also Mr. Weedon will give some visual demonstrations of riding a bronco on the plains where the only requisite is staying on the horse's back.

In "Speeding Up the Mail" the public will be shown how Uncle Sam handles a letter from the time it is dropped into the special mail chute at the Grand Central Station, New York City, until it is delivered at its ultimate destination. Besides the trip taken by the one letter the picture shows every phase of the Grand Central post office, which is the most complete mail distributing office in the world.

TWO MORE BRADY MADE FILMS

Paragon and Peerless Studios Busy on Productions for September and October Release on the World Program

"A Woman's Way," is the first of the personally supervised William A. Brady world pictures to be made since Mr. Brady became director general of the World Film Corporation. This play was originally produced for the stage by Mr. Brady with Grace George in the leading role.

Assisted by Francis Marion, the World Film scenario editor, who scenarioized the play, Barry O'Neil, who directed it, and Ethel Clayton and Carlyle Blackwell, who played the leading roles, Mr. Brady went over the scenario in exactly the same way as he looked after the direction of the legitimate play. This will be released on the World Film program the first week in August.

Hot weather has been no bar to World activities at the Paragon and Peerless studios the past few weeks. In the Paragon studios Maurice Turner has started a five-reel play, "Mary," in which Robert Warwick takes the leading male role, and Doris Kenyon and June Elvidge have the two leading feminine parts. Frank Crane has returned from the Saranac Lake district and is putting the finishing touches on "The World Against Him," in which Frances Nelson, June Elvidge and E. K. Lincoln have the principal parts.

At the Peerless studios Emile Chautard is completing "The Heart of a Hero," the Nathan Hale story featuring Robert Warwick and Gail Kane, and has started work on an immense feature production of "Thais," with Kitty Gordon in the tltle role. This will be ready for fall and will probably be released in eight or ten reels.

Harley Knoles is directing Alice Brady, Arthur Ashley and Montagu Love in "Her Majesty"; Robert T. Thornby is directing Carlyle Blackwell in "Little Comrade"; Barry O'Neill has just finished "The Scorching Way," in which Holbrook Blinn, Ethel Clayton, Ed M. Kimball, Irving Cummings and Madge Evans appear; and will start on "The Revolt," with Frances Nelson, Arthur Aspley, Clara Whipple and Madge Evans.

The majority of the stories now being made are for release in September and October, as the August releases are as follows: Ethel Clayton and Carlyle Blackwell in "A Woman's Way," August 7; Mollie King and Arthur Ashley in "The Summer Girl," August 14; House Peters in "B," a railroad story, the title of which may be changed, August 21, and an all-star cast, including Ethel Clayton, Gerda Holmes, Holbrook Blinn, Emmett Corrigan, Montagu are two of the William A. Brady stage successes Love and Dion Titheridge, in "Husband and Wife," which have been filmized under his supervision.

The attractive Gail Kane in World's unusually powerful drama, "Paying the Price."

INTERNATIONAL INFORMATION

Tribute Paid to E. A. MacManus—Quick Work of News Service—Interest Injected Into Fashion Films.

Consternation reigned among the branch managers of the International Film Service when it was learned that E. A. MacManus, general manager of the organization was detained in New York and would be unable to attend the Chicago convention of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League, for they had planned a surprise and tribute to their general manager in the form of a gold watch suitably engraved. The watch was immediately expressed to Mr. MacManus in New York and followed by a telegram expressing their esteem and their determination to further support him in promoting the International interests.

The telegram was signed by J. F. Bowman, Chicago; Jos. S. Engel, New York; F. H. Vine, Boston; G. H. Atwood, Los Angeles; B. F. Lyon, Pittsburgh; H. L. Knappen, San Francisco; G. R. Allison, Atlanta; F. B. Wathne, Washington (D. C.); E. W. Dustin, St. Louis; E. W. Sweigert, Philadelphia; J. K. Burger, New York.

The remarkable speed of the Hearst International News Pictorial in presenting upon the screen pictures of the Deutschland arriving in Baltimore has placed that news reel on a plane with the daily newspapers as an interpreter of current events. Thirteen hours from the time the submarine was reported entering Hampton Roads the International was showing the pictures upon the screens of leading New York theaters.

The International has found a way of transforming the fashion films, heretofore interesting only to women, into scenes of interest to every patron of the theater.

In "Beauty and the Beast" they have combined the latest word in fashions, a story dear to the heart of young and old, and scenes heretofore denied the public. Permission has been secured from George J. Gould to use Georgian Court, his wonderful estate at Lakewood, N. J., to stage this fairy tale.

Exhibitors Offer Tribute to V-L-S-E

PATRONS SELECT PICTURES UNDER NEW SYSTEM

WITH the newly elected president of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League pledged to the furtherance of the open-booking, no-deposit policies, as fathered and operated by the V. L. S. E.; with the editor of one of the representative trade publications paying tribute to these policies from the platform of the convention, and with the delegates themselves placing a unanimous seal of approval upon them, the business methods of the Big Four organization were accorded a tribute at Chicago such as probably never has been extended to any other feature distributing company. The new president of the association, Lee A. Ochs, stated in his inaugural address that no small part of his time would be given to urging the adoption of the open booking policy among distributors who have not yet put it into operation and that he would oppose with all his energy, the system under the closed contract method of renting films, which compels an exhibitor to keep on deposit with the distributor, a substantial sum of money without interest.

Rose Tapley, Vitagraph leading lady, who was probably the Chicago Exposition's most patient and self-sacrificing entertainer.

The deposit system from the very first day of the convention, was severely scored by delegates all over the country, and the temperament of the meeting was such on this question that it seems certain it will be one of the primary subjects occupying the delegates during the ensuing months.

One of the most indefatigable motion picture stars at the Chicago exposition was Rose Tapley of the Vitagraph Company, who was the official hostess of that company. Every day from eleven in the morning until eleven at night she appeared in its booth and greeted the exhibitors and the public and answered their questions regarding the workings of a moving picture studio. Tireless efforts and indefatigable energy are nothing new to Miss Tapley. During every week of the year she writes three signed articles for the Vitagraph news service. Each day of the year she answers from 25 to 50 personal letters of "fans," who seem to have the idea that a screen star is a cross between a charitable institution and a fairy godmother. In these letters she discusses the daily problems and worries of scores.

The Kitchen Taxation Bill will be the first activity to which the National Association of the motion picture industry will give its attention. This bill providing for a tax of one-half of one per cent of the gross receipts of all motion picture houses has already passed the House of Representatives and is now under consideration in the Senate. A telegram was sent to Hon. S. M. Simmons, chairman of the Finance Committee of the United States Senate, demanding that a hearing be granted. It is probable that a hearing will be granted and in addition to Messrs. Ochs, Brady and Irwin it is not unlikely that others representing the new federation will attend the hearing on the bill.

The Photoplay Review, published in London, states that "Sherlock Holmes," the seven-part Essanay photodrama, released through the V. L. S. E. has broken all records abroad. The film has already received the greatest advanced bookings ever accorded an American film and bids fair to even outdo the records set by the spoken drama.

A new departure in line with its open booking policy, in which patrons of respective theaters select the pictures shown by its manager has just been installed by the V. L. S. E. Slides have been distributed to exhibitors announcing that the theater's patrons are now authorized to select their films and that the members of each community can now act as their own censors. Another slide announces that the theater has an opportunity to secure larger productions at prices above those now being charged allowing the patrons to sanction or condemn this action.

Henry B. Walthall, the Essanay star, has been invited to be one of the speakers in a series of lectures before the students of the Indiana State Normal School at Terre Haute. The lectures are to be given by leading men in each profession and Mr. Walthall was chosen as an actor.

Saturday was profit sharing day for the employes of V-L-S-E, Inc., and every member of the organization who had been an employe thereof for the past 13 weeks, from porter to manager, received a very substantial check.

This is in accordance with the custom established by this concern nine months ago, which permits every employe to receive a certain proportion of the money made. Business has been so good that the profit sharing checks for the period just ended was 79.6 per cent higher than that of the preceding period.

Two Important Rumors

Rumors are always as interesting as they are unreliable. Two of the latest of these deceptive will-o'-the-wisps are that Vitagraph will soon release its short productions on the Paramount program, and that the American Tobacco Company is very, very secretly attempting to purchase the Strand Theater of New York, at Broadway and Forty-seventh street. A matter of $500,000, it is said, stands between the price offered and the price desired by the Mitchell Mark Realty Company for the big-paying house. Neither of the above reports have, of course, been officially confirmed. They are, however, current stories in the Metropolitan newspapers.

Helene Rosson is again being featured in American "Mustang" productions.
